The following questions may be asked. Is it not sufficient to draw a firm line between ourselves and the fascist terrorists? Would it not be right to only do this in order to (?criticize) the youths who are dragged into leftist terrorism? Is stressing the delineation of the line between ourselves and leftist terrorism not tantamount to regression in the face of the junta's barbaric measures against these groups? No, comrades. It would have been wrong if communists did not oppose all types of barbarism and torture, regardless of their object. If, however, communists had swerved from their duty to silence the terrorism accusation of the enemy at the expense of the communists' principled positions, then this would go beyond making an error and (?compromise) the interests of the class struggle. The masses (?may temporarily be able) to withstand the bloody massacres perpetrated against terrorist groups, but the real danger is that of decreasing of the masses' awareness through anticommunist poison.

The problem is as follows: Our attitude toward terrorism is not only the result of our positions or principle; it has become the condition necessary to enlighten the millions of toilers. The party approach is clear. A person who forgets this duty cannot escape being the indirect tool of the sovereign forces' aim to mislead the masses. This principled attitude of the communists is also the only correct way to alert the youths who are dragged into terrorism. Through their own experience, these youths can now better understand the TCP's firm opposition to terrorism in the past.

The TCP views the terrorists as the victims of the current capitalist order based on injustice, exploitation and pressure. We, the communists, declare that we are not struggling against the terrorists, who pay bitterly for their bloody actions, but against terrorism. We speak to them in this manner despite the fact that before 12 September, many of our party members were killed by extreme leftist or deviationist terrorist groups as well as by fascists. The TCP has no admiration, such as is the case with the petite bourgeoisie, for the so-called armed actions of the leftist terrorist groups; nor does it cower in its struggle against terrorism in the face of the sad end met by these groups. Ours is not a party that observes the struggle from the outside. Our comrades were killed by terrorists during May day demonstrations. It is again our comrades who are now being tortured to death or crippled in the dungeons of the reactionary military dictatorship. Our party has a militant tradition sufficiently glorious to create joy throughout the working class. The party of the likes of Mustafa Suphi calls on the youth to totally abandon the terrorist organizations and pursue the struggle path of the proletariat.

COMMENTS ON U.S.-USSR AGREEMENT TO START TALKS

Schmidt: Great Success

[Text] Wiesbaden, 25 Sep (DPA)--The U.S.-Soviet agreement to start negotiations on the limitation of nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe has been greeted with relief by Chancellor Schmidt. After an exchange of views with the SPD Parliamentary Group in Hesse, Schmidt told journalists in Wiesbaden: "We do not want to hide our light under a bushel with regard to this meeting taking place." It is "a great success for German diplomacy and for Genscher and Schmidt" that the two leading world powers intend to sit down together at a conference table in Geneva in November. The Federal Government will "actively follow" the negotiations. This does not mean that it will take part in them but it is ready if it needs to be consulted.

The chancellor recalled that he has tried since the middle 1970's to get the SALT negotiations going and that after the ratification of SALT II [as received] he criticized the its omission of medium-range missiles. In talks with both the Americans and the Russians he again and again "hammered this point home."

Asked whether the agreement between the United States and the USSR to negotiate could also strengthen his own position in the SPD, Schmidt said: "What matters is not my position in the party, but whether it helps Europe and Germany."

Genscher Urges Speedy Progress

[Text] Bonn, 26 Sep (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher appealed to the United States and the Soviet Union for speedy progress at the agreed negotiations on arms control concerning medium-range nuclear missiles. In view of the planned stationing of the new American missiles in Europe at the end of 1983, there is really no time to be lost, Genscher stressed in an interview with North German Radio. The Federal Government's policy will contribute to creating a European climate which will make businesslike talks possible.

"All steps must be taken to prevent a further deterioration of the international climate," Genscher said. In the ideal case, the Soviet Union would completely set aside its advantage in the field of medium-range missiles. In such a case, the Federal Government would say with special emphasis that now the Western counterarming would not have to take place at all.

The fact that, in contrast with the SALT negotiations on intercontinental strategic weapons, the Europeans are involved in an accompanying-participating capacity in the disarmament negotiations on medium-range missiles, is seen by Genscher as proof that the United States is aware that Europe, as an equal allied partner, has a fundamental interest in expressing its own ideas and thus European interests. This is a necessary basis for an effective alliance between equal states. "We never viewed NATO other than in this light," Genscher said. "We are very happy that this view is taken on both sides of the Atlantic."

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Commentary signed G.N.: "Preparatory Talks"]

[Text] The statement that Washington and Moscow will begin official negotiations on medium-range missiles in Europe on 30 November is not surprising.

Both big powers have been involved in unofficial disarmament talks for quite some time. The failure of SALT II does not mean that things have come to an end. What looked like a defeat for the Carter administration in the Senate was actually failure of Soviet diplomacy--it had achieved too much in talks with the American negotiators and had given too little.

Negotiations will be difficult particularly because no agreement exists on the topics and aims of the negotiations. "Balance" is the Western demand, while that of the Soviet Union is "uncurtailed security," which means maintaining and increasing its superiority. That can be seen not only from the constant development of its medium-range weapons potential, but also by the demand to include the less far-reaching "forward-based systems" of the Americans in Europe in the negotiations (most of all fighter-bombers). These weapons, however, are intended to counter the conventional superiority of the Soviet Union. Soviet disarmament policy has the same aims as Soviet armament policy--to establish superiority.

Two details catch one's eye regarding the New York communique. One is the veiled announcement that negotiations will take place soon on intercontinental weapons as well. This means actually that preparatory talks are already underway. But the terms "SALT" or "strategic" nuclear arms have been avoided. If we read this correctly, it means that Washington has distanced itself from the Soviet interpretation that all arms able to hit the Soviet Union are "strategic" arms, while all those unable to hit America are not. Or that those nuclear weapons deployed in West Europe and able to reach the Soviet Union should carry much more political weight than Soviet nuclear arms able to hit only West Europeans. Washington does not permit this arbitrary differentiation between Soviet and European security. In doing this, it once again links American security with that of West Europe. Will this impress those people in the Federal Republic who are foolish or malicious enough to say that America is preparing for nuclear war limited to Europe?

POLITICIAN REPORTS BEGIN WANTS TO NORMALIZE TIES

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Sep (DPA)--Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin is "very interested" in normalizing relations with Bonn, which have been clouded since the spring.

After talks with Begin in Israel, the chairman of the German-Israel Society, Hamburg CDU politician Eric Blumenfeld, informed Chancellor Schmidt on Wednesday about the desire for better relations.

TERRORISTS IDENTIFIED IN ATTACK ON KROESEN

[Text] Hamburg, 26 Sep (DPA)--Two of the most wanted German terrorist suspects, Brigitte Mohnhaupt and Christian Klar, have been identified as being involved in the Heidelberg attack on Frederick J. Kroesen, commander in chief of the U.S. Army in Europe. Reports in BILD AM SONNTAG and in the new issue of the news magazine SPIEGEL claims that their fingerprints were found on various objects near the scene of the attack. According to BILD AM SONNTAG, authorities assume that Brigitte Mohnhaupt as the new head of the Red Army now controls the campaigns from France. SPIEGEL reports that there are reliable indications that Klar was also involved in the bomb attack on the U.S. headquarters in Ramstein. A CID spokesman said such speculations are nothing new. The office of the federal attorney refused to comment.

PAPER REPORTS DECISION TO EXCHANGE CONVICTED SPY

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Sep (DPA)--According to a report in BERLINER MORGENPOST, the decision to exchange the spy Guenter Guillaume was made in strict secrecy. The paper reports that Federal President Karl Carstens, after consultations with the Federal Government and a talk with Federal Attorney Kurt Rebmann, signed in Bonn today the pardon for the former assistant of former Chancellor Willy Brandt sentenced in 1975 to 13 years imprisonment for treason. No confirmation could be had in Bonn tonight either for the pardon or the impending exchange. The federal president's office neither confirmed nor denied the report. A Federal Government spokesman said that the government did not involve itself in public speculation.

INTRA-GERMAN COMMISSION DISCUSSES COMPENSATION

[Text] Potsdam, 24 Sep (DPA)--At the 2-day session of the joint intra-German Frontier Commission in Potsdam, the FRG delegation raised for the first time the question of compensation claims against the GDR. They mainly concern private claims relating to damage in the frontier region of the Federal Republic caused by the GDR and which amount to almost DM1 million. The head of the FRG delegation, Irmgard von Rottenburg, stated in Potsdam today that the GDR representatives objected on the grounds that these questions ought to be dealt with through the permanent missions and not by the Frontier Commission.

So far, the GDR has made no payments for damage, which mainly consists of damage to the environment. The first claim for damages lodged by the Federal Republic followed the death of a large number of fish in the Leine in 1974. This claim was for DM145,000. Frau von Rottenburg explained that the Federal German delegation regarded the competence of the Frontier Commission for such matters as deriving from a 1978 protocol which also contained basic principles for preventing damage.

Other topics discussed at this 57th session of the Frontier Commission included preparatory work for next year's program for the maintenance of frontier waters. Scientific papers on flood protection on the Elbe were also handed to the GDR. Basic agreement was reached on the diversion of flood waters from the Lower Saxony area into the Mittellan canal and a protocol note was made on question of frontier marking in connection with the construction of the Hamburg-Berlin highway.

The next session of the Frontier Commission will be held 1-2 December in Regensburg. The Federal Republic's delegation in the Frontier Commission includes representatives of the Federal Government and of the four federal laender bordering the GDR.

PRESIDENT HOLDS MEETINGS, LEAVES FOR SAUDI ARABIA

Conversation With Shimon Peres

LD251524 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Text] Francois Mitterrand and Shimon Peres held a surprise private meeting. The president had a conversation with the leader of the Israeli Labor Party after a luncheon organized at the Elysee in honor of the presidium of the Socialist International. This meeting took place just before the French head of state's forthcoming departure for Saudi Arabia. It was devoted mainly to the situation in the Middle East and the prospects for a solution of the conflict.

[Text] Chadli Klibi, secretary general of the Arab League, states that Francois Mitterrand might contribute in a very positive manner to unlocking the problem of the Middle East. He met the French president for an hour this morning. He stressed that the meeting was of particular importance on the eve of the journey that the French head of state is to make to Saudi Arabia.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON HAIG, GROMYKO UN SPEECHES

["N.B." dispatch: "Mr Haig and General Gromyko...."]

[Text] New York -- Just a few minutes before his speech to the UN assembly on 23 September, External Relations Minister Cheysson gave a press conference in which he stressed the need to make rapid progress on the Namibia affair but asserted that any personal initiative by one of the five "contact group" members (France, United States, Britain, FRG, Canada) would be harmful to a settlement. Cheysson, who was to meet with the foreign ministers of the five countries in the group this Thursday, thinks, however, that the drafting of a "timetable" for Namibia's independence would be a major step forward.

Questioned several times on the French-Mexican communique on El Salvador (the Venezuelan president and Argentine foreign minister referred to it in rather unfavorable terms in their speeches to the General Assembly), the French minister admitted that it is an "unusual document," but, he added, "how can we be accused of encouraging the increase of violence in that country when it is precisely that violence that we condemn?" He then stated that it is not France's intention to intervene in a region to which it does not belong, unless it is asked to do so by a state in that region or by the United Nations.

Cheysson repeated this formula with regard to Lebanon when he was asked whether Paris intended to take an initiative. "But," the minister added, "it is absolutely essential to find a solution or at least to try to improve the situation which has become intolerable. The changes which I found there after 10 months are frightening. Lebanon has virtually disappeared as a nation and a state."

Questioned on Paris' relations with the PLO, Cheysson stated that the PLO should certainly take part in a settlement. "A lasting peace has never been established by ignoring the rights of peoples," he said, "but we have never recognized the PLO as the Palestinians' sole representative."

With regard to the speeches made by General Haig and Mr Gromyko at the United Nations, Cheysson said sardonically: "It would be more appropriate to talk of General Gromyko and Mr Haig." He said that the Soviet minister had, in fact, replied to the equally tough speech delivered recently by Haig in Berlin. "If the Soviet reply had not been made in the United Nations," he said, "it would have been made elsewhere." It is not so much Gromyko's tone which worries me," Cheysson continued, "as the facts he is describing: Afghanistan, the arms race, the change in the balance of forces in Europe." In the French minister's view, Haig's speech, some points of which he disputes, dealt better with the most urgent problems: North-South relations, which, in his view, take priority over East-West relations.

Meets With Gromyko

[Text] United Nations, 25 Sep (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson met with Andrey Gromyko, his Soviet counterpart, today over a working lunch, it was learned here.

It was the first high-level meeting between representatives of the two countries since Socialist Francois Mitterrand took over the French presidency four months ago.

According to French sources, the two ministers intended to review the international situation and bilateral relations.

The sources said that in the past, Mr Cheysson declared on several occasions that relations between the two countries would return to normal only after the USSR withdrew its forces from Afghanistan.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS TURKISH CONSULATE SEIZURE

[Text] Paris, 25 Sep (AFP)--France today strongly condemned the seizure of more than 50 hostages at the Turkish Consulate here yesterday and vowed to try those responsible for the attack in French courts.

"As painful as the historic events invoked by the authors of this act might be, it constitutes an inadmissible attack on elementary human rights and is all the more intolerable since once again, Turkish diplomats posted in France were affected," a French Government communique said. The statement added that the government would "not tolerate the development" of terrorism in France.

In yesterday's action, a four-man Armenian commando shot their way into the Turkish mission and held the hostages for 15 hours before surrendering to police. A Turkish guard was killed, a vice consul was seriously injured and two commandos were wounded in the ordeal. Responsibility for the attack was claimed by the Armenian Secret Liberation Army, which has killed four Turkish diplomats here since 1975.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL URGES END TO ARMS RACE

[Text] Paris, 25 Sep (AFP)--The Socialist International today made an urgent appeal for a halt to the nuclear arms race and an immediate accord to ban biological and chemical weapons.

Winding up two days of meetings here, the Socialist International Executive also opposed production of the neutron bomb and backed proposals for so-called "denuclearized" zones, particularly in the Pacific and northern Europe.

It said in a resolution that the United States and Soviet Union should begin negotiations on strategic nuclear arms "as soon as possible" and said moves to resume talks on European theater weapons were "encouraging."

The text called for a reduction and "eventually" elimination of nuclear forces in Europe "on both sides;" the Socialist International also said that agreement must be reached "without delay" to bar bacteriological and chemical weapons in order to avoid a new arms race.

On another matter, the international declared its total support for the move by France and Mexico to recognize left-wing rebels in El Salvador as a legitimate political force.

The organization condemned the United States for granting massive military assistance to the right-wing junta President Napolean Duarte that rules the Central American country. It affirmed its backing of the national revolutionary movement in El Salvador and called for a negotiated political solution to the problems in the violence-wracked nation leading to democratic elections.

MARCHAIS DISCUSSES PCF DOMESTIC, FOREIGN STANCES

[Michel Naudy and Bernard Frederick report on Europe 1 Press Club interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais on 20 September]

[Excerpt] PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais was the guest on the Europe 1 Press Club yesterday. He began by answering questions on the Central Committee meeting on 17 and 18 September and then answered numerous questions on the government's action, the communists' participation, national defense and so forth.

Georges Marchais was first asked why the last Central Committee meeting report was not published. Since the journalist drew a parallel with the nonpublication of the report submitted in 1972 after the signing of the joint program, the PCF secretary general recalled that at that time the decision was one of "political timing." There were, he said, only a few days to go before the national conference which was to debate the joint program and during which the broad outlines of the unpublished report were to be explained. Subsequently, Georges Marchais explained, we felt that it ought to have been published "for the sake of clarity."

This time it is an entirely different case, Georges Marchais stated: A commission has been appointed within the Central Committee to draw up a document which will be submitted for discussion by the whole party before the 24th congress. At the last Central Committee session, the commission explained the progress on its work. This work is not finished. It is being continued taking account of the discussion which took place on 17 and 18 September. A new Central Committee meeting is scheduled for 8 and 9 October. After that meeting the draft 24th congress report will be published.

Questioned on his reply to a Canadian journalist about possible changes in the PCF leadership, Georges Marchais explained: "I replied that I could not say what would happen. Indeed, our party is the only one in which the leaders are elected at the congress by secret ballot. Since the journalist asked me whether I will stand as candidate, I said yes."

The debate then turned to the PCF's role in the left's victory and the Communists' policy. The secretary general pointed out that throughout the presidential election campaign he had presented himself as the "anti-Giscard candidate" and that the right had constantly said that the PCF "did not want to defeat Giscard, did not want to enter government in a crisis period."

"We wanted to defeat Giscard," Georges Machais said, "and we did defeat him; now we are taking part in the government."

Going back to the 1977-81 period, the secretary general recalled that the Communists had waged "a campaign to explain both the necessary conditions for defeating Giscard and bringing about change and on the conditions for unity."

"We think," he added, "that that campaign was positive."

With regard to the PCF's assessment of the government's action, Georges Marchais indicated that we are not saying "yes, but." "In the new majority," he said, "we are not working as the old majority worked." He explained that the Communists are making proposals at all levels and playing a constructive part in implementing the new policy without being "yes men." "We are loyal and committed members of the majority, we have joined the government without reservations in order to succeed and not for a limited period."

Compared with those who "do not accept this policy, the nationalizations, the wealth tax and so forth," the secretary general continued, "we are a serious and responsible party."

He recalled that there was a "gap" between the proposals which he had put forward during the election campaign and those for which the majority of the country had opted. "It can happen," he said, "that a party makes proposals which are not accepted and that experience shows ought to have been taken into account.'

The reforms for which the French have opted, he said, "are less that the ones which we advocated and we think that that makes it more difficult to steer the country out of the crisis."

Questioned on the prospects for an increase in the Communists' electoral influence, Georges Marchais mentioned the analysis which the June Central Committee meeting made, stating that it would be taken further at the forthcoming congress.

There are, he said, two reasons for this loss of ground: "We think that we failed to give the appropriate answer to the question: What kind of socialist society should France have? We also applied to the union methods which had been positive (1936, the liberation) but which were no longer suited to the needs of the struggle.

On these questions, Georges Marchais indicated, the party "will make a detailed analysis which will relate to several decades of our own political practice." The 22d and 23d congresses "began to answer those questions," Georges Marchais added, "but that did not make good the delay." "We think that the change must succeed," Georges Marchais said, "and it is in the framework of this change that the PCF will regain lost ground." "We do not want to be strengthened by a failure," he concluded.

After recalling that the Communists' entry into the government had been rendered possible partly because they had contributed to defeating Giscard and partly because there were many areas of agreement between the Communists' and Socialists' proposals, the secretary general said that "the process started (by the government) is a step in the right direction."

Turning to foreign policy questions, the journalists then questioned him on the Polish situation.

On this subject, Georges Marchais said that he had "nothing to withdraw or add to the remarks (which he) made 1 year ago. There are political, economic and democratic questions which the Poles must solve," he stated.

Asked about his opinion of Pierre Mauroy, the PCF secretary general stated: My assessment of the premier is connected with my assessment of his policy. Unlike one weekly, which claims to be leftwing, I thought his recent speech to the National Assembly was good."

He began by saying: "We are against the arms race, we are in favor of the balance of forces, but a balance at a lower level. While awaiting their dissolution, which remains our objective, there must be negotiations between the two blocs to assess the balance of forces and take deescalation measures."

With regard to the neutron bomb, Georges Marchais reaffirmed the communists' hostility to its construction which would constitute another step in the arms race. At this point, he recalled that he had "expressed to the National Assembly the hope that, in view of the international situation, which is deteriorating owing to President Reagan's decisions, the government might take initiatives to promote disarmament, especially since important events are taking place -- in the FRG, the Netherlands, the Nordic countries and the United States itself, where large crowds of people are opposing the arms race." Georges Marchais asked people to think about the 800 million human beings who are starving in the world, the dangers of a return to the cold war and the resulting doubt cast on economic, scientific and cultural relations among nations.

With regard to the FRG, he expressed his indignation at the terrorists," since "for the first time since the 1930's large crowds of people and young people in that country are struggling against nuclear arms."

Rejecting the theory of an imbalance of forces in Europe and recalling that Charles Hernu himself had rejected it, Georges Marchais said he thought it was easier to agree on the medium-range missiles than on the SALT II negotiations. "There must be negotiations," he concluded on this question.

Finally, the PCF secretary general indicated that the left's present cohesion "does not depend on some force outside France" and in reply to a question on the Communists' "demands" regarding management posts in the future nationalized enterprises, he specified that "since we are committed and loyal members of the majority there is no reason to discriminate against us."

LEGISLATION ON DEEP SEA RESOURCES PLANNED

[Yvonne Rebeyrol report]

[Excerpts] French law on the exploration and exploitation of deep sea mineral resources may be termed "conservationist." Like the Barre government, the Mauroy government wants to give France national legislation on deep sea mineral resources (essentially polymetallic nodules) making it possible to retain the eventual rights of the French prospectors and industrialists in the AFERNOD (French Association for the Study of and Research Into Polymetallic Nodules) consortium over the potential sites identified by them from 1970 through the end of 1980 in a sector of the east Pacific covering an area of 450,000 square km. AFERNOD combines the National Center for Ocean Exploitation, the Atomic Energy Commissariat, the Bureau of Geological and Mining Exploration, the Nickel Company and the France-Dunkerque shipyards.

At his 16 September news conference after the Council of Ministers session, Louis Le Pensec, minister of the sea, explained that the National Assembly and the Senate would examine the draft law as soon as possible. AFERNOD has already submitted a request for an exploration permit. France must thus be able to discuss on equal terms from 1 January 1982, as planned, with the United States, the FRG and Britain, to avoid any litigation resulting from eventual overlapping of permits requested and so that the other four international consortiums cannot benefit from earlier rights prejudicial to AFERNOD.

FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS COLLEAGUES IN NEW YORK

Confers With Gromyko

LD261712 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0600 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Text] [Question] I am talking to you just as you have seen your Soviet colleague Gromyko. I imagine that you talked to Gromyko about the position of our government which you also described in your speech to the General Assembly; in favor of talks but aware of re-establishing a missile balance in Europe which today the Italian Government believes is (?necessary). What has the Soviet reaction been?

[Answer] We found ourselves in agreement on basic ideas, that is to say, on the idea that the equilibrium is the premise for negotiations and that security is the guarantee for peace. On the matter, it seems to me that we have joint views. The problem now is not to circumscribe all this only to negotiations on Euromissiles because we must admit that there are other problems in the field of defense, from strategic weapons to conventional arms. Then there are political problems, the problems in the world which disturb the peace or threaten peace. For example, I think of Kampuchea. Then there is the concern in Europe over the events in Poland. An authentic dialogue must take into account all these matters.

[Question] With reference to your speech to the General Assembly, is it an error to underestimate the European voice? You met, among others, Haig and Gromyko. Do you believe that the two leaders are unaware of Europe's positive contribution?

[Answer] We arrived at this point, we arrived at giving a start to negotiations, at fixing a date. Much is owed to Europe for this. It was the European countries who assumed the responsibility for helping re-establish the equilibrium disturbed by the Soviet SS-20's. We said yes to nuclear modernization but at the same time we said yes to negotiations. We gave a push in that direction.

[Question] The Americans have repeatedly said that any Soviet interference in Poland would render impossible any negotiations. Does the Soviet Union accept negotiations on that basis? Is it right to say under the circumstances that there is greater hope that Poland can solve her problems alone?

[Answer] We are all convinced and I think that the Soviet foreign minister also is convinced of this above all. If a step of such gravity should take place, that is to say an intervention in Poland, then not only negotiations are compromised -- and these negotiations have not yet started -- but also a blow would be dealt to coexistence between East and West, to detente. This would be such a serious matter that everybody should think twice.

Meets Poland's Czyrek

[Text] New York, 25 Sep (ANSA) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo reiterated here today that his government viewed events in Poland to be a strictly internal affair and warned his Polish counterpart Jozef Czyrek that any moves to muffle the "dialectic" process would have serious repercussions on the international scene.

After hearing Czyrek's account of Poland's "catastrophic" economy, Colombo told him that the Rome government would continue to consider events in that country to be part of "an internal process" whose "autonomous unfolding" had to be respected.

He stressed that an internal crackdown on that process or any external intervention aimed at stifling the dialogue would seriously upset the world's precarious equilibrium.

Czyrek made no explicit mention of international complications, like the hostile reaction of other Warsaw Pact communist parties to the Polish experiment, in his account to Colombo. But he managed to get the message across that any "excesses" in Polish developments could have "irreparable" effects on the situation.

Drawing a grim picture of the Polish economy, Czyrek pointed out that coal production and exportation were virtually at a standstill, the state coffers were empty and the factories were idle for a lack of raw material -- an infernal vicious circle which has brought the country on the brink of bankruptcy.

The Polish foreign minister thanked Colombo for the help that Italy with its West European partners, was giving his country in the form of food and financial aid. Colombo assured him that the Rome government will continue to do its part to help Poland through its economic troubles.

Events in Poland also came up in the talks Colombo had here today with his Romanian counterpart Stefan Andrei. But the major topic of that conversation, however, was the prospects for success in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) when it resumes its session in Madrid shortly.

The Italian diplomatic chief also had a series of meetings in New York between Thursday and Friday devoted to preparations for the forthcoming conference, promoted by the Rome government, to decide on moves to aid the Third World's poorest countries. He conferred with Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr and Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda, with whom he also discussed recent developments in Central America, El Salvador in particular.

In other encounters, Colombo discussed problems of world hunger with the director-general of the World Food Council and the executive chief of the United Nations Development Program. Colomba was conferring in New York this evening with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, with whom he last met in Moscow ten months ago.

More on Meetings

[Text] New York, 26 Sep (ANSA) -- The Soviet diplomatic chief went on to reaffirm that his country is willing to withdraw its troops from neighboring Afghanistan on condition that outside interference by Pakistan and Iran be brought to a halt.

The core issue, however, not referred to by Gromyko is that the present Kabul government is not likely to facilitate a process of self-determiantion for the Afghan people. None of the projects for a settlement of the problem of Afghanistan, including the one formulated by the European Economic Community, addresses itself to this key matter.

In response to a warning voiced by the Italian foreign minister to the effect that any outside interference in Poland or acts of repression in that country would substantially modify East-West relations and compromise the revival of this dialogue, the Soviet minister said, "We are concerned that there be no change as regards to socialists nature of the Polish regime."

With reference to interference in Poland's internal affairs, Colombo said he did not feel that economic assistance could be described as interference. "We have given them (this aid) and we will continue to give it to them with respect for the process underway," the Italian minister said, and quickly added, "there are countries which tend to interfere," a statement which drew no response from the Soviet diplomat.

On another issue discussed by Colombo and Gromyko, the European Conference on Security and Cooperation, the Italian minister asked his colleague to work toward a successful conclusion of the Madrid Conference before the end of the year.

Return to Rome

[Text] Foreign Minister Colombo has returned to Rome from New York. He pointed out that the Gromyko-Haig meeting marked the first resumption of East-West negotiations and the decision to start the negotiations on Euromissiles on 30 November. Colombo also affirmed that Italy and Germany carried out a decisive role within the orbit of the Atlantic alliance.

BERLINGUER: COUNTRY BECOMING KEY DRUG CENTER

[Text] Rome, 25 Sep (ANSA) -- Italian Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer has warned that Italy is becoming one of the key centers for the distribution, transit and even the production of drugs in Europe. In a statement released to the "NEW SOCIETY" weekly, the head of the Western world's largest communist party said that the ties that exist between organized crime and certain sectors of the banking and political world must be broken. In the interview, which will be published in the weekly tomorrow but sections of which were printed in the "REPUBBLICA" daily today, Berlinguer said that the centers and channels for the consumption and selling of drugs must be identified so that "this scourge" can be wiped out. The drug problem in Italy has been the cause of disputes within the Communist Party itself. One party member, Piera Patti, founded a national antidrug league which calls for compulsory treatment for addicts. Drugs caused 208 deaths in Italy last year. Official figures put the number of addicts in this country at 68,000 but informed sources say that 150,000 is a more realistic estimate.

NAPOLITANO SCOLDS PRESS OVER PCI 'DISPUTE'

[Excerpt] Rome, 26 Sep (ANSA) -- Italian Communist Party (PCI) official Giorgio Napolitano took the press to task for flaunting his supposed dispute with the PCI leadership without bothering to explain the terms of the political debate going on inside the party in an article due for publication soon in a nation wide weekly magazine. Napolitano, who has been tapped by his party as the replacement for the late PCI lower house floor whip Fernando di Giulio, charged the media of "raving about dissent and personal disputes" in the party while neglecting to give a clear account of the issues at stake. The press has given a lot of publicity lately to what it has detected in some of Napolitano's recent statements as a proposal to tighten the PCI's ties with the Italian Socialist Party (PSI), portraying the move as a challenge to PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer's political leadership of the party.

LA REPUBBLICA Interview

[Giovanni Valentini interview with PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano in Turin on 17 September]

[Excerpt] Turin, 17 Sep -- [Question] Following Berlinguer's visit to Belgrade, further visits by the communist secretary to France and perhaps Cuba have already been announced. Is a revival of your international commitment underway? What are its objectives?

[Answer] Our main motive is concern at the deterioration in the international situation. It is necessary to make every effort to contribute to an initiative either by Europe or the nonaligned countries capable of encouraging negotiation, detente and disarmament.

[Question] Nonetheless, some people see Berlinguer's trip to Paris as an attempt to supplant Craxi's PSI and to skirt the difficulties of relations with the Italian Socialists.

[Answer] Reports on Berlinguer's possible trip to France are inaccurate and premature. However, we have been developing relations with the socialist parties in Europe or with the socialist group in the European Parliament for many years. And we have been doing so irrespective of the ups and downs in our relations with the PSI. However, I do believe that a renewed commitment on European questions -- not supplanting the PSI in any way but seeking contacts with all socialist and social democratic parties -- could contribute to a richer and more constructive dialogue within the Italian left.

[Answer] In the debate, we agreed that differences cannot be hidden or glossed over. This is true of relations between communist and socialist parties at European level and in each individual country, especially Italy. It is undeniable that the analyses and outlooks of the PCI and PSI have diverged in various respects: The importance which should be attached to institutional, political and moral reform; the need for a limited and ambiguous "alternative" or a substantial alternative to governments centered on the DC. These problems cannot be avoided. However, we should try to start from specific aspects of some major international policy problems to see whether there are possibilities for fruitful areas of agreement.

[Question] But isn't the present nature of relations between communists and socialists in Italy, which is full of conflict, likely to cause a break like the one which came about in France before Mitterrand's victory? Isn't there a risk, as many people claim, of "entrenchment" and rigidity on the PCI's part?

[Answer] The danger lies in the tensions which are bound to increase when the PSI one day adopts the theory of balanced councils, which excludes us from the Liguria or Latium regions; when, on another occasion, the very existence of the problem of anticommunist prejudice is denied and when on yet another occasion there are polemics at least on the advisability of the speaker of the house remaining a PCI member. Obviously, tensions ease when decisions like the one in Rome, whose importance I would like to stress, are made together. However, our party is committed to further development, in the most diverse spheres, of its original positions which are a far cry from any dogmatic or narrow class rigidity.

[Question] In short, don't you fear that the PCI ultimately runs the risk of suffering the fate of the PCF, reduced to a subordinate position with regard to the socialist party?

[Answer] I would not like to express any hasty opinions on the stormy course of the PCF and leftwing union in France. Here we communists are strongly established in a broad leftwing social, cultural and electoral area and we do not think that the PSI can contemplate especially not by moving -- as it seems to wish to do -- toward a more organic alliance with the DC and toward positions further removed from truly leftwing positions. Nobody must imagine that we can be reduced to a subordinate position. It would be different if the PSI, positively developing its autonomy and initiative but without rejecting the need for broad cooperation among all the leftwing forces, were to aim to win the agreement of a section of the voters who are tending to move away from the DC because of that party's obvious deterioration.

PCP'S CUNHAL ON OPPOSITION TO BALSEMAO GOVERNMENT

LD262232 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Interview with PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal in Lisbon 26 September -- passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Excerpts] The PCP Central Committee has been meeting in Lisbon to consider the national political situation. At a news conference this afternoon Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal summed up the proceedings. In the PCP leader's view, the present government has lost all its democratic legitimacy and on these grounds he demanded the government's resignation and the holding of early elections. Cunhal also stressed the dangers that might befall the democratic regime if a pact were established between the PS [Socialist Party] and the AD [Democratic Alliance] for the purpose of revising the constitution and for contesting local elections:

"The Communist Party Central Committee has emphasized that the crisis in the AD and in the Pinto Balsemao government that led to its resignation -- a crisis that was basically the result of the failure of the AD's policies and of the struggle of the working class and popular masses -- would have fully justified the withdrawal of the AD from the government, thus leaving the way open to a democratic alternative. The formation of the new government has been a grave mistake in which are evident the insistence of the PS secretary general, Mario Soares, on a new AD cabinet being set up, and a probably incorrect assessment of the threats posed to democracy by the chosen solution, especially at a time when the constitution is due for a revision.

"The Central Committee has concluded that the new AD government, by continuing along what are essentially the same policy lines of its predecessor, will worsen even further [words indistinct] the country's economic situation and the people's living standards. The Central Committee has further concluded that the new AD government has reactivated the AD's subversive and putschist plans for liquidation of the democratic regime. These plans are now hinging on a military conspiracy through the appointment of Deputy Prime Minister Freitas do Amaral as minister of defense and on the unconstitutional revision of the constitution."

Alvaro Cunhal further stated that there is great receptivity in the PS to the idea of a joint effort with the PCP in the defense of the ideals of 25 April. To this end, the PCP Central Committee has decided to propose to the PS and to independent democrats the establishment of a platform based on five points ranging from revision of the constitution to local government elections. Considering that joint action by all democrats is a national imperative, the Central Committee has confirmed the PCP's total willingness to discuss with all the other democratic forces, namely with the PS and independent democrats, all the problems related to the political situation, the revision of the constitution and the working out of a democratic alternative.

"On the basis of a common plan, the PCP Central Committee proposes the establishment of a platform based on five essential points: 1) Defense of the constitution and of the democratic regime; 2) defense of the workers' interests and of the people's living standards; 3) resolving the economic crisis and pursuit of the country's development; 4) guaranteeing national independence and dignity; 5) defeat of the AD and the working out of a democratic alternative."

At this meeting the PCP Central Committee ratified the proposal from the party's cell in the Lisbon daily O DIARIO for the expulsion of Julio Pinto from the party. Although describing the question as an internal party affair, Cunhal told reporters: "The Central Committee has examined a decision of the party's journalists' cell in the newspaper O DIARIO for the expulsion of Julio Pinto from the party. The Central Committee has ratified this decision."

PCE'S CARRILLO URGES POLICY OF NEUTRALITY

[Text] According to the organizers, some 70,000 people today attended the closing ceremony of the 1981 PCE festival in the Casa de Campo park in Madrid, which was devoted this year to the subject of NATO. In his closing speech, Secretary General Santiago Carrillo said the question of Spain joining the Alantic alliance is not a leftwing affair nor a rightwing or a center one, but rather a matter concerning the struggle for peace. Carrillo said the spectacle being put on by the Calvo-Sotelo government is a lamentable one both in form and content. He argued that the Union of the Democratic Center is making a distorted interpretation of Article 91 of the constitution in refusing to allow a referendum.

Carrillo also leveled strong criticism at the Basque Nationalist Party and the Convergencia 1 Unio parties which he claimed have abused the votes cast for them since they had sidestepped the issue in their election programs. He claimed that a recent poll has shown that if a referendum were to be held it would produce a rejection of entry.

He concluded with a call for Spain to pursue a policy of neutrality and peace while remaining aloof from military blocs. To this end, he said, we shall use all the means granted to us by the constitution.

SENIOR CUBAN OFFICIAL ASKS SPAIN FOR ASYLUM

FL241238 Santo Domingo Radio Mil Network in Spanish 1000 GMT 24 Sep 81

[Text] Madrid--A senior official of Cuba's Culture Ministry yesterday asked the Spanish Government for political asylum. Dr Cesar Leante took advantage of a stopover made by the aircraft in which he was traveling to ask for asylum. The official expressed disagreement with the socialist regime in the Caribbean island to justify his request for political asylum.

Dr Leante stated that the regime and President Fidel Castro are not right for the Cuban people. Leante recalled that before him, Cuban writer Antonio Gomez requested political asylum in France. We would be surprised if the situation being endured in Cuba is not widely known, the senior official of the Cuban Culture Ministry stated.

ETA REPORTED 'IN READINESS' FOR 27 SEP

[Text] Madrid, 24 Sep (AFP)--Several rightwing Spanish generals no longer on the active list have left Madrid in recent days to avoid possible attempts on their lives by ETA Basque separatist commandos, the independent daily EL PAIS reported today. Among them was former Army Minister Lt.-Gen. Federico Gomez Salazar, the newspaper said.

For the past week Spanish police have been on maximum alert in the expectation of an imminent ETA attack against some senior army officer--a military figure connected either with the extreme right or with anti-terrorist operations.

Interior Ministry sources indicated next Sunday as a likely day for such an attack, it being the anniversary of a 1975 execution by the Franco regime of two ETA militants and three members of the People's Anti-Fascist Revolutionary Front.

In a recent ETA circular which denied that a halt had been called on armed operations, militants were told to hold themselves in readiness for mobilization to commemorate next Sunday.

Following indications from police in France that six exiled ETA leaders who recently left the country for Spain, the Interior Ministry this week issued thousands of wanted posters of the six, with a reward of five million pesetas ($55,000) for information leading to their capture.

Meanwhile, as part of the maximum alert, police helicopters have been patrolling the skies over the capital, while sentry strength on barracks and public buildings has been tripled and reinforcements brought in to police residential quarters with a high population of officers.

MILITARY TRAINING FOR EQUATORIAL GUINEA AGREED

[Text] The inspector general of the National Police, Gen Saenz de Santamaria, arrived in Madrid this evening from Malabo, where he spent 5 days negotiating security matters with the high command of Equatorial Guinea. Before he left the country an agreement was signed by the president to train two Equatorial Guinean companies in Spain, one for the security guard of President Obiang and the other to maintain order in the mainland region, formerly Rio Muni. The agreement also provides for the promulgation of a statute by which Spanish instructors stationed in Equatorial Guinea will have regulation uniforms and weapons while on duty. On the inspector general's arrival at Madrid airport, our man at Barajas, Hector Arenas, asked him:

[Begin recording] [Question] Does this assistance mean the Obiang government is set more securely on the course of democratization and economic development of his country?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] all the difficulties this country has to overcome naturally, and after 13 years it is frankly in a bad way. This is what has to be tackled. One cannot perform miracles and what we have done is give our support for this, to strengthen President Obiang's government so it can develop its program.

[Question] Are there obvious signs of foreign influence in Equatorial Guinea, for example from the Soviet Union, as has been said?

[Answer] What I saw was precisely [word indistinct] our influence. The Soviet Union has withdrawn, and even dismantled the fishing base it had at Luba, and one cannot detect visible signs of Soviet influence.

[Question] Is the Spanish aid plan now being implemented?

(Answer] The Spanish aid plan is not a new one. It involves updating and developing the Spanish-Equatorial Guinean plan already in force. Obviously these plans go through ups and downs and what we are trying to do now is to get over the inactivity. We are starting with security and the defense of Equatorial Guinea and in strengthening the [work indistinct] security. There will then come [word indistinct] new possibility of economic cooperation. [end recording]

FOREIGN MINISTER ENDS U.S. VISIT; VIEWS NATO ENTRY

LD262242 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1750 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Text] The Spanish minister of foreign affairs, Jose Pedro Perez Llorca, concluded his 4-day visit to the United States with a press conference during which he revealed that the Spanish Government's decision to join NATO was taken against the interests of the United States. Perez Llorca's remarks appear to confirm the divergence of views within the Reagan administration on the desirability of Spain joining NATO, since according to some U.S. officials, the most useful thing Spain can offer to the defence of the West are the bases already being used by the United States. The Spanish minister said Spain's entry into NATO will allow a military alliance to be turned into a political alliance, the military application of which will be established through relevant negotiations in which the 16 countries of the organization will take part and will not be left to the unilateral decision of the United States.

STUDY DISCREDITS BREZHNEV ARMS 'CONCESSIONS'

[Editorial: "Nuclear Arms Deceit"]

[Text] After the Foot-Healey act in Moscow, still being gleefully exploited by Russian propaganda, comes chilling reality from the authorities' London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies in its "the Military Balance 1981-82." It gives an alarming picture of the relenting Russian arms expansion in all elements, but particularly in the political crucial one of European medium-range nuclear weapons. It was, of course, particularly with regard to this subject that Mr Brezhnev concentrated his blandishments on Mr Foot and Mr Healey. They accepted as reasonable his statement that the present balance in these weapons is about equal--this is, before [in boldface] the implementation of NATO's 1984-89 cruise-Pershing programme. Yet the IISS, with incontrovertible details of the inventory on both sides, gives Russia a lead over NATO of 3.3:1, even including France's hypothetical contribution as well as Britain's actual commitment. It states that the Warsaw Pact's advantage is continuing to widen as more of the mobile three-warhead SS-20s (up by 70 since last year) and long-range "Backfire" bombers are deployed while NATO's capabilities remain constant. In addition new shorter-range SS-21 and 23 missiles with greatly improved all-round capabilities are being introduced in unknown numbers.

Even if, despite all Mr Brezhnev's efforts, NATO's cruise-Pershing programme is fully implemented by the end of the decade and if he added nothing at all to Russia's present numbers, Russia would still lead by nearly two-to-one in weapons and warheads. Russia's real advantage would be still greater owing to the invulnerability of ballistic missile warheads, of which she would still have a higher ratio than NATO. Can it be that sheer ignorance, however culpable, of the real situation led the Labour Party delegation to jump at Mr Brezhnev's "special offer" to reduce the number of medium-range missiles aimed at Europe (by how much and which kinds?) if NATO totally scrapped [in boldface] the cruise-Pershing programme? As for Mr Foot, the unilateral disarmer, anything is possible. But for Mr Healey, a realist if ever there was one and a long-serving defence minister (1964-70), there is no excuse. He must moreover have been well aware, even if Mr Foot amazingly was not, that Mr Brezhnev's "concession," which they both hailed as a "breakthrough" achieved by their own unaided efforts, was first made as long ago as October 1979 by Mr Brezhnev in a speech in East Berlin. It was rightly ignored by NATO as an attempted diktat.

Nothing if not consistent, Mr Foot and Mr Healey have been blaming "dangerous" Mr Reagan rather than "sincere" Mr Brezhnev for East-West tensions and risks of war, and have eloquently conveyed Mr Brezhnev's fears about NATO's nuclear plans. Yet the conventional balance gives no more encouragement than the nuclear one for either Europe or America excessively to indulge his fears. The IISS points out that, as over the past 20 years, it continues to move in Russia's favour, and that Europe has now largely lost its former technological edge.

Russia's efforts to drive wedges between Europe and America have never been so intense and dangerous as they are now. Everything combines to make the implementation of NATO's missile programme--except to the extent that Russia agrees to an equitable trade-off--the inescapable acid test of NATO's will and continued viability. The formula for negotiations with Russia simultaneously with the production of the weapons on America for deployment in Europe gives Russia enormous disruptive opportunities. The full programme would not nearly restore a balance. Yet, given unity, public support and strong nerves, it would provide an adequate basis for deterrence. Mr Healey at least is as well aware of all this as he is that Mr Brezhnev is exploiting him and Mr Foot for his campaign against European morale. For Mr Healey however everything else is dominated by the no-quarter battle for the deputy leadership of the Labour Party.

All his efforts since his return from Moscow have been carefully calculated in this end. With nicely-balanced equivocation he is trading on his reputation as a loyal NATO man just enough to be able to count on the votes of the right. At the same time, under a smokescreen of meritorious expertise, he is pandering to the semi-pacifist and anti-Reagan line to which the centre, under pressure from the left, has now expediently adapted itself. It is sad that, thus reduced in stature, he has become the best choice left in the Labour Party to the heirs of Bevin and Gaitskell, of whom there must still be a few remaining.

GRENADA'S WHITEMAN MEETS LABOR PARTY OFFICIALS

FL162212 Bridgetown CANA in English 2203 GMT 16 Sep 81

[Text] St Georges, Grenada, 16 Sep (CANA)--Grenada's Minister for Foreign Affairs Unison Whiteman, now on an extended tour of Europe, met yesterday in London with officials of the British Labor Party, according to an announcement on the state owned Radio Free Grenada (RFG). The meeting was with two Labor parliamentarians from the international affairs and Latin American and Caribbean sections of the party, and Whiteman "gave an historical background of the situation existing in Grenada today in the context of the approach of the Reagan administration to the region," the radio said.

The Labor delegation undertook to raise in the British Parliament the question of the Thatcher government's position and the U.S. approach to the region and Grenada in particular, the report said. There was also an undertaking to approach the United States to seek clarity on its position in the Caribbean.

The British trade union movement is to be briefed on Grenada and the Labor Party will seek assistance for Grenada's tourism, the radio said. "The Labor Party officials further promised the party's assistance at meetings of the Socialist International to take place next week in Paris," RFG said.

Whiteman is now in Paris where he is expected to hold bilateral discussions with officials of the ruling Socialist government of Francois Mitterrand. Following the meeting of Socialist International, Whiteman will visit and hold discussions with other socialist governments in Europe.

TERRORISM LINKS SEEN IN ISRAELI OFFICE BOMBING

Arab Suspects Identified

NC251230 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 25 Sep 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] The two Arabs who were arrested in connection with the bloody handgrenade attack against the Shoham offices in Limassol are connected with Abu Nidal, who was sentenced to death by the PLO but fled into Iraq from where he is directing extremist operations worldwide. At least one of the two Arabs arrived directly from Iraq. However, both of them are close associates of the As-Siba'i murderers who are now serving sentences in Nicosia prisons. All of them belong to Abu Nidal's extremist group and are in no way connected with the PLO which is under Yasir 'Arafat's leadership. The PLO yesterday condemned the bomb attack.

Suspects' Statement

[Excerpt] The aim of the bomb attack on the Shoham shipping company as well as other terrorist acts planned by the two Arabs [accused of the act], who are now under police detention, was to blackmail the Cypriot Government into releasing two Jordanian convicts. The two convicts are serving life imprisonment sentences for the assassination of Yusuf as-Siba'i. The above was reported, among other things, in the statements which the two arrested suspects have given to the police.

They both said they belong to the same organization, "Napoutal" [as published, presumably meaning Abu Nidal], which has its headquarters in Baghdad and which had undertaken the assassination of the Egyptian Yusuf as-Siba'i. In their statements, the two suspects also said that, during their stay in Cyprus, they had contacts with a third person who was giving them instructions.

HIJACKED YUGOSLAV PLANE LANDS IN LARNACA

Hostages Escape

[Text] According to information received from Larnaca airport a short while ago, 99 of the 101 passengers of the Yugoslav airliner, which was placed under the control of three hijackers at dawn today and was led to Larnaca, managed to jump from the plane when the doors opened after the emergency signal sounded. During their escape, three passengers--one woman and two men--received slight foot injuries and have been taken to the first aid department of the Larnaca airport. The soccer team of Dubrovnik town, who were flying to Belgrade for a soccer match, were included in the passengers. According some passengers, who talked to our correspondent in Larnaca, the hijacking took place 5 minutes after the plane took off at Dubrovnik airport headed for Belgrade.

The pilot of the plane came out of the cockpit and told the passengers that the plane was under the control of three armed hijackers. The hijackers were armed with two pistols and a knife. According to passengers stories, while the pilot was speaking, the cockpit doors closed and the plane was flown to Athens by the copilot.

The Yugoslav airliner landed at Ellikon Airport at 0200 today and, after it refueled, left for Tel Aviv 90 minutes later. The Israeli airport authorities refused to give landing permission. Then, the airliner landed at Larnaca airport at 0541 today. Police forces have surrounded the plane.

According to our information, the hijackers asked the control tower that the plane be refueled. This has been the only communication the hijackers had with the control tower; since then, they have not been answering the radio. The only thing known about the hijackers' identity is that they are speaking in German.

Hijackers Surrender

[Excerpt] The hijacking against a Yugoslav airliner ended shortly after 0800 today following the surrender of the three hijackers to the Larnaca airport police. After their surrender, the hijackers were taken to the Larnaca police headquarters. The three hijackers are Croatian Yugoslavs, but their identity and the reasons for their action are not yet known.

The pilot and the other six members of the crew, as well as the remaining four passengers, left the aircraft shortly before the surrender of the hijackers. The other 101 passengers had managed to jump from the airplane a little earlier when the doors of the plane opened after an alarm system was set off. All the passengers have been taken into a hotel in Larnaca awaiting instructions from Belgrade.

Plane, Hijackers Returned

[Text] This afternoon the Cypriot Government delivered to a Yugoslav Government delegation the three Croatian hijackers who in the morning directed a Yugoslav Airlines passenger plane to Larnaca airport. The hijackers surrendered to the airport police shortly after the plane's crew and the last two passengers abandoned the aircraft. The other 99 passengers had escaped from the aircraft earlier.

All the passengers departed at 1510 in the afternoon on a second Yugoslav Airlines plane on which a Yugoslav government delegation had arrived in Cyprus to ask for the extradition of the hijackers. A little later the hijacked plane departed from Larnaca airport carrying the government delegation and the three hijackers. The government delegation was headed by Assistant Secretary for Internal Affairs Dragutin Papovic.

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON NEW YORK MEETING WITH HAIG

[Text] The foreign minister of the republic has had a meeting in New York with U.S. Secretary of State Haig. In a statement after the meeting, Mr Rolandhis said that they held a useful and constructive talk on the Cyprus issue and particularly on the proposed possible initiative by the UN secretary general. The foreign minister added that he will immediately convey Mr Haig's views to President Kiprianou, so that he can consider them along with other facts Mr Rolandhis is collecting during his stay in New York from his contacts with Mr Waldheim and other foreign ministers.

Asked by journalists if there is a possibility of President Kiprianou meeting with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas in New York, Mr Rolandhis said there is no such possibility. Answering a question on whether the president of the republic will meet with President Reagan during his forthcoming visit to New York, Mr Rolandhis said that they would meet at a later time, in any case before 31 Decmeber.

The Rolandhis-Haig meeting, which lasted about a half hour, was attended on the Cypriot side by Foreign Ministry Director General Pelayias, Cyprus Ambassador in Washington Iakovidhis and other officials. On the U.S. side, it was attended by Mr Eagleburger, assistant secretary; Mr Bartholomew, special coordinator on the Cyprus issue; Mr Ewing, the new U.S. ambassador to Cyprus; and Mr Dillery, in charge of southern European affairs in the State Department.

Haig 'Ultimatum' Reported

[Excerpts] U.S. Secretary of State General Haig has demanded, in a manner similar to an ultimatum, that the Cypriot Government declare acceptance of Waldheim's initiative and so-called "new ideas" by Wednesday, 30 September. Our permanent contributor in New York, who has informed us of the Haig ultimatum, has reported that the "ideas" had been prepared by the United States and the EEC and are intended to constitute a framework for a Cyprus solution in the event they are accepted.

It is reported that Waldheim is being pushed to submit three NATOite "ideas" which are based on the U.S. plan of 1979 and the Turkish proposals and provide for:

1. Two separate states with extensive authority as stipulated in the U.S. plan and the Turkish proposals.

2. Joining of two separate states through representatives as in the EEC pattern, which does not constitute nor is it described as federation but is a community of closely cooperating independent and sovereign states.

3. The Greek Cypriot state to have 70 percent and the Turkish Cypriot state 30 percent of the area of Cyprus.

Haig demands that the Cypriot Government accept the above "ideas" with the aim of reaching a decision on the framework of a Cyprus solution before the elections in Greece. The western quarters are asking the UN secretary general to promote these "ideas" around which all the persistent undercurrents and consultations are being held in New York. The Cypriot government has already been briefed on the Waldheim "ideas."

The Haig ultimatum was conveyed to the Cypriot Government yesterday through foreign minister Rolandhis after his long meeting with his U.S. counterpart, Mr Haig. Moreover, the latter also applied to Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, asking him to see that the Greek Government exercises its influence on Cyprus to accept the "ideas." According to our New York contributor, Mr Haig was in telephone contact with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and asked him to try and extract the consent of PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou in exerting pressure on the Cypriot Government to accept the Waldheim initiative and "ideas" by 30 September. As has been learned behind the UN scenes, Mr Mitsotakis stated he could not approach Mr Papandreou.

'Ultimatum' Denied

[Text] The government spokesman yesterday described as "groundless" a report in the Greek Cypriot daily TA NEA yesterday claiming that U.S. Secretary of State Mr Haig had demanded of the Cyprus Government in an "ultimatum like" manner acceptance of Dr Waldheim's suggestion to advance new ideas of his own to help the intercommunal talks.

The report suggested that Mr Haig made the demand during his meeting with Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis who has already conveyed it to the government and added that a similar pressure was being addressed in the direction of Athens.

But the government spokesman said that reports that Mr Haig had demanded the Cyprus Government accept Waldheim's suggestion by September 30 are unfounded.

Meantime Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis was continuing his contacts with colleagues and heads of mission in New York. In his address to the UN General Assembly Mr Rolandhis said the Cyprus Government's "considered views" on Mr Waldheim's proposals will be conveyed in the next few weeks.

It is recalled that President Kiprianou will be meeting Dr Waldheim next month, after his current visit to Australia where he will attend the Commonwealth conference.

KIPRIANOU DEPARTS FOR AUSTRALIA, NEW YORK 25 SEP

[Text] This evening, President of the Republic Kiprianou departed for visits to Australia and New York. In a statement at Larnaca airport before departing, the president of the republic said:

[Begin recording] I am going to Australia to participate in the Commonwealth summit conference. As is well known, this conference takes place every 2 years in one of the capitals of the Commonwealth member countries. This time it will be held in Australia.

It is expected that this conference will be most interesting in every respect. Both political and economic problems will be discussed and, within the framework of the discussion on the international situation, the Cyprus problem will also be discussed. During the conference, I shall be afforded the opportunity to brief leaders of states and various delegations on the recent developments concerning the Cyprus problem and to put forth the Cyprus Government's positions and viewpoints for an honorable solution on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

In addition to the conference itself, I shall be afforded the opportunity -- outside of the conference -- to have private meetings with various chiefs of states whom I shall brief on the latest developments of the Cyprus problem. I believe that the work of the conference will be very significant for the Commonwealth as a whole and for the Commonwealth's member countries. Specifically for Cyprus, this will be an opportunity to further internationalize the Cyprus problem, something that is the Cyprus Government's steadfast aim.

During my stay in Australia I shall be afforded the opportunity to come into contact with Greek Australians in various Australian cities and convey to them the warm greetings of the Cyprus people and express to Greek Australians the gratitude and thanks of the Cyprus people for their support in the struggle that Cyprus is waging for freedom and justice.

From Australia I shall go to New York to meet the UN secretary general and exchange viewpoints with him on the latest developments of the Cyprus problem, especially in the light of the intention he has expressed to undertake a more active role in the Cyprus problem.

After the talks I shall have with the UN secretary general, I will hold consultations with the members of the National Council in Cyprus and I will brief the government and the National Council in a plenary session. The necessary decisions will then be made regarding the planned initiative of the UN secretary general.

During my short stay in New York -- because I do not intend to stay more than 2 or 3 days this time -- I will be afforded the opportunity to meet with representatives from other countries and especially with the contact group of the nonaligned movement which in the past -- as at present -- has played a decisive role concerning the course of the Cyprus problem within the UN framework.

I shall return to Cyprus on 14 or 15 October. [end recording]

President of the Republic Kiprianou was seen off at Larnaca airport by President of the House of Representatives Ladhas, who will deputize for him during his absence; members of the cabinet; the charge d'affaires of the Greek Embassy Andis; Australian acting High Commissioner Mrs Grimwade; the chiefs of the National Guard and the police, and other officials.

PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION RETURNS FROM HAVANA

[Text] The members of the interparty parliamentary delegation, which participated in the interparliamentary organization's congress in Havana, returned to Cyprus. The delegation, which was composed of Representatives Ghalanos, Savvidhis, Matsis and Omirou, had contacts with many foreign delegations which they briefed on the current phase of the Cyprus problem. The aim of the contacts was also to establish bilateral relations. The delegation circulated a briefing document on the Cyprus problem among foreign deputies from 90 countries.

TURKISH CYPRIOT MOVEMENT CALLS FOR UNITARY STATE

NC270937 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 27 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] "The Turkish Cypriot Militants, Movement for the Independence of Cyrpus" yesterday sent a declaration to our paper which says: "The world public knows very well that the 'Prometheus,' 'Aphrodite' and 'Attilas' plans constitute links in a chain of British and U.S. machinations which aim at turning our island into the apple of discord."

The "declaration" added: "Instead of searching for a solution to the Cyprus problem, for the past 7 years they have been using all sorts of intrigues and plots to convert the island into an aggressive base of Britain, the United States and NATO. How long, however, will the Cypriot people -- who desire peace, detente and prosperity -- tolerate all these inadmissible activiites? All these gentlemen, who are trying to perpetuate the present 'status quo' on our territory, must realize one and for all that they cannot replace their lost positions in the Middle East at the expense of Cyprus. History has proven that such a treacherous method will sooner or later end in failure."

The "declaration" further says: "Denktas -- who is an apprentice of the British -- and his patrons must never forget that the Turkish Cypriots are, first of all, Cypriots and cannot be turned into tools of the United States and NATO by granting them bases in Karpasia. This is more so because the main problem facing Cyrpus is mutual trust and fraternity between the two communities as has also been the case in the past. This goal can be attained through negotiations without foreign intervention and in accordance with the UN resolutions."

The declaration of the "Turkish Cypriot Militants" concludes:

"We insist on: 1. The unconditional withdrawal of all foreign armed forces and dissolution of all military bases on the island.
"2. The immediate expulsion of all settlers from Anatolia.
"3. The return of all Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots to their homes.
"We will struggle for an independent, nonaligned, sovereign and bicommunal republic of Cyprus without any foreign bases or troops on our territory."

RALLIS CAMPAIGNS ON SUPPORT FOR NATO, EEC

NC271640 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 27 Sep 81 p 14

[Prime Minister Rallis 26 September speech in Pirgos]

[Excerpt] Citizens of Pirgos, citizens of Ilia, dear friends: The time has come to struggle together for the great victory of the nation and democracy -- for a new great victory of New Democracy. Thessoloniki was the first to send the message of the majority's triumph. Today Pirgos confirms this by adding its own strong voice through your huge and enthusiastic presence.

In principle, all elections are considered critical. However, the elections of 18 October are more critical because in these elections the issue of a choice among parties does not arise. You have to choose between progress and the dangers of backwardness, between a regime of freedom and an autocratic regime, between nationalization or socialization and private initiative. You have to choose between those people who honor the nation's struggles and symbols and those who do not hesitate to remove the pictures of Elevtherios Venizelos and publicize as a symbol Aris Veloukhiotis!

Ideology, economic philosophy and foreign policy separate us from the opposition, Rallis stressed. Our adversaries represent Marxism, regardless of how much they have recently been trying to conceal this, and they seek to change the country's basic foreign orientations. They want us to withdraw from everywhere -- from our alliances, the EEC, from Europe. They want to take us back to the small, impotent Greece of other eras, to isolation, to adventurism which leads to new Lebanons.

They ask that we withdraw from NATO, that we abandon the mainstays of our national defense and thus strengthen Turkey. However, yesterday in Mitilini, I explained why our stay in the Atlantic alliance serves our national interests.

They ask that we withdraw from the EEC. However, what will happen if our position is taken by antagonistic countries which will fill the needs of that market with their products? Who will subsidize our exports and the restructuring of our production? Let us not forget that the EEC buys 55 percent of our agricultural produce, Eastern countries 25 percent and the other countries 10 percent.

The basis of our adversaries' policy is their opposition to the EEC. However, with every passing day this policy is being proved wrong and it is collapsing. The entire opposition edifice and our adversaries' credibility is collapsing with it. This is why they are aroused by the legitimate distribution of the grants which constitute in practice the proof of their inaccuracies. Desperate and allegedly working for the farmers, they ask that the distributions end and, confused, the people allegedly working for our national independence ask the foreigners to intervene in our internal affairs.

However, is it possible to seriously confront the PASOK foreign policy? In most instances, not only are there no measures but there isn't even a program. There are only slogans, declarations and promises. However, only demonstrations can be staged through slogans, not governments formed, and those people who promise everything to everybody without demanding anything from anyone should be asked: How will you achieve these things? What concrete measures will you implement? It is certain that vagueness succeeds sloganeering.

Everytime, the prime minister continued, they repeat that they will obtain the required huge revenues by combatting tax evasion, thus insinuating that they will abolish tax exemptions and inventives which exist in all countries, even in the Eastern bloc countries, which aim at economic development and especially at rural development. Or to increase public revenus, do they plan to tax agricultural income and private deposits?

The goals of our adversaries in the economic sector are two: the introduction of systems similar to those in the Eastern countries and nationalization. However, there is no reason to abandon a system that has produced for us a per capita income double that of the Eastern countries and even more to renounce our way of life, freedom and our democratic political institutions.

Their second goal is "socialization." Greek voters have realized that PASOK is concealing from the people its true intentions. PASOK aims to nationalize foreign trade, domestic trade, industry, medicine and, most important, to transform the farmers, initially through "voluntary" cooperatives, and then, undisguisedly, to turn them into state employees. The farmer, whom we want as a master in his own land, finally will become an employee in a state farm. The appointment of commissars is reserved for small businesses, toward which the alleged sympathy of our adversaries is directed.

Calls for TV Dialogue

NC272112 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 27 Sep 81

[Text] Speaking this evening on Greek radio-television, Prime Minister and New Democracy Chairman Rallis at first mentioned that the PASOK chairman had rejected the proposal that two televised discussions be held between them because apparently he preferred the easy monologue which allowed PASOK to distort events and to promise everything to the people without explaining how his promises would be implemented. Rallis again invited PASOK to authorize two or three of its cadres to discuss on television, through a dialogue, all the issues it refers to in its monologues.

Rallis then referred to the demand that we withdraw from the EEC and stressed that accession has, in a privileged manner, guaranteed the future for farmers, small businessmen and industry and that just this year our country's net benefit from the EEC will be 39 billion drachmas. Rallis also said that the EC absorbs 50 percent of our exports while it pays compensation for the very few agricultural products that are withdrawn [from cultivation].

Rallis then stressed that at a time when the French Government and all the socialist parties of West Europe support NATO, only PASOK -- perhaps on account of its strong Marxist leanings -- advises withdrawal from the alliance.

In addition, Rallis said that the opposition's solutions would deform the country's economic situation. He mentioned the increase in workers' incomes of up to 240 percent during the last 6 years, the doubling of per capita income, the fourfold increase in private deposits, the curbing of inflation below 20 percent, this year, and the improvement of life in the countryside that was shown by this year's census.

Concluding, Rallis stressed that New Democracy's opponents propagandize a change which contains unfeasible and vague promises, from the abolition of all examinations and the evolution of all students into graduates of higher education institutes to the support of the Greek economy by the oil countries.

AVEROF, PAPANDREOU REPLY TO LUNS' STATEMENTS

NC261905 Athens NEWS in English 26 Sep 81 p 12

[Text] PASOK President Papandreou last night said it was unbelievable that Mr Luns considered the regime of certain islands to be "in abeyance" just like "the administrative control of the Greek-Turkish air space is in abeyance."

He pointed out to Mr Luns that the Aegean Islands and the Aegean air space were Greek and not Greek-Turkish. He pointed out that the government was a caretaker one and therefore unable to undertake new initiatives. However, he added, it was vital that "we condemn these statements of Mr Luns that are undermining our national sovereignty."

Commenting on Mr Luns' statement on the possibility of a PASOK victory he said it was a blatant interference in the internal political life of the country and totally unacceptable.

Defence Minister Mr Averof, referring to Papandreou's statement, said last night: "This is an occasion for me to agree with Mr Papandreou. No Greek Government has ever accepted that the status of the Aegean Islands is not clearly defined by texts of international standing and recognition. The same goes for the air space. I believe Mr Luns' statement was not correctly reported as having been for ten years foreign minister of Holland, it is not possible that he should ignore the validity of international agreements. Greece has, as regards the status of the islands and their air space, both the international laws and the material power needed to keep them."

According to an Athens news agency report from Brussels, Mr Luns had said that one year after Greece's return to NATO, relative problems of the area were still pending, particularly the status of certain islands of the Aegean, the command of the Greek-Turkish airspace and American bases in Greece. He also said that should Mr Papandreou win the elections, the situation could become dramatic to the detriment of NATO in this area.

GREEK, TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN NEW YORK

NC271954 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 27 Sep 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis today met in New York with his Turkish counterpart Turkmen. A joint communique issued after the meeting states that the meeting took place in accordance with a previous decision that had been made in Rome on 3 May 1981. The two ministers made a general review of Greek-Turkish relations and discussed the various bilateral issues in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. They also discussed the recent talks that took place between the two secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries within the framework of the continuing dialogue between the two countries.

The foreign ministers of Greece and Turkey reiterated their governments' conviction to solve outstanding problems through bilateral negotiations to the benefit of both their countries and peoples and peace, stability and cooperation in the area. The two ministers also agreed to meet anew before the end of the current year at a time and place to be fixed through diplomatic channels.

GOVERNMENT REACTIONS TO ATTACK ON TRUCKS IN IRAQ

Demarches to Iraq

TA261534 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1527 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Text] Ankara, 26 Sep (AA)--In connection with an incident in which some Turkish Transport International Routier (TIR) trucks were attacked and burned in Iraq, Turkish foreign Ministry spokesman Amb Nazmi Akiman said that all necessary demarches were made on this issue. Ambassador Akiman added that necessary instructions were sent to the Turkish ambassador in Baghdad after the Foreign Ministry was informed of the incident. The spokesman added that the Iraqi Charge d'Affaires (Faruk Yahya) in Ankara was summoned to the Foreign Ministry for information and that a demand was made for the necessary measures to be taken. It was also recalled that Turkey reserved its right for indemnities.

Further Report

[Text] It has been learned that 15 Turkish Transport International Routier [TIRI] drivers were attacked in Iraq and kidnapped by unidentified persons. The incident occurred Thursday night in a gas station 41 km from the Habur Turkish-Iraqi border checkpoint. Four of the 15 drivers that were kidnapped were able to escape from their captors. A Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondent reports that seven TIR trucks were completely burned and 2 others were damaged. The Irazi security forces are looking for the kidnapped Turkish drivers with the help of heliocopters.

A statement by the Foreign Ministry's information department says that the Turkish drivers were attacked on 24 September night by a group of armed men as they were waiting at the gas station. After they burned 9 TIR trucks, the armed men kidnapped the 15 Turkish drivers under the threat of arms. Later four of the Turkish drivers were able to escape. Seven TIR trucks were completely burned and two others were partly damaged. One of these trucks was able to continue on its way to Kuwait.

The TRT correspondent says that Turkey was informed of the incident after one of the drivers reported it on Friday. Turkey's request for talks on the incident was accepted and the district officials of Cizre and Silopi met at the Habur checkpoint with the official of the Iraqi (Ismailiye) town where the incident occurred. The Iraqi official confirmed the incident and briefed the Turkish officials about it. The Iraqi official explained that the security forces were out in a careful search of the kidnapped Turkish drivers with the help of heliocopters and other aircraft, that very strict security measures were taken in the highway being used by the Turkish TIR trucks and that all requests for indemnity would be accepted. Another meeting will take place tomorrow between the Turkish and Iraqi officials. The statement by the Foreign Ministry adds that all necessary demarches were undertaken immediately in Ankara as well as in Baghdad. The statement says that contacts between the Turkish-Iraqi border officials are continuing and adds that more information will be made public as soon as it is received.

Kidnapped Drivers Released

[Text] Fifteen Turkish Transport International Routier [TIR] drivers kidnapped in Iraq by unidentified persons on 24 September from a filling station 41 km from the Habur Turkish-Iraq border checkpoint returned today to Turkey. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent reports that all drivers have been identified except for one. More information on this incident will be reported in our later newscast.

TERRORISM BLAMED IN ATTACK ON PARIS CONSULATE

Armenians Deplore Incident

[Text] Shnork Kaldustian, the patriarch of the Armenian Church in Istanbul, as well as Sahan Sivaciyan, the head of the Armenian Spiritual Assembly, and Dr Garabet Arman, an official of the Armenian community, have all strongly denounced the Paris incidents of yesterday. The representatives of Turkish Armenians visited Istanbul Governor Nevzat Ayaz today for talks which lasted some time. In a statement during the visit, the patriarch of the Armenian Church in Istanbul said that it was with great pain that they were informed of the Paris incidents which occurred yesterday and added: It is with a bid to express the feelings of regret of the Armenian community and to denounce such despicable acts on their behalf that we have paid this visit.

In his turn, Sivaciyan said that the Spiritual Assembly had met in an extraordinary session because of the Paris incidents. He added: In presence of all the Turkish press and honorable governor, I denounce this incident on behalf of the Spiritual Assembly, the Armenian patriarchy and community. We wish God's mercy for the official who was killed during the incidents.

Speaking on behalf of the Armenian community, Dr Arman said that what happened in Paris was an irrational and crazy incident and added: We, as the Turkish Armenians, always denounce such incidents. The reference by our head of state to the feelings of Turkish Armenians in his Manisa speech is our greatest happiness. All Armenians in Turkey will remember our head of state's words as their greatest assurance for a happy life. Recalling that Armenians living within the Turkish borders were Turkish citizens, Arman said: we are even more sorry than others when a Turk gets killed. Arman added that such incidents were denounced by all Armenians in their senses and officials of the Armenian churches around the world.

He concluded by saying that a special prayer would be read in the central Armenian church in Beyoglu for all Turkish officials that had lost their lives. In reply to a question by the journalists, Arman said that the stand of foreign countries was also a reason for these incidents and added that if foreign countries were not so lenient, the terrorists would not act so boldly. He also denounced the feature on the Armenians broadcast by the French television last night.

Foreign Ministry Statement

[Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun's statement to the press on the attack against the Turkish Consulate in Paris; 25 September -- recorded]

[Text] The only difference between this attack and the previous ones is the fact that the aggressors took the risk of being caught, in fact, they knew they would be caught. That is my opinion. Otherwise, there is no difference between this incident and the previous ones. As you know, we have said that from the beginning that the attacks being carried out against the Turkish diplomats and offices abroad by persons who want to show themselves as the fighters of a fictitious Armenian cause are in reality part of international terrorism, that their aim is to divide Turkey, or at least to damage its relations with other countries and to shake the solidarity within the Western union. At the beginning this view was not received with understanding by our friends, as it is today. They said at the time that we were exaggerating, that we were making misinterpretations. In time, all our Western friends began to see the incidents as they really are. Last night we were following the incident. The occupation of the consulate in Paris continued.

We received a cable from our embassy in London which said that they had received a bomb threat. We received a cable from our consulate general in Lyons that said they had received a bomb threat. We received a cable from our consulate general in Hannover. They said they received a bomb threat. In the end, they all turned out to be untrue. However, it is obvious that we are faced with a movement guided by a certain source, a movement which aims at creating an atmosphere of fear. Otherwise, how can you have an organized action in various countries at the same time.

National liberation movements are holy movements. They are movements carried out against living under the unwanted rule and oppression of another country. We applaud such movements. How can we establish any links between Armenian terrorism and a national liberation movement? I believe that this is impossible. Such movements are carried out in the countries in which the people who fight live. We have seen many examples of national liberation movements. These movements are carried out within the countries the fighters want to liberate. The movement we are faced with today is entirely a movement of gangsterism and of terrorism.

French TV Scored

[Text] State Minister and acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak has sent a message to the Turkish ambassador in Paris, Adnan Bulak, in connection with the attack against the Turkish Consulate General in Paris by Armenian terrorists. In his message, Oztrak expressed his condolences for the death of Cemal Ozen, a security official who was martyred during the attack. The minister extended his best wishes for a speedy recovery of Kaya Inal who was wounded.

Criticizing the French radio and television's broadcast in connection with the incident, Adnan Bulak said: I am convinced that anybody with some humanity in his heart would react to the broadcast with indignation -- a broadcast which distorted the historical facts in order to justify this inhuman attack. This program which distorted the facts and which reflected them unilaterally was broadcast by a state establishment. This is an action which must be dwelled upon with great importance by the French state and all other countries. Ilhan Oztrak pointed out that especially official broadcasting establishments had important duties in fighting terrorism which has reached dimensions very dangerous for mankind. He added: I hope that the French radio and television administration will grasp this fact now.

Additional Comments

[Excerpts] Speaking to reporters today about yesterday's consulate attack in Paris, Foreign Minister Secretary General Kamuran Gurun said: The aim of these attacks is directed at tearing away a certain part of Turkey. Regardless of whether it is done under the name of Armenians or under another name, the result is the same, the aim is the same. The Foreign Ministry secretary general noted that France had announced that it would not grant political asylum to the terrorists but that if it acted to the contrary a serious situation would emerge. Gurun said that all countries must wage a joint struggle against international terrorism and that this would be in their own interests. He pointed out that the French Government and police had approached this incident seriously, but that it could be said that the measures taken to prevent the attacks against the Turkish representations in France were insufficient.

Greece Blamed for Attacks

TA271542 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 27 Sep 81

[Text] Izmit, 27 Sep (AA) -- Greece is behind the Armenian terrorist attacks against Turkish diplomats, Chairman Selahattin Yildiz of the Western Thracian Turks Solidarity Society said Sunday.

Addressing a meeting in Izmit, western Turkey, Mr Yildiz strongly criticized that Greece was among the countries masterminding international terrorism. He urged the United Nations to investigate the plight of the western Thracian Turks, who have been suffering untold agonies in the past 60 years. He said his society would continue to fight Greek injustices until common sense prevailed.

MINTOFF DETAILS NEUTRALITY PACT WITH USSR

[Text] Valetta, 27 Sep (AFP) -- The Soviet Union is offering to help Malta maintain its neutrality, without forcing it to join a politico-military alliance, Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff said today.

Spelling out the details of a proposed agreement, he said the Soviet Union would consult Malta if Malta's security was threatened, and together they would see what steps should be taken. It did not mean the Soviet Union would be establishing a base in Malta, he told a Labour party rally.

The United States recognised Malta's neutrality and non-alignment, he said, but would give no military guarantees unless Malta signed an alliance. He said he understood the U.S. position but believed that being an ally would mean having a military base in Malta and the Maltese Government had pledged not to have another base in Malta. The United States had been informed about the stage reached in talks with the Soviet Union and had been invited to follow suit, Mr Mintoff said. The agreement, to be signed soon, would be put to Malta's parliament, he said.

POLISH EMBASSY FIRST SECRETARY REQUESTS ASYLUM

PM240853 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 21 Sep 81 p 11

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA report: "Foreign Ministry Confirms Polish Defection"]

[Text] First Secretary Wit Wojtowicz of the Polish Embassy in Stockholm has requested political asylum in Sweden, DAGENS NYHETER reported in later editions yesterday. The Swedish Foreign Ministry yesterday confirmed the identity of the Polish defector. Wojtowicz is in his 40's. He is married and has one child. His present whereabouts are unknown.

Embassy press attache Jan Kawa confirmed for TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRAA yesterday that Wojtowicz had not been at work since last Monday [14 September]. He did not want to say anything else about Wojtowicz other than that his work had principally involved political affairs.

According to Polish sources in Stockholm, Wojtowicz has been in Sweden for a little less than a year. He speaks Swedish and has written a doctoral thesis on the Swedish Social Democratic movement. He is a party functionary from Podhale in southern Poland and has made himself known for his devotion to duty as a party member. But in connection with the pope's visit to Poland in 1979 Wojtowicz was criticized by the Krakow newspaper GAZETA KRAKOWSKA for misuse of power. Wojtowicz was said to have stolen timber intended for the construction of a chapel in honor of the Polish pope. He was supposed to have built himself a house with the timber. Wojtowicz wrote a denial which the newspaper published. The question of Wojtowicz's asylum is being handled by the police aliens department, which was closed over the weekend.

POSITIONS UNCHANGED AT NEW MBFR SESSION

Although the NATO complementary armament decision concerns medium-range missiles to counterbalance the Soviet SS-20 missiles and these missiles are not on the agenda of the Vienna talks, CSSR chief delegate Keblusek has linked these issues: The NATO long-term armament program adopted in 1978, the decision of December 1979 "as well as other actions" that were recently undertaken by NATO are worrying the socialist countries, he said, because the weapons concerned "also include this area of future reductions of armed forces and arms in new preparations of war."

In reply to a question by DIE PRESSE, the CSSR chief delegate declared that Reagan's neutron weapon decision was exerting a negative effect on the Vienna talks. The production decision would be followed by a decision on deploying these weapons, and they would be deployed in Europe rather than in the United States, he said.

On behalf of the Western side, Netherlands delegate De Vos stressed that a decisive breakthrough in Vienna would only be possible if progress were achieved on the question of troop strength figures and the "accompanying measures." Otherwise, he said, there would be the danger of an agreement being equivocal, unverifiable, and thus also useless and politically unacceptable.

Not only the Soviet Union and the US -- as has been reported -- are represented by new chief delegates, namely, Valerian Mikhaylov and Richard Staar, but there is also a new Polish representative, Stanislaw Przygodzki. Denmark is represented by Ambassador Larsen.

AUSTRIA RELEASES YUGOSLAV PRISONERS FOR LACKNER

AU281320 Vienna KURIER in German 26 Sep 81 p 17

[Summary] In return for the release by the Yugoslav authorities of former Austrian Army employee Gerhard Lackner, who was arrested in Yugoslavia in 1978 and sentenced to 9 years' imprisonment for espionage, Austrian President Kirchschlaeger has pardoned two Yugoslav citizens -- 34-year-old Luka Vidmar and 30-year-old Marina Blaj, who committed a bombing attack in Voelkermarkt on 18 September 1979 and were subsequently sentenced to 4 years' imprisonment each.

Lackner, whose sentence was reduced from 9 to 6 years' imprisonment some time after his trial, in which he had been found guilty of having taken photographs in a restricted military area, was pardoned after serving half of his sentence, and has already been handed over to the Austrian authorities. Vidmar, who lost a leg in the bomb attack, and Marina Blaj were also released from prison after having served half their terms and have already returned to Yugoslavia.

BRIEFS

ENERGY DEPENDENCE -- Austria can cover approximately one-third of its energy requirements from domestic sources. In 1980, 45 percent of Austrian energy imports came from the East. Eighty percent of Austria's coal imports came from East bloc countries--Poland, the CSSR and the USSR -- and 22 percent of crude oil imports, and all natural gas imports were from the USSR. In the electric power sector Austria can cover domestic requirements mostly from domestic production, but the East European share in the rather low power imports substantially increased in 1980. FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 28 Sep (DPA) -- In the opinion of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP), the East European states have a more open attitude toward negotiations on the reduction of medium-range missiles in Europe than first reactions have indicated. He told the FDP Presidium on Monday that he gained this impression following his talks in New York with the foreign ministers of the Soviet Union, the GDR, Poland, the CSSR, Hungary and Bulgaria.

FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling said that Genscher told the Presidium that the clear U.S. endorsement of the "zero option" -- abandoning counterarming with medium-range missiles provided the Soviet Union makes corresponding concessions -- shows that it is solely up to the Soviet Union whether this object of negotiations is achieved through the removal of the Soviet advance arms buildup.

In Genscher's view, the planned talks differ from the earlier negotiations within the SALT framework on account of the Europeans' direct involvement in the working out of the negotiating mandate and the continuing development of the Western positions. The institutional basis was provided by the disarmament group set up at the proposal of the Federal Government. Thus, the fact that Europe was earmarked for the deployment of Western arms was taken into account.

In the federal foreign minister's view, U.S. willingness to take into account the interests of the Europeans is greater than the Europeans' ability to define jointly these interests. Genscher also told the FDP Presidium that efforts at progress in arms control and disarmament should not remain limited to medium-range missiles. Other objectives are to resume SALT negotiations, to work wholeheartedly for the establishment of a European disarmament conference and to give new impulses to the troop reduction negotiations in Vienna.

Radio Interview

DW281449 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1100 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Excerpts from reporter Kepper interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] How do you now assess the chances of negotiations on medium-range weapons? Do you believe that both sides will seriously enter into these negotiations?

[Answer] I am under the firm impression that the United States as well as the Soviet Union seriously want to conduct these negotiations. Both are certainly aware of the responsibility they bear as nuclear powers in view of the high concentration of nuclear weapons in Europe. We must always remember that by immediately stopping the deployment of medium-range weapons, the Soviet Union could improve the negotiating climate. By eliminating its medium-range missiles, it could even achieve Western renunciation of counterarmament. As a NATO member and as a country represented in NATO's disarmament group, we must now concentrate on accompanying the negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

[Question] The Federal Government, the federal chancellor and you have contributed very much to ensuring that the negotiations take place at all. How do you assess the possibility of the Federal Government bringing influence to bear on the negotiations?

[Answer] You have to understand the history of the dual decision. It must be noted in this connection that the Federal Government demanded in the preparatory work for the 1979 dual decision that the alliance create a disarmament group to work out the negotiation part of the dual decision. After the December 1979 decision, we demanded that the disarmament group continue and that it prepare for the negotiations. That has been done now. We must now effectively represent our own position at the negotiations; we must react to the negotiation position of the other side; and we must make suggestions to create progress at the negotiations. That is being debated and discussed in the disarmament group. This is good because the Europeans as well as the United States are interested in achieving constructive results.

[Question] Isn't this the first time that Europeans have taken part in such disarmament talks?

[Answer] It is true that the so-called SALT did not take place this way. This is the first time that this is taking place in such an intense way with regard to medium-range missiles. We consider this evidence that the United States realizes that Europe is an alliance partner with equal rights and is interested in promoting its own negotiation position and ideas as well as European interests. This is, indeed, a necessary foundation of a functioning alliance of states with equal rights and not an alliance where one power holds a dominating position over the others. We have never considered NATO to be the latter and we are very happy that this view is shared on both sides of the Atlantic.

[Answer] Whoever had doubts in the past months that negotiations would take place will certainly be impressed. I want to remind you that the federal chancellor and I guaranteed the public, the Bundestag and our own parties that negotiations would begin this year. I believe that those who are really interested in negotiations will see that their aims have been achieved when negotiations begin in late November. However, those who are not interested in eliminating the East's armament lead through negotiations and who are privately prepared to accept the East's armament lead will not be impressed. The reaction to the taking up of negotiations will thus rather clearly demonstrate the different areas of concern.

[Question] You demanded smooth negotiations more than once when you were in New York. Did you also have in mind the date for the deployment of new American missiles in Europe, namely late 1983? Do you see a chance of achieving results by then or before that deadline?

[Answer] Those who understand the complicated character of negotiations on such Eurostrategic systems know that no more time can be lost in the matter. The demand for smooth negotiations is really focused on the fall of 1983. We want the stipulations of the dual decision to be applied -- those stipulations which are of particular importance for us and which state that the Western counterarmament decision can be reexamined on the basis of concrete negotiation results. In order words, if the Soviet Union eliminated some of its medium-range missiles threatening us, we could examine whether some of our counterarmament would become superfluous. In the ideal case, as the federal chancellor, the U.S. secretary of state and I said, if the Soviet Union fully eliminated its armament lead, we would be the one to say with special intensity that Western counterarmament could then be completely forgotten. Nobody would be more happy in this case than those European states which are considered to be deployment countries -- the FRG, Italy and England.

[Question] So late 1983 will remain the deployment deadline? There are reports that this deadline has been extended.

[Answer] No, nothing has been changed regarding these plans. We should indeed concentrate now on conducting the negotiations smoothly and in a businesslike manner. I particularly welcomed the businesslike character of my talk with Mr Gromyko. Everyone can rest assured that the Federal Government will do everything it can to contribute through its policy to the preservation of a climate in Europe that will permit business-like talks. I believe that we must all be aware of the fact that every possible step must be made to avoid any additional aggravation of the international climate. As Germans living in a divided country, we are most interested in this.

[Question] You have repeatedly expressed the desire for the so-called zero option. How did your counterparts, for example, the Soviet foreign minister, react to this?

[Answer] Nobody can expect preliminary talks to provide the results of negotiations. In the forthcoming negotiations, it will be very important to compare the strength of the West and the East. They know in the Soviet Union that there are no people in the West who want to have medium-range missiles at any price; these people would prefer a situation where the East renounced its SS-20 missiles so that the West would not have to counterarm.

[Question] Is foreign policy now maybe the last thing the SPD and the FDP have in common?

[Answer] This is a very important thing, but it is certainly not the only one.

DER SPIEGEL VIEWS COMPANIES' DILEMMA IN GAS DEAL

DW281439 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 28 Sep 81 pp 74-77

[Text] The natural gas-pipeline deal with the Soviet Union contains a disappointment for German industry because most of the orders are going abroad. Soviet Stanislav Volchkov is more familiar with German industry than many a domestic big banker. For months, managers and technicians from roughly 100 German companies have been continuously calling on him. Volchkov is the president of the Soviet Machinoimport enterprise who rented housing for himself and two dozen functionaries at No 25 Konrad Adenauer Strasse in Cologne.

Corporation bosses and members of the boards of the Mannesmann and MTU corporations, of Salzgitter and Aeg, of Hoesch and Linde have negotiated with the Soviet several times already. All of them had hoped to profit from the biggest industrial deal that may ever emerge between Germany and the Russians. It involves orders totaling DM20 billion. Beginning in 1985, the Soviets plan to pump about 30 billion cubic meters of natural gas from the Siberian Peninsula of Yamal to the West each year to begin with, including about 12 billion cubic meters into the German pipeline network. Plans provide for Western companies to supply the tubes and the compressors required for the double pipeline which is designed for a length of 5,000 km and a capacity of 60 billion cubic meters a year.

Last week, a Soviet delegation headed by Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Vladimir Sushkov and Gas Minister Vasiliy Dinkov came to Duesseldorf to finalize the transaction. But when the Russians expounded their plans, the Germans showed long faces. Nearly all bidders who had negotiated with Volchkov are left out in the cold. At best, German factories will end up with DM700 million of the roughly DM4 billion worth of orders for the delivery of pump and relay stations, turbines and construction installations. The biggest hunk is distributed among corporations in France, Italy and Japan.

During a 5-day business tour of the German corporation headquarters, the Soviets demonstrated what clever businessmen they are. Even board members of the Mannesmann Tube Corporation and the electrical engineering company Aeg, who are experienced in negotiating with the Soviets, had to accept conditions and terms which usually are not customary in the conclusion of Western contracts. Being the general contractor for the installations part of the natural gas-tube transaction, the Mannesmann Corporation and its consortium partner, the Creusot-Loire steel and machine building company of Paris, must bear the liability for the entire project. They are liable for all risks with respect to delivery, quality and delivery schedules.

The Soviets also skillfully pushed the price down, which the German-French partners had made up for their role as general contractor. Mannesmann and Creusot-Loire will be satisfied with a commission of 8 to 9 percent of the overall order of DM5 billion which they have to handle. The electrical engineering corporation Aeg and the Federal Government-owned Salzgitter group, which initially were favored by the Soviets, demanded between 10 and 12 percent. Consequently, they are out of the race. Mannesmann and Creusot were able to outbid their competitors only because the French Government will help out with interest rate subsidies. After all, Moscow plans to pay with credits from the West. Just like the French, the German bankers also were prepared to grant the Soviets a DM4.4 billion credit at the preferential rate of 7.8 percent over a period of 10 years. Since Bonn does not grant any interest subsidies, the German suppliers are supposed to pay the difference with the market rate (about 12 percent). Thus, on the average, the installations builders are 20 percent above the price of foreign competitors, computed over a period of 10 years. The Aeg Corporation probably will be the only German supplier in the installations deal, which will receive the order involving a three-digit million amount, because Mannesmann does not have adequate capacity for turbine and compressor production and, hence, must place nearly all orders elsewhere. The French turbine construction company Alsthom will handle the biggest part. But the Italian state company Nuovo Pignone also will be counted in when the order for 120 turbines is placed. Having the low rate bids of the French and Italians in their briefcases, the Soviets pushed down the Aeg prices. The fact that the ailing electrical engineering corporation of Frankfurt will participate in the deal nevertheless is attributable to the simple circumstance that the other turbine producers do not have adequate capacities. The Kanis subsidiary of Aeg in Essen is supposed to manufacture 50 gas turbines worth DM700 million.

In the tube deal, too, the German companies had anticipated more. After the tube agreement of 1972, Mannesmann boss Egon Overbeck firmly believed that his company would be able to supply large tubes worth DM8 billion this time. The plans of the Soviets were different, however. Instead of placing orders with one partner only, they currently negotiate with several tube producers separately and place individual orders with Japanese, Italian or Netherlands companies, but also with Mannesmann, Hoesch and Salzgitter. Unlike their former practice, the Soviets this time do not intend to order all tubes at the same time but instead will negotiate all over again, year after year, until the project's completion in 1985.

And yet something else has changed. This time the Soviets have taken charge of the assembly of the compressor stations and the construction of the pipeline route. The Western suppliers do not even know the exact destination of their tubes.

The Soviets will not have quite as easy a stand in the gas contract as they had in the purchase of tubes and turbines. When Gas Minister Dinkov during supper with Mannesmann boss Overbeck at Duesseldorf's Park Hotel celebrated the new partnership, by far not all details had yet been settled.

Klaus Liesen, chief of the Essen Ruhrgas Corporation, still is far from an accord with the Soviets on the gas price. The Ruhrgas Corporation is in a better negotiating position than Mannesmann or Aeg because it negotiates also on behalf of the other European gas buyers. Moscow cannot introduce a competitor into the deal. Consequently, Liesen remains the utterly sober businessman who can bide his time: "What counts for us is that we can sell the Russians gas again at rates commensurate with the market."

MITTERRAND RETURNS FROM 'FRUITFUL' SAUDI VISIT

[Text] President Mitterrand returned to Paris in midafternoon after a full weekend in Saudi Arabia. The visit was fruitful from the political viewpoint. Both sides underline the frankness, the warmth and the value of the talks. Mitterrand had two private audiences with King Khalid and 2-hour meeting with Crown Prince Fahd. Of course, great differences remain between France and Saudi Arabia, notably on the thorny problem of Jerusalem. But there are many points of agreement. During his pruss conference this morning in at-Ta'if, Francois Mitterrand recognized that the Saudi peace plan for the Near East is a good starting point. This was something that certainly helped to make things more relaxed, as our special correspondent Dominique Souchier reports from Saudi Arabia:

[Begin recording] "Mitterrand you are a friend. Here you are at home." As this remark from Prince Fahd shows, Saudi Arabia is no longer worried about the left's advent to power in France. First, the president maintained a statesmanlike caliber of discussion and impressed his interlocutors by this. Nothing has been signed; there was only political talk and Francois Mitterrand reaffirmed his support for the Fahd plan. The president did not make any specific pronouncement about particular aspects of the Saudi proposals to bring about a settlement in the Near East but he reiterated that he takes a global view of them and sees in them a positive means to bring about a return to peace. Francois Mitterrand said all this without renouncing his friendship for Israel. On the contrary, he reaffirmed this friendship this morning while speaking in the company of Prince Fahd and the latter did not react. Newsworthy is that the Arabs are no longer worried about this friendship for Israel, instead they see in it as a better opportunity for peace. Far from being opposed to Francois Mitterrand's forthcoming trip to Israel, they would in fact like to advise him to go to Israel as soon as possible. [end recording]

Lebanon was also among the questions considered by this French-Saudi summit. Saudi Arabia wants to see a definite end to Israeli interference in the affairs of Lebanon and France wants to see an effective Lebanese army corps reconstituted so that the UN "blue helmets" no longer would be the sole keepers of order.

President Mitterrand said a short time ago in at-Ta'if, boarding his plan to return to Paris: [begin recording] The United Nations has a specific part to play in Lebanon, a role which is recognized by everybody. What I would like to see is simply that the area in which the United Nations is currently operating possibly should be widened to avoid conflict and the troops reinforced, but not by being substituted by anybody else. I think that I even expressed the wish that Lebanon, represented by its legitimate government, should be able to reorganize its own army just as any nation can have its own national army and this would be quite normal for Lebanon. There is no misunderstanding between us. [end recording]

LE FIGARO REPORTS POSSIBLE VENEZUELAN SANCTIONS

PM231411 Paris Le FIGARO in French 21 Sep 81 p 3

[Irene Jarry report: "Venezuela: Contracts With France Could Be Canceled"]

[Excerpts] The first result of the French-Mexican statement recognizing the "representative" nature of the opposition front in the Salvadoran struggle was that a number of Latin American countries -- Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Jamaica, Peru, Paraguay, the Dominican Republic, Uruguay and Venezuela -- officially protested this initiative which is tantamount to interference in El Salvador's internal affairs.

It seemed to be simply one of those condemnations on principle which a number of states address to one or several other states when they are faced with a fait accompli they do not like. You bang your fist on the table and draft motions. That satisfies consciences and does not damage business.

This time, however, Venezuela does not seem to be making do with protesting. After summoning the French ambassador in Caracas to inform him of its displeasure and canceling the visit which the Venezuelan interior minister was due to make to Paris at the beginning of the month, the Venezuelan Government announced that it intends to adopt economic retaliatory measures against France.

According to some French industrialists doing business with Caracas, the Venezuelan anger could result in the cancellation of several contracts, primarily those signed with nationalized companies or those likely to be nationalized. Circles close to the French Embassy in the Venezuelan capital, where they are keeping very quiet, seem less pessimistic: "It is true," they say in substance, "that the situation has become serious and it is possible that there may be some tension in economic relations. But we do not expect a radical change."

Indeed, it seems that before making a major decision Caracas is awaiting the North-South summit in Cancun at the end of this month, at which Venezuelan Foreign Minister Zambrano Velasco will make a point of talking with Claude Cheysson, his French counterpart.

EUROPEAN ROCKET FINAL TEST FIRING SET FOR 14 DEC

[Text] Paris, 25 Sep (AFP) -- The fourth and final test firing of the European rocket Ariane is set for December 14, several weeks later than originally expected, it was announced here today. The fourth firing is to launch a "Marecs A" maritime telecommunications satellite and a technological capsule with equipment to analyse Ariane's performance. The delay was caused by technical difficulties with the satellite. Two of the first three Ariane tests were considered successful.

INTELLECTUALS SEEK RELEASE OF EGYPTIAN LECTURER

[Text] Paris, 26 Sep (AFP) -- A group of French intellectuals has written to Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat asking for the release of Aminah Rashid, a French literature lecturer at Cairo University who was arrested on September 6. The signatories said her arrest was linked to the "issue of political opinions." Mrs Rashid holds a doctorate from France's Sorbonne University, and has been a researcher and teacher in Paris.

SPADOLINI ANNOUNCES GOVERNMENT SPENDING CUTS

[Excerpt] Rome, 25 Sep (ANSA)--The Italian Government announced thrift plans here today to cut public spending by some 10,000 billion lire and levy new taxes to create a 5,000 billion lire "anti-inflation fund". Premier Giovanni Spadolini displayed the measures his government has just drafted to trim the state's bulging deficit and pull the reins on the country's rising cost of living after receiving his cabinet's endorsement.

Italy's austere budget for 1982 will entail drastic cuts in health and welfare spending as well as the monies channelled into de-centralized government offices, with the two-fold aim of bringing the inflation rate down to 16 percent and reviving investments to keep the wheels of production rolling.

The government pledged to keep next year's budget deficit below the 50,000 billion lire mark and announced the following public expenditure cuts to achieve the goal:

The national health system will be deprived of 4,700 billion lire.
Welfare -- 2,500 billion.
Local government offices -- 2,500 billion.

Treasure Minister Nino Andreatta announced that new taxes will be levied to collect money for an "anti-inflation fund" from which the government may draw to fight any unforeseen inflation-causing developments. Spadolini stressed while unveiling the measures to the press here today that the whole anti-inflation operation will require the broadest possible consensus in parliament. More specifically, he asked for support that reached "beyond the confines of (his government's parliamentary) majority and the opposition" as well as for a "contribution" from organized labor and big business.

L'UNITA Reaction

[Excerpts] Rome, 26 Sep (ANSA)--The Italian press presented the Rome government's budget-tightening plans to the reading public today as a tough bill to meet, practically putting a wager on the anti-inflationary operation's chances for success. Newspaper descriptions of the economic measures just launched by Premier Giovanni Spadolini's coalition government were filled with accounts of the cabinet quarrels which took place during the drafting of the package.

The Communist Party (PCI) newspaper, "L'UNITA", said the in-fighting in the cabinet had left "the premier all alone" in his bid to tackle an "objectively difficult" economic situation. "The path which Spadolini will have to take to fight both inflation and recession at the same time is narrower than ever," the PCI mouthpiece noted. "But the net impression is that many members of the coalition he heads are doing everything they can to push him into taking a false step," it commented.

DEFENSE MINISTER, BERLINGUER CLASH OVER MISSILES

Lagorio, responding to remarks made by the communist leader in a speech last Sunday in Turin in which he announced his party's strong opposition to the installation of NATO cruise missiles in Italy, accused Berlinguer of failing to consider the fact that the Rome government has offered to refuse the missiles if the Soviet Union agrees in turn to dismantle its SS-20 missiles in Eastern Europe. According to the Socialist minister, Berlinguer "uses a double standard" because "at the time of Western reduction of arms during a period of detente, the Soviet Union began a grandiose plan to increase their conventional and nuclear military power." "Why were there no protest marches and signature signing campaigns at that time?" Lagorio asked.

Lagorio also accused Berlinguer of lying about United States intentions when they approved the choice of a town in Sicily as the site for the missiles. "Berlinguer believes that lies are an efficient method of propaganda," Lagorio charged. The communist secretary had accused the United States of forcing Italy's hand in the choice of the Sicily site in order to threaten Africa and the Mid-East."

Further Lagorio Accusations

FM2813-5 Rome AVANTI in Italian 24 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio article: "Berlinguer Did Not Tell Truth About Missiles"]

[Text] Speaking in Turin, deputy Berlinguer did not tell the truth about Euromissiles. He wanted to accuse the Italian Government of submissiveness and aggressiveness and therefore regurgitated ideas that have already been refuted several times in Parliament and in the press. But it seems that deputy Berlinguer still regards lies repeated interminably as an effective propaganda method. He said that the choice of Sicily was imposed on us by the United States and that the base was sited there to threaten Africa and the Middle East. He added that with Comiso, Italy is envisaging a war of aggression; otherwise he would not have said that following Comiso, Sicily and Italy are exposed to reprisals.

We repeat for the umpteenth time that the Comiso base was chosen by the Italian Government and that the United States would have preferred another location already equipped in other regions, partly to save a large proportion of the 200 billion [currency unspecified] that it will have to spend in Sicily. Comiso was chosen because, of all the locations examined in northern, central and southern Italy, it seemed to be one that would spare the civilian population many inconveniences. Indeed, in Comiso there is already a large area of government-owned land more than sufficient for the base and there is therefore no need for expropriations; there is an airport; and there is a good surrounding road network.

We repeat that Libya, Africa and the Middle East have nothing to do with it. Indeed, the Euromissiles are simply a decision taken to restore a military balance between East and West and to induce the Eastern bloc to negotiate. We also repeat that nobody will ever be able to launch a single missile from Comiso without prior Italian consent. Moreover, Italy is by nature and structure a peaceful nation that wants not the use of weapons but a widespread system of security and cooperation in Europe and the Mediterranean. Therefore, in his Turin speech deputy Berlinguer made several unjust claims about Italy with regard to the Euromissiles. He described it as an aggressive country, whereas everyone knows that for the past 3 years large numbers of Soviet SS-20 missiles have been targeted on Italian cities.

Deputy Berlinguer promises that he will urge the Italian Government not even to start work on the infrastructures for the Comiso base. In other words, he is announcing harsh opposition to the Italian bulldozers and construction workers who for 2 years will be working exclusively on hangars and houses; but he says nothing of the SS-20's. And not a word about the Italian Government's proposal, offering the USSR the abandonment of the cruise missiles (which will arrive, if they arrive, only in 1984) in exchange for the dismantlement of the SS-20's, of which there are already hundreds.

[illegible]

[illegible] "Do Propagandists Have Their Facts For Minister Lagorio?"

[illegible] in [illegible] NATO index. Defense Minister Lagorio accuses [illegible] Berlinguer of using "[illegible]" as a "means of propaganda" in his Turin speech. Lagorio claims that the Italian site chosen by the Italian Government was not in the [illegible], which would have preferred another location. According to Lagorio, "Europe, Africa and the Middle East have nothing to do with it." According to the minister, Berlinguer allegedly described Italy as "an aggressive country," charged "[illegible] since 1977 for the past 3 years large numbers of Soviet missiles have been targeted on Italian cities." Lagorio accuses Berlinguer of having failed to protest when the USSR deployed the SS-20's on its territory.

In an instance of "like" [illegible] propaganda [illegible], deputy Lagorio's article is [illegible] a [illegible] falsehoods. Where in Berlinguer's speech did he read that Italy is "the aggressive country" or even that "it envisages a war of aggression?" Anyone who read or heard the speech knows that it is not true. As minister of defense, Lagorio should at least know that both blocs's missiles in Europe have been targeted on their respective [illegible] not only for the past 3 years but for much longer, which is [illegible] that so [illegible] considered as dangerous. Last, he should not be unaware that no later than 2 years ago, the Communists asked the Italian Government to take initiatives in Moscow with a view to the deployment of the SS-20's being [illegible] so that negotiations could start right away on the reduction of all missile weapons in Europe, in case the Italian Government that declined to undertake such an initiative.

There is no document of our party, including Berlinguer's Turin speech, that does not state that we are opposed to the SS-20's, as well as the Pershing and cruise missiles. These are the facts.

But there is something else. Lagorio can very easily state that Africa and the Mediterranean have nothing to do with Comiso. A glance at the most modest map is enough to render his statements unconvincing. Moreover, the decision to start work on Comiso makes the Italian Government the only one of the NATO countries to have publicly embarked on the deployment of the new missiles on its own territory -- an act of diligence that cannot fail to appear to be a way of exerting pressure on the much more hesitant European allies.

As defense minister, Lagorio carried a great responsibility on his shoulders. It is therefore worrying that, instead of discussing the substance of the criticisms made of him and the government to which he belongs, he has decided to respond with propagandist polemics that bear little relation to the facts.

CRAXI ON TASKS IN PSI 'REGENERATION' PROGRAM

[Report on 10 September PSI Directorate meeting in Rome: "Organizational Foundations for Modern Party"]

[Text] The PSI Directorate meeting continued yesterday afternoon with the appointment of new chiefs for central departments, who were approved unanimously. The PSI secretary presented the Directorate with the Secretariat's proposals concerning the appointments to Directorate posts. In his speech, the secretary said: "The Directorate's task is to pursue the political objectives established by the Palermo congress and at the same time to advance the process of the regeneration of the party, its structures, its methods of action, its struggle platforms and its leading political personnel. The party regeneration process must embark on a more mature and far-reaching phase. It has advanced over the years and achieved major results. It has encountered much internal and external resistance and has not been without contradictions, turmoils and shortcomings. The new party Directorate's work must pursue a line of continuity and consistency with the postulates that we placed at the basis of socialist regeneration.

In general, Craxi continued, from the viewpoint of our organization, structure and working method, we must devote ourselves to four major modernizations. It is a matter of achieving objectives of regeneration and modernization of party regulations and policy and also in the field of associational relations and the media. We must open four major workshops.

Next, Craxi discussed the problems of the reform of party institutions, stressing the need for a task of indepth examination, revision, updating and enrichment of the policy platforms on which the party's political action is still based, and suggesting the convening of a national conference on policy.

Urging the development of the idea of an "open party," Craxi called for initiatives to facilitate a new kind of cooperative socialism, proceeding from a criticism of the party's present structures, its shortcomings in terms of administrative and oligarchical rigidity, and of certain negative aspects of insensitivity toward the real and spontaneous forces which characterize the complex and dialectical variety of society. In particular, the socialist secretary outlined a plan for a "socialist alliance" extending beyond the party sphere -- an initiative addressed to social and cultural forces, inspired by free cooperative socialism, which agree or can agree on democratic objectives of reform and regeneration which the PSI, within the context of its political, parliamentary and government responsibilities, can share, support and help to realize.

Last, Craxi broached the issue of relations with members, voters and the public from the viewpoint of communication, information and language.

CRAXI PROTESTS ARREST OF MOROCCAN LEFTISTS

PM241033 Rome AVANTI in Italian 17 Sep 81 p 20

[Excerpt] The arrest last Tuesday of the secretary and several members of the Moroccan Socialist Union of Popular Forces has brought a prompt reaction from the Italian Socialists.

Secretary Craxi has sent a telegram of protest to King Hassan, calling for the immediate release of Comrades Abderrahim Bouabid and Mohamed Mansour, respectively secretary general and Politburo member of the Moroccan Socialist Party, and of the other 200 socialist militants arrested during the summer following a general strike in Casablanca.

COURT SEES TERRORIST CONSPIRACY IN ATTACK ON POPE

[Text] Rome, 24 Sep (ANSA) -- Mehmet Ali Agca acted alone when he shot Pope John Paul II in St. Peter's Square on May 13, but the assassination attempt was prepared by a terrorist organization which still remains in the dark, according to the judges of Rome's First Court of Assizes which sentenced the Turkish would-be assassin to life imprisonment last June. A 51-page document motivating the sentence and signed by Judge Nino Abbate was only made public today. In it the court voiced the opinion that Agca was the executor of a plan meant to upset the social fabric and world public opinion.

"At this particularly dark and difficult time in human history" an attack on the head of the church who is a universal reference point in efforts on behalf of peace and harmony becomes a fearfully violent action capable of upsetting social balances and of shaking public opinion, the document continued. The shooting of the Pope was meant to set off a chain reaction of destabilizing events, especially in a country like Italy which has long been plagued by terrorism. For the Rome judges, Agca was neither a religious fanatic nor an isolated assassin, but merely the tip of an iceburg of occult forces having illiberal aims.

At this point, the document recalled the history of Agca's terrorist activities, particularly the killing of Turkish journalist Abdi Ipecki, head of the MILLIYET daily. It was also noted that he escaped from the jail where he was serving a life sentence, thanks to "enormous complicity" on the outside. The document ended with an appeal to investigators to do their best to uncover those who armed Agca's hand.

Newspaper Disagrees

[Text] Rome, 28 Sep (ANSA) -- A leading Rome newspaper argued today that Mehmet Ali Agca was a lone adventure-seeker when he tried to assassinate Pope John Paul II last May, refuting the conspiracy theory advanced by the Rome court which sentenced the Turk to life impriosonment in June.

Rome's wide-circulation IL MESSAGGERO daily challenged the credibility of the court's opinion that Agca was merely the tip of an iceberg of a "powerful" international force out to upset the world's social system on these grounds: "Would a powerful international organization send a killer to Rome who was not only well-known and wanted by the law, but who had gone so far as to publicly flaunt his homicidal intentions, to commit the assassination of the century?"

Such carelessness, the paper asserted, does not seem fitting to "the complexity of the motivation" the court attributes to the "mysterious" masterminds of the May 13 assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square. The court, which publicly released a 51-page document last week explaining the sentence it handed down in June, described Agca as the executor of a far-reaching plot to "de-stabilize" the Western world.

Backing up its own argument today, IL MESSAGGERO also cited the "rudimentary" fashion of Agca's shooting spree, noting that he acted like a "kamikaze" who was fully aware that he would have been caught and, possibly, lynched by the mob. "Would a powerful organization take such a big risk of having its killer captured", the daily asked, "or would it have arranged for a safer system, like the use of a rifle with a telescopic range-finder?"

The paper's conclusion was that the conspiracy theory stemmed from the court's own deductions, without any real basis for certainty. "As things now stand", IL MESSAGGERO asserted, "it is rather improbable that the prosecution's second round of probes will come up with any findings to uncover Ali Agca's fantasmal commanders."

PCP HITS PS 'DISTORTION,' RIGHTWARD SHIFT

PM241545 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 17 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] Socialist Party [PS] leaders, particularly the secretary general and the press supporting that party -- specifically, PORTUGAL HOJE -- have recently been persisting in a set of fantastic accusations against the PCP. The strange repetition of these accusations has a significance and conceals very specific intentions, which were particularly clearly exposed and uncovered in a recent PCP information and propaganda section communique, which states:

1. It is increasingly clear to public opinion that the attacks and distortions launched by the PS concerning the PCP and its policy are no more than a smokescreen aimed at concealing the PS' current course at the very moment when it is shelving the announced "fall offensive" and adopting toward the "Democratic Alliance" a stance of cooperation which is as dedicated as it is shameful. In fact the PS' desperate efforts to attribute to the PCP fantastic responsibilities for difficulties in realizing solutions of agreement among the democratic forces as a whole are a clear propagandist diversionary maneuver aimed at preparing an atmosphere which will provide apparent justification for its actual agreements with the "Democratic Alliance," specifically concerning revision of the constitution. Just as in other situations in the past, the PS leaders are resorting to falsification of the PCP's policy, anticommunism and the distortion of the nature of the differences really existing, as a means of lending credibility to their planned alliances with the right.

2. It is extremely unfortunate and in glaring bad taste for PS leaders or bodies to seek to level accusations against the PCP on international policy. It is a widely accepted fact that the PS is the most pro-American and Atlanticist of all the kindred parties of capitalist Europe, that the PS does not lift a finger to criticize the Reagan administration's aggressive and reactionary policy and that the PS is in favor of the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe, does not oppose the manufacture of the neutron bomb and endorses geostrategic conceptions justifying U.S. military interventions against the peoples' liberation struggle in various parts of the world.

3. The frequent accusation PS leaders are now leveling that the PCP would prefer to combat the PS and not the "Democratic Alliance" is a ridiculous trick which facts directly refute. It raises no doubts for anybody, not even for the PS leaders themselves, that the PCP is the only major democratic party which is combating the "Democratic Alliance," its governments and its disastrous policy firmly and consistently and in all spheres of national life and that it is devoting all its energies to the aim of ousting the "Democratic Alliance" from the government and realizing a democratic turnabout.

It is precisely in the name of this great popular and democratic aim and in the name of greater effectiveness in the democratic struggle against the "Democratic Alliance" that the PCP's criticisms of the defeatist and collaborationist course which the PS is adopting with respect to the "Democratic Alliance" are justified, necessary and essential. It is precisely in support of unity among the democratic forces and of making viable a democratic alternative to the "Democratic Alliance" that it is imperative for the proponents of that unity and that alternative to unmask the plans of the opponents of democratic unity and of the protagonists of agreements and undertakings with the "Democratic Alliance" parties. Nobody can expect the PCP through passivity, resignation or silence to become an indirect accomplice of plans which would only help reaction's consolidation in the government and entail new and graver dangers for democracy.

4. In the extremely grave situation which the people, the country and democracy are experiencing, Portuguese democrats cannot fail to reflect seriously on the actual significance of the PS' current course. The PS leaders, and in particular its secretary general, with the "Democratic Alliance" in the government, incessantly repeat that they will form no alliances with the PCP -- with the great party of the antifascist resistance, with the party which took part prominently in achieving the great people's gains and in building the democratic constitutional system, and which recently, alongside the entire socialist electorate, made a crucial contribution to the extraordinary democratic victory achieved 7 December over the "Democratic Alliance," Soares Carneiro and the plan to subvert democracy.

But on the other hand, the PS leaders are decreasingly concealing their readiness to ally themselves and reach agreement with "Democratic Alliance" parties -- with the parties which include heirs of and those nostalgic for fascism, with the parties which wanted Soares Carneiro to be elected and which in the government are conducting a hateful war against the democratic system, the gains of 25 April [1974] and the Portuguese people's living conditions and interests.

The workers' struggle, the Portuguese democrats' unitary sentiments and their common determination to defeat the "Democratic Alliance" and guarantee a democratic alternative have greater strength than the PS leaders' plans and will eventually have the last word on the solution necessary for the defense and continuation of the Portugal of April.

FISHING BOAT ATTACKED AT SEA BY POLISARIO

[Text] Lisbon, 28 Sep (AFP) -- A Portuguese fisherman was killed and three others wounded in a weekend attack by a Polisario Front commando on a Portuguese fishing boat, maritime authorities said today.

The attack on the Porto Ceu took place Saturday in territorial waters claimed by the Western Sahara nationalist movement, they said.

The vessel was now heading for its home port of Sines, some 150 kms (about 90 miles) south of Lisbon. The three wounded had been taken aboard a Soviet fishing boat which was caring for them.

In a previous attack by the Saharan organisation on a Portuguese fishing boat, the Rio Vouga in June last year, the vessel was seized and 15 crew members taken hostage.

A month after that, and following the release of the 15, a Portuguese Government emissary at Tindouf, in Algerian Sahara, officially recognised Polisario's self-proclaimed Saharan state.

A subsequent denial by the Portuguese Foreign Ministry that there had been any official recognition led to contention that observers here believed could only be renewed by the latest incident.

The Western Sahara, a former Spanish colony, is claimed by Morocco.

The Ministry of Defense says this station presents no danger and could not be considered as a target in the event of war.

FRG'S CARSTENS BACKS SPAIN'S ENTRY INTO EC

[Text] Madrid, 28 Sep (DPA) -- In view of Federal President Karl Carstens the European Community is incomplete until Spain joins it. At a banquet given by King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia for Carstens and his wife Veronica in the royal palace in Madrid this evening, Carstens stressed that the Federal Republic thus called for a speedy continuace of and successful conclusion to the negotiations on [Spain's] entry. The community would thus grow together more and more and assume a politically clearer unified stance.

The federal president paid particular tribute to the positive part King Juan Carlos played in the process of democratization in Spain. "We congratulate the Spanish people on having a monarch," he said, "who in difficult times safeguarded constitutional order, who makes every effort to strengthen and reinforce it, who works for it daily and gives his people confidence in the future." The leading politicians in Bonn had at the time welcomed the firm attitude of the monarch during the attempted putsch in Madrid in February.

Carstens emphasized that Spaniards and the Germans were united by a faith in the value of democracy born from bitter experience even though in different ways; both peoples had been denied the exercise of citizens' rights in the recent past.

Calvo-Sotelo, Genscher Meet

[Text] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo held a 40-minute meeting at Moncloa Palace with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who is accompanying the German president on his 3-day official visit to Spain. On leaving the meeting with the prime minister, the German minister summed up this first official visit by a German president to Spain in the following way:

[Begin Genscher recording, in German, fading into translation] We in the FRG attribute great importance to this visit because it highlights the traditional friendship between the two countries and also because it is of capital importance given that this is a time of intense negotiations for Spanish accession to the EC. As you all know, the FRG Government has always come out in favor of Spain being incorporated rapidly into the EC. [end recording]

At the end of his meeting with Calvo-Sotelo, the German foreign minister went on to Santa Cruz Palace, where he is due to meet Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca.

TA NEA REPORTS NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN CYPRUS ISSUE

[Excerpt] Sudden developments are appearing in the Cyprus issue, including an undercurrent at the UN headquarters in New York with determined -- described as hard -- intervention by Western quarters, the United States in particular, and many circles do not rule out steps toward a final solution.

According to our permanent correspondent in New York, a fact indicative of the "hot" situation prevailing around the Cyprus issue, and a new element in the development of the issue, is Moscow's strong interest manifested by its invitation to the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Gobbi, to visit. Gobbi will visit the Soviet capital as soon as he completes his consultations with Waldheim and clarifies the issue of the so-called new ideas of the UN secretary general.

The Soviet invitation to Gobbi is interpreted as an intention on Moscow's part to become more actively involved in the Cyprus issue and as an expression of the Kremlin's desire to be immediately informed of developments. It should be remembered that President Kiprianou will visit Moscow in early November and it is rumored that preparations are underway for a Kiprianou-Reagan meeting on 15 October.

In any event, consultations over Waldheim's "new ideas" are continuing at the UN headquarters in an unprecedented manner, our permanent correspondent points out.

DAILY CAUTIONS AGAINST WALDHEIM 'IDEAS' ON CYPRUS

NC232131 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 23 Sep 81 p 5

[Editorial: "What Is the Aim?"]

[Text] Recent developments -- or rather the lack of developments -- in the Cyprus problem present certain rather strange symptoms that are worth drawing our attention. Let us takethings in sequence.

As is well known, early last August the well-known Turkish proposals were submitted (after a lapse of 7 years). They had been preceded by a propaganda drum beating and the cultivation of an atmosphere of optimism. However, it was a case of "much ado about nothing." The Turkish proposals on the territorial issue were disappointing and apparently proved wrong relevant promises which had been given behind the scenes by the Turkish foreign minister to his Greek counterpart. "We expect bolder steps," Mitsotakis typically said the day before yesterday in his interview with representatives of the Greek and foreign press. The Turkish proposals only established the current "de facto" situati ., that is, Cyprus' partition territorially and by population at about the current "Attila line" and ceded very little territory.

The Greek Cypriot side submitted proposals on the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem which, however, were not accepted by the Turkish Cypriots. Consequently, once again there is an impasse in the intercommunal talks.

And, in view of the failure of this round of talks -- the natural consequence and continuation of which will be the discussion of the Cyprus issue at this year's UN General Assembly with the inevitable conclusion being the passing of a resolution which will be crushing for Turkey -- talk has started for a possible initiative by UN Secretary General Waldheim "with his own ideas" which, according to rumors, perhaps "could give an impetus to the intercommunal dialogue" and "create new possibilities."

Let us hope so. But our attention is being drawn to the fact that if these "ideas" are submitted, the Cyprus Government will not be able to ask for the discussion of the Cyprus problem by the UN General Assembly and the passing of the relevant resolution....

One more thing: Turkish Cypriot leaders recently have been expressing themselves with unexpected optimism regarding a generally acceptable solution of the Cyprus problem -- almost with certainty. Specifically, some days ago and after his meeting with the UN secretary general in New York, Denktas spoke optimistically concerning prospects for the solution of the Cyprus problem in the near future.

On what is this "optimism" based since the intercommunal dialogue is in a deadlock, in fact, because of the Turkish side's insistence on the freezing and legalization of the "faits accomplis?" What element can possible "ideas" by Waldheim offer that would make Turkey change one of the basic goals of its "national" policy without the existence of the objective prerequisites, that is, pressure by the strong of the West and the East on whom Turkey depends or Turkey fears and who are in a position of being listened to?

The questions stand to reason as long as Turkish personalities, both from Turkey and Cyprus, do not cease declaring that they definitely view the occupied part of the Megalonisos as a Turkish province and do not conceal their aim for the conquest of the "rest" of Cyprus as our correspondent in Nicosia, Khr. Katsambas explained yesterday in an exceptionally detailed and documented report.

What we are afraid of, or suspect, is that through the unexpected and undocumented "optimism" of the Turkish Cypriot leaders and the "new ideas" of the UN secretary general the foiling of the discussion of the Cyprus issue by the UN General Assembly and the passing of the relevant resolution is being sought. We hope we are wrong...

Therefore, let Waldheim submit his "ideas." However, if his ideas do not have substantive and practical continuation by the middle or end of November and if no true intention has been ascertained on the part of the Turkish side for a generally acceptable solution of the Cyprus problem, which would not merely establish the "faits accomplis," the discussion of the issue by the UN General Assembly must in any case be sought.

So far, the Greek Cypriot side has manifested the state of being conciliatory to the extent of misconstruction and it has attended the consecutive "rounds" of the intercommunal talks with indisputable good will and constructive intention but it has always collided with the other side's stalling and bad faith. Despite the deadlocks, the Greek Cypriot side even now continues not to dispute the dialogue until the last margin has been exhausted -- so that the world may clearly see who is responsible for the deadlock and the possible disruption of the dialogue.

Everything in this world has a limit and someday all margins are exhausted....

AKEL SECRETARY SPEAKS AT MIDEAST CP CONFERENCE

NC270933 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 27 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The British sovereign bases in Cyprus are being used in the NATO military exercises in the eastern Mediterranean between Crete and Cyprus, the Cypriot communist AKEL party leader Mr E. Papaioannou has claimed and he demanded the abolition of the bases and withdrawal of all foreign troops from the island.

"The moment the Turkish occupation troops and all foreign troops leave, the moment the British bases are disbanded and Cyprus is demilitarised, the Cyprus problem could be regarded as already settled," he said.

Mr Papaioannou was speaking at a recent meeting of communist and labour parties from the eastern Mediterranean, the Near and Middle East and the Red Sea. The text of his speech was released yesterday.

The statement does not give the exact date or place where the meeting was held but says that communist and labour parties from Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, Jordan, Iraq, Israel, Cyprus (AKEL), Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria and Turkey took part.

In a declaration after the meeting, released by AKEL last week, the parties accused the imperialists of being responsible for world tension and charged Chinese leaders with helping the "aggressive policies of the Pentagon and NATO."

About the Iran-Iraq war the declaration blamed the Iraqi side for "starting it" at a time when "Iran was carrying a hard struggle against Armenian imperialism."

It expressed "solidarity with the people and the revolutionary Government of Afghanistan" and accused "NATO imperialists" of trying to make Cyprus a NATO base and exercising pressure on Greece and Turkey.

The AKEL leader Mr E. Papaioannou said that the Cyprus dispute was not a conflict between Greek and Turkish Cypriots as the "imperialists" made it to appear.

It was the British who first spoke about partition of Cyprus during the colonial administration and the Americans followed up with their Acheson plan providing for division of Cyprus between Greece and Turkey, he said.

Mr Papaioannou said the Cyprus problem had two aspects, the internal aspect which should be settled in talks between the two communities under UN auspices and the external aspect which concerned the guarantees for a truly independent state and which should be discussed at an international conference under UN auspices (as the Soviet Union had proposed).

The AKEL leader repeated his earlier views that the present guarantees by Greece, Turkey and Britain be replaced by "reliable international guarantees" through the Security Council or otherwise, with abolition of the British bases, removal of all foreign troops and total demilitarisation. He again invited the Turkish leadership to abandon plans for a "confederation" and promised that if the Turks really want a "bi-regional federation based on UN resolutions and top level agreements" it could be sure that the Greek Cypriot side would positively respond.

RALLIS DELIVERS CAMPAIGN SPEECH AT MITILINI

NC261741 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 26 Sep 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] Addressing a huge gathering at Mitilini last night, Prime Minister Rallis stressed that the country's orientation toward the West is the only sound national choice. Communicating with the people of this border island in the Aegean, the prime minister mainly referred to questions of foreign policy, stressing that both the positions and the actions of the New Democracy government exclusively aim at safeguarding the country's national security and territorial integrity in contrast to the dangerous policy advocated by PASOK which leads to the weakening of defense power and the loss of Greece's international mainstays. Mr Rallis particularly analyzed the politicomilitary advantages from Greece's participation in NATO and from its accession to the EEC, stressing that any revision of these choices would upset the present balance of power in the Aegean at Greece's expense. The main points of his speech in connection with the national issues are as follows:

We are a great people in respect to civilization, virtues, and sacrifices. But, unfortunately, we are small in number; we are a special people, but alone without close racial ties in the world.

Of course, this would not have mattered if we were living in another part of the globe. But we are living here, at this corner of the earth and sea -- the glorious but dangerous corner. Here, at this meeting point of three continents, with compact people of similar nationalities, powerful but rival military blocs meet; international antagonism is developed; huge economic and political interests conflict. We are a crossroad where there permanently exists the threat of a general war because of the conditions prevailing in the Middle East.

But we are neither a great power nor one of the wealthy nations able to maintain our balance in defensive armament in the Aegean or wherever else it may be needed. Thus, since 1952, all parties -- despite the communist party's reaction -- have sided in favor of and we continue to firmly stand for NATO, the defense alliance of the free republics. And this sound orientation has been -- and continues to be -- the only sound national choice.

This is so because NATO gave Western Europe the possibility of a secured economic, political and cultural prosperity. It has safeguarded Europe against interventions which have repeatedly occured elsewhere and which are threatening to occur today.

At the same time, NATO has stopped the pressure from the north. It has offered a feeling of security. It has covered our defense expenditure and has thus relieved us in our drive for economic revival. And today, it has secured for us the necessary defensive balance of power in the Aegean, for as long as the Greek-Turkish dialogue that is taking place does not arrive at a solution. And amid the current heavy international situation, we feel safer within its [NATO's] ranks.

Recently this feeling of national security has been further strengthened because of our accession to the EEC, to tomorrow's united Europe, the present third economic power of the world. In it we made decisions on an equal basis with other big states -- our associates -- not solely about our fate and but also about the fate of other states, and even the entire world.

I am not going to occupy your time with the other political and economic benefits resulting from our accession to the EEC, such as the strengthening of our democratic institutions, the elevation of our international prestige, the securing of the biggest and richest market in the world for our products, the subsidization of our products, the grant of income assistance, the generous loans for development projects and so forth.

However, I shall dwell on something of interest to the nation, but particularly of interest to you and to our border islands; the Fourcade report. I am pointing out, and I am stressing that this is another benefit -- at least political and psychological, at present, for our country -- which is an inevitable consequence of our accession -- and stay of course -- within the EEC.

This is how the question stands: According to the community's legislation and the Rome convention, the EEC is obligated to clearly define its customs borders after the accession of every new member. Thus, what happened in the past with the accession of Britain, Ireland and Denmark was repeated in our case as well. The EC Council of Ministers consulted the European Parliament. Mrs Fourcade, on the instructions from the latter, prepared a report that was unanimously approved by all the members of the European Parliament, without any reservation, with the exception of one: that of the KKE representative!

Thus, this report recognizes what we have been maintaining: One, our sovereign right to expand our territorial waters to 12 miles; two, that the islands have a continental shelf and sea zone. But if these overlap with neighboring countries then the middle line is considered the border.

Of course the decision of the European Parliament does not definitely solve the question. But it indisputably strengthens our declared positions and we benefit politically, psychologically and diplomatically.

At this particular period of international uncertainty, when states seek mainstays for their defense, our opponents promise to take Greece out of NATO. For our opponents, NATO is our great enemy. However, today's Socialist France remains firmly within NATO and encourages Spain to join it. The other day, on 5 September, France's foreign minister, Mr Cheysson, said in Madrid: "NATO symbolizes the defense of basic principles, I would say of the Christian principles, of the principles of civilization against totalitarianism."

Thus, we leave NATO, but where should we go? Shall we hang in the air? And they don't just disregard the dangers of isolation; they also disregard the fallacy of the stand which they support, because they know that the void created by Greece within the ranks of the alliance would inevitably be filled by Turkey.

But by withdrawing from NATO, not only would we remain without defensive mainstays, we would also deprive our armed forces of weapon systems of sophisticated technology. No country can be supplied with such weapons from the free market. They are supplied by the few sources that exist in the world, thanks to political and defense ties with these sources.

Alone and unarmed -- this is where we would end up if PASOK were to come to power and withdraw us from NATO. And I ask: What would happen with the balance of power in the Aegean to which the Greek people justifiably attach fundamental importance? I also ask: How can such a development be compatible with Western policy on a balance of power, as I have said earlier?

I would also like to consider another burning problem; our differences with Turkey. We avoided a likely clash between our two countries which would have had inestimable tragic consequences for them and definitely for the free world. And we began a dialogue with Turkey which has contributed to the improvement of the climate in the relations of the two countries. This dialogue has not yet led to a solution of the basic problems, the main one being the demarcation of the continental shelf in the Aegean. From the start, we maintained that the solution of the continental shelf can only be based on the Law of the Sea, which has been worked on for some years by a UN conference. Among the principles introduced by this law is the right of the islands to half the continental shelf. For us this principle is indisputable. Besides, we are not asking for something that would be unreasonable or contrary to international law and international practice.

If the talks which we are continuing fail to arrive at a solution, the only outlet left would be a recourse to international justice. This procedure has been followed by many European and non-European countries. We hope some day Turkey will admit that what Konstandinos Karamanlis proposed 6 years ago is the only fair and honorable way for the peaceful settlement of the problem.

As you see, in handling this question there has never been a question of giving away any national right. And the opposition knows this perfectly well. All the things to the contrary that it hurls against the government of New Democracy at various times simply prove that it is dangerously inconsiderate -- not to use a worse term -- the way it faces our national questions.

I would prefer that the means which our country possesses for its defense would not become the object of electoral exploitation. The national defense should have been kept above controversy by everyone. But on this point as well, our views radically differ from Mr Papandreou's notions. And since he deemed it advisable to refer to nuclear weapons, it would have been an unforgivable failure on my part not to clear up the confusion which he is intentionally trying to create among the Greek people.

Thus, I say the following: The current defense system in our country has not changed in anything since the time of the Yeoryios Papandreou government. And the system that has existed in the past was known and accepted by Mr Andreas Papandreou, a member of that government. Nothing has changed since then, while the allies have not even suggested any change.

Besides, with his promise to exert every effort to persuade the other European countries as well to remove nuclear weapons from their territory, he simply avoids a vital dilemma, because I cannot imagine that he overestimates this much his abilities to persuade the foreigners.

In addition, Mr Rallis referred to the measures which his government has taken or plans to take for the development of our border islands, particularly Mitilini.

RIZOSPASTIS: KKE'S FLORAKIS GIVES PRESS INTERVIEW

NC241721 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 24 Sep 81 p 3

[Excerpts] A strong interest was generated by yesterday's press interview granted by the general secretary of the Central Committee of the KKE, Kharilaos Florakis, which was organized by the association of foreign press correspondents. The interview was attended by many foreign correspondents and political columnists from Athens newspapers who asked numerous questions. Florakis explained the party's basic positions on problems which demand solutions or are being discussed in this preelection period and answered questions on many aspects of the international and domestic situation.

[Question] UPI: We who do not belong to your camp wonder why your party has never conducted any public criticism against the Soviet Union.... What will happen if you ever come to authority?

[Answer] Florakis: Rigos [UPI Athens correspondent] did not complete his question. Perhaps he wanted to add that since we do not criticize the Soviet Union we are subjugated to it. Let him forgive me for this interpretation of his innermost thinking. I would, once again, like to explain that we have never maintained that everything is perfect in the Soviet Union and in the other socialist countries. They struggle, they erect a new society, they are opening up new avenues, and it is natural that there should be difficulties as well as contradictions and mistakes.

Naturally we also have our own thoughts, observations and evaluations. At the same time, however, we will not place the bourgeois class in the position of moderator over these evaluations and thoughts.

We will not place the bourgeois class either in the position of prosecutor or defense counsel over any views we may have on one or the other matters related to the socialist countries. We express these views in the bipartite or multilateral meetings we have with the brother communist parties.

[Question] BBC: Since you do not want moderators then who is it that you become moderators over the bourgeois class and criticize the United States of America?

[Answer] Florakis: Woe to us if we, as a communist party, become moderators over the domestic disputes of the ruling class. We are the accusers of the ruling class and we will remain its determined opponents until we eradicate the ruling class as a political form.

[Question] AKROPOLIS: Do you have specific reasons to believe that there will be no free expression of the people's will in the coming election? (Note: In a statement Florakis underlined that apart from the election system itself the ruling class also utilizes other methods for adulterating the election results.)

[Answer] Florakis: What I stated referred to the past. There are specific examples in the past and I do not believe it is worth our while to deal with them here. Specifically in the forthcoming election, over and above the rubbing election system, over and above the permanent elements which work toward the alteration of the peoples' will -- something which more or less happens in all capitalist countries -- there are also a series of other indications. Naturally, we do not have specific evidence to indicate that this election will be the same as the 1961 election. We do, however, have certain examples of terrorist activities and certain information about terrorist actions being prepared against followers of the KKE.

[Question] Soviet Television: I would like to ask your view on what are the critical points of the international and the Greek situation and how these are related to your own election program.

[Answer] Florakis: Naturally there are a great number of issues which one could state: they all cross at one and only one point: a point which has a universal character, a point which, although it has a political character, does not differentiate between political views, between rich and poor, between exploiters and exploited. This is the problem of peace, the problem of avoiding nuclear calamity.

When we raise the question that the Balkans and the Mediterranean must become zones of peace, free of nuclear weapons and missiles, this is also a contribution to the cause of peace. As you can see, the problem of peace is very closely related to the problem of the national independence of each country.

[Question] MAKEDHONIA: In the eventuality that after the election the KKE was called upon to participate in a PASOK-KKE government, according to the French model, to what degree would it be prepared to make concessions and how would it face the dilemma: should there be a tangible change now or should it make a 180 degree turn, or something of this sort, in its political line?

[Answer] Florakis: You must bear in mind that when one party decides to cooperate with another party it does not start by enforcing its own policy exclusively, because then cooperation is impossible. In such a case this would not be cooperation but the subjugation of one party under the other. Cooperation means finding the common points and then cooperating with the other party on them.

What are these common points in this specific case? There must be a policy of national independence, democratization, and the country's economic development for the benefit of the workers. Naturally this is on general lines. It will be necessary to examine how and under what specific measures this policy of national independence would be expressed, because there are certain questions.

This also affects the policy of democratization or the policy of economic development. Naturally, it would be untimely for one to furnish an answer in advance on these issues because all these things will depend on a series of factors and, primarily, upon the balance of forces, particularly upon the extent of the election defeat of the rightwing.

In any eventuality, the definition of these common points will also be the topic of possible discussions which will be necessary for such cooperation. What is of primary interest to us at this moment, however, is the operation of each party, the joint action of all the democratic forces toward the conduct of genuine elections and toward guaranteeing smooth democratic evolution in our country.

[Question] New York TIMES: Will your party be prepared, after the election, to give a vote of confidence to a possible PASOK government without any exchange for this and only for the purpose of preventing the formation of a N. Democracy government?

[Answer] Florakis: What do you mean without any exchange? Are we traders?

[Question] New York TIMES: I mean positions within the government or an agreement on a joint program.

[Answer] Florakis: Generally, we claim the administration of the country, whether on our own or together with other parties. This is the goal, the aspiration of every political party -- to govern the country. We claim this more than anyone else because we are the party with the longest history, the party which has been fighting for the peoples' rights for the past 60 years.

[Question] BBC: Today, after the publication of PASOK's program, do you consider that it leaves open this course you have referred to?

[Answer] Florakis: You would be helping me a great deal if you quoted for me the basic positions of PASOK's program. There are certain PASOK declarations which accept different interpretations. This is why, earlier, I stated that we should not proceed further, that we should deal with all these problems specifically after the election.

[Question] BBC: In the eventuality that PASOK will be the government of the future and it considers it essential to have your support, both inside and out of the government, will there be negotiations? Will you then ask PASOK for explanations?

[Answer] Florakis: Naturally this could take place both during discussions but also during debate within the Chamber of Deputies. Any government will have to come forth with its policy statement and to ask for a vote of confidence. If unclear points continue to exist at the time, then we will certainly ask for explanations, officially and openly.

[Question] APOGEVMATINI: By participating and by receiving 17 percent of the vote, doesn't the KKE take away votes from other forces which will receive a lower percentage? Consequently, doesn't the KKE in this way harm other forces, or are the forces of change concentrated exclusively within PASOK and the KKE?

[Answer] Florakis: By taking part in the second distribution of seats, the KKE will not harm any other party by one single vote. On the contrary, it will again be losing because the distribution of seats during the second distribution is not on the basis of the remaining votes that are counted, but on the total of votes received. This is why I stated that by participating in the second distribution of seats, it "virtually" abolishes the election law and it basically implements the simple proportional system of election.

More specifically: There are 300 seats. If the KKE receives 17 percent of the vote, then, under the simple proportional system, it would have received 51 seats.

Now, under the reinforced proportional system and with the KKE's participation in the second distribution of seats, on the basis of the 17 percent it would receive 41 seats, perhaps more. In practice, even with the 17 percent we could not receive the total strength which belongs to us.

[Question] MESIMVRINI: IZVESTIYA reported and RIZOSPASTIS republished the report that NATO's maneuvers will influence the democratic forces during this preelection period. Can you explain to us in what way the democratic forces could truly be influenced by the NATO maneuvers?

[Answer] Florakis: One of the primary questions is the position of the parties toward NATO. This is a question which separates the various parties. When, therefore, fleets and troops make their appearance near or inside Greece on the eve of elections -- if you wish we also have yesterday's visit by NATO commanding officers -- they most certainly want to influence. This is as if they say to the people: Look at this, why do you struggle, why do you want to leave NATO, we are right here, do you not see what we have? It is, naturally, another question that the people of Greece will not be disoriented by such methods.

[Question] REUTER: Aren't the Soviet maneuvers in the Baltic conducted for the same parallel purpose, to pressure the Poles?

[Answer] Florakis: Where would you like the USSR to conduct its maneuvers? Which countries are in the Baltic?

[Response] REUTER: Poland for example...

[Answer] Florakis: Have you forgotten the Soviet Union? Have you forgotten that the Baltic is the USSR's European sea? Where would you like the USSR to conduct its maneuvers, outside of New York?

[Question] London TIMES: To what degree do you believe that foreign affairs will primarily influence this year's election, or will it be domestic affairs which will influence the voter?

[Answer] Florakis: I stated earlier that Greece is not situated on some foreign planet. The international situation certainly influences domestic developments and vice versa. In any eventuality, I do not believe that international issues are the primary deciding factor. The main and decisive issue will be decided within our own country.

[Question] TO VIMA: I would like to ask you if the participation of the KKE in a government in Greece, under the current conditions, would create a grave problem?

[Answer] Florakis: In any eventuality, we do not ignore the fact that in such cases problems are created, not only through the participation of the KKE but also by the changing of the rightwing and its replacement in the government by another party. The problem does not consist of the prospect that there will be difficulties and reactions so that we may be forced to withdraw. The problem is to discover these difficulties and to deal with them. Any different logic exclusively leads to the perpetuation of the rightwing in our country's position of authority.

[Question] "AZ" Vienna [as published]: What is the social foundation of PASOK? The KKE represents the working class. What does PASOK represent?

[Answer] Florakis: PASOK proclaims it is a movement of the unprivileged Greeks and it says that the unprivileged today are the workers, the farmers, the professionals, artisans, the businessmen. Perhaps beyond this list there may also be a percentage of the great capital which at this very moment does not feel very privileged. More information on this point should be sought from PASOK itself because from one viewpoint Mavros himself may be unprivileged, since he is not participating in the country's administration....

PAPANDREOU CONTESTS FLORAKIS' ELECTION REMARKS

[Text] An indirect Papandreou answer to Florakis brought the smouldering PASOK-KKE confrontation to front-center stage yesterday.

Speaking at Serrai during his tour yesterday, Papandreou stated: "PASOK will not require the support of any other party in the Chamber of Deputies which will emerge following the 18 October elections in order to form a government. The people will give a crushing majority to PASOK, enabling it to implement the program for change on its own strength."

This answer was in reply to Florakis' description -- in his interview at the foreign press center the other day -- that PASOK's program includes only vague generalities which anyone can interpret in any way one may wish. Florakis also stressed he would support a PASOK government "if it did not block the road to social change" and that there can be no change without the KKE.

These developments are a sequel to an "undeclared" war between the two opposition parties. PASOK believes it will increase the percentage of its strength to the degree that it will be able to deprive the KKE of a considerable number of votes. This "battle" at the level of candidates and leading cadres opened with the start of the election campaign, but the leaders of the two parties always tried to keep it low key.

The other day's harsh -- as well as ironic -- Florakis attack against PASOK gave new dimensions to the confrontation. Florakis even defined Mavros as "unprivileged" -- in the sense that he does not share in authority -- also hinting that PASOK has been converted into a bourgeois party which cannot claim leftist votes.

This climaxing of the situation and the severity of the confrontation mostly favors the KKE. This is the reason why this party has gone on the offensive. Any tension in the political atmosphere which also creates the impression that the leftists are persecuted and oppressed -- the interpretation given to Florakis' mention of terrorist acts against the KKE -- favors the communist party. It creates the belief among communists that they are being persecuted and oppressed, as they were in the past, with their rallying around the party as a direct result.

This is also the reason why Papandreou systematically avoids tension and, by contrast, why he cultivates a mild climate together with the impression that he is the sole representative of the opposition. It is the belief within PASOK that the milder the climate the greater will be the number of votes deserting the KKE and moving over to PASOK.

Although generally this confrontation covers the entire country, it is stronger in specific districts where the KKE is competing with PASOK for chamber seats. In addition to the large first and second districts of Athens and the second district of Thessaloniki, the confrontation is particuarly harsh in the first and second districts of Piraevs, in Larissa, Volos, Mytillini and Iraklion.

In all these districts, even a small movement of votes from one party to the other can considerably influence the distribution of Chamber of Deputies seats. The KKE is well aware that the more seats it wins, the stronger will be its ability to frustrate the formation of a self-supporting government by any one of the two large parties, thus turning itself into an arbiter of the situation within the Chamber of Deputies.

INTERIOR MINISTRY ON DRIVERS RETURNED FROM IRAQ

[Excerpt] Seventeen [as received] Turkish International Highway Transport [TIR] drivers who were kidnapped after being attacked by terrorists in Iraq have been saved and have been handed over to Turkish authorities. The Interior Ministry has announced that the 17 Turks were saved as a result of an operation organized by the Iraqi security forces and that some terrorists were killed and some wounded during the operation.

Interior Ministry Under Secretary Rifat Kaplan made a statement to the Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] saying that the incident in which 7 TIR trucks were burned and the Turkish drivers kidnapped near the village of (?Ismailive) in Iraq was reported to the ministry on 25 September. He said that demarches were made to the Iraqi border authorities.

He said: The district governors of Cizre and Silopi, at a meeting, requested that the Iraqi border authorities investigate the incident, that our citizens be found and returned to Turkey immediately, that the culprits be captured and punished, that our citizens be compensated, and that the necessary security measures be taken in highways used by Turkish trucks.

The Iraqi authorities confirmed the incident and said that all efforts will be exerted to save our citizens. They added that the perpetrators of the incident were members of divisive organizations known to the government who aim at disrupting Turkish-Iraq friendship. They handed over to our delegation a list of names and license plates following an investigation. The 17 Turkish citizens were handed over to the Turkish authorities safe and sound at 1000 this morning. The Iraqi authorities said that our citizens were saved following an armed clash with the terrorists. They added that some of the terrorists were killed and some wounded.

AIR FORCE COMMANDER REPORTS ON RECENT CRASHES

[Text] Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya has said that every means is employed to find the reasons for the plane crashes that occurred on 22 and 23 September in Thrace, which caused the death of three officers and 40 soldiers and NCO's. General Sahinkaya said in a news conference in Ankara this evening that both crashes caused great suffering. Pointing out that innumerable plane crashes happen in the world, killing not only the pilots but many people on land or on the sea, General Sahinkaya said that these were the results of unfortunate coincidences. He added: Plane crashes can have hundreds of reasons. Unfortunately, little or no evidence is left at the end of such accidents and this necessitates involved investigations that take a very long time. The investigation of plane crashes has become an independent field of work, knowledge and speciality. All the big and little pieces which remain from planes are analyzed in laboratories and sometimes countries which have a higher level of technology are called in for help. This practice is followed not only in our country but in the entire world.

We are searching for the causes of both plane crashes by resorting to every means. We might need time.

General Sahinkaya pointed out that the planes that participated in the exercises in Thrace were carrying out the duty of close air support. he added: This duty is carried out when the ground units faced by the enemy need strong supportive fire. The targets of this action are the enemy personnel, vehicles, tanks, artillery and so on. Such attacks are guided from land. The unfortunate coincidence occurred when our plane 'attacked' a ground unit representing the enemy force. In close support, the plane must approach the target to a point where the weapon in the plane can be most effective. Let us assume that you have to attack a target with a machinegun. You must approach within 600 meters of the target.

At this point, the speed of the plane approaching the land is 150-200 meters per second. Normally, when you adjust the direction of your plane after you fire, the distance between the plane and the ground should be 15-20 meters. Consequently, this is a duty where the person's whole existence, knowledge and dexterity is concentrated on a single point and a mistake of even 1 second might lead to very bitter results. I have mentioned only the pilot's aspect of this matter. It might also involve a fault of the equipment. A mechanical defect which might keep the pilot busy for 1 or 2 seconds and thus cause him to be late 1 or 2 seconds might lead to the same result. These are possibilities that must be investigated. We are investigating and we will definitely get results. The air force commander said that both crashes were unfortunate and bitter incidents for the air force.

CYPRIOT AFFAIRS STAFF IN PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

NC261319 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 23 Sep 81 p 3

[Special Dispatch]

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] -- It has been learned that to enable the TFSC economy to achieve some level of prosperity, the Turkish Government has adopted certain new decisions, one of them being the setting up of a secretariat attached to Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu.

It is reported that an expert Foreign Ministry official will be appointed in the next few days as "the secretary general for Cypriot affairs" and that the staff of the Turkish Embassy in Lefkosa will be expanded to closely control the economy of the TFSC. It is further reported that any decisions taken will require the approval of Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu.

The adoption of such a serious decision by Prime Minister Ulusu and the communication of this to Prime Minister Cagatay during his visit to Ankara last week, has led to various interpretations. It is believed that this decision has been taken because during the past 5 years, aid from Turkey has been spent with a partisan mentality without any adequate investments having been made, which, instead of bringing prosperity, has resulted in the worsening of the economic condition of the people.

VISITING TUNISIAN ECONOMY MINISTER BEGINS TALKS

[Text] Tunisian National Economy Minister Abdelaziz Lasram, who is in Turkey to attend the joint Turkish-Tunisian economic committee meetings, began his contacts in Ankara today. Lasram visited Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk this morning. Following the visit, the two committees met under Canturk and Lasram.

In a statement before the meeting, Canturk said that there were favorable prospects for the further promotion of trade relations between the two countries. Recalling that Turkey would like to build factories in Tunisia for the production of cotton yarns, textile products, compressors for refrigerators and sheets of glass, Canturk said that good possibilities also existed for cooperation in the field of tourism.

In his statement, the visiting minister said that his country was interested in buying from Turkey great quantities of grain, other agricultural products and cement. Pointing out that Tunisia also attributed a special importance to cooperation with Turkey in the industrial and technological fields, Lasram said that he favored the formation of a joint committee on a technical level in order to determine these areas of cooperation. The Tunisian economy minister added that the joining of Kuwait in the cooperation between the two countries would benefit all three countries, and called for the exploration of this prospect as well.

The trade protocol between Turkey and Tunisia is expected to be signed tomorrow. The visiting minister and the delegation accompanying him will depart Turkey the same day.

Tourism Agreement Signed

[Text] Turkey and Tunisia have signed in Ankara a tourism cooperation agreement. The agreement was signed on behalf of Turkey by Minister of Tourism and Information Ilhan Evliyaoglu and on behalf of Tunisia by Tunisian National Economy Minister Abdelaziz Lasram.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, Evliyaoglu said that there will be close cooperation in the fields of tourism training, investment and hotel management. Lasram said that the agreement will increase the friendship and cooperation between the two countries. The agreement envisages the development of a tourist exchange between the two countries and the encouragement of tourists to visit both countries. In addition, the agreement envisages the exchange of information and cooperation in the fields of training, investment and hotel management. According to the agreement, a decision has been reached to set up a joint committee to investigate measures that might contribute to realizing these goals.

Lasram visited Minister of Industry and Technology Sahap Kocatopcu. The delegation headed by Lasram and Kocatopcu exchanged views on the possibility of industrial cooperation between the two countries.

Meeting With Ulusu

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has received Tunisian National Economy Minister Abdelaziz Lasram, who is in Turkey to attend the meetings of the Turkish-Tunisian joint economic committee meetings, and has conferred with him for some time.

In a statement at the meeting, Ulusu said that there are no political problems between Turkey and Tunisia. Expressing his satisfaction with the development of economic relations between the two countries, Ulusu expressed the wish that Turkey's relations with Tunisia develop further in all fields. Lasram said that the tourism cooperation agreement signed between the two countries will positively contribute to Turkish-Tunisian relations.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH IRAN'S WEST AZARBAYJAN

[Text] The governor's offices of Agri and Western Azarbayjan have signed a border trade agreement by which oil will be purchased in exchange for goods. The talks between the two delegations headed by the governor of Western Azarbayjan, (Ashkar Ibrahimi) who has been in Turkey for some time, and by the governor of Agri, Kutlu Aktas, have ended in Agri. According to the agreement signed at the end of the talks, Iran will supply 950 tons of oil daily in exchange for 120,000 livestock annually. Turkey will also supply Iran with leguminous plants, sugar and margarine.

TURKMEN MEETS GREEK FOREIGN MINISTER IN NEW YORK

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in New York to attend the UN General Assembly sessions, today held talks with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis. According to information from the Foreign Minister, the two ministers reviewed Turkish-Greek relations and discussed various bilateral issues in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. Turkmen and Mitsotakis expressed their common belief that problems can be resolved in the interest of the two countries and peoples through bilateral negotiations in order to ensure peace, stability and cooperation in the region.

It was announced that the two foreign ministers decided to meet again before the end of the year. The time and venue of the meeting will be fixed at a later date.

CUMHURIYET ON GREEK CYPRIOT 9 SEP PROPOSALS

NC280739 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 23 Sep 81 p 10

[Izzet Riza Yalin report]

[Excerpts] Lefkosa [Nicosia] -- In addition to its demand that the new federal republic should be demilitarized and that all foreign units should be withdrawn, the Greek Cypriot side also demands that Turks who settled in Cyprus should return to Turkey. This demand has been made through the 9 September proposals in connection with the security of the new federal republic and the two communities.

Stating that the question of guarantees could be discussed at an appropriate time, the Greek Cypriot side's position is that "those who have settled in Cyprus should return" and that the island should be demilitarized and that all foreign units should be withdrawn. The Greek Cypriot side believes that by submitting new proposals on 9 September, it has taken a series of steps forward.

In the introductory section of their proposals the Greek Cypriot side says: Although it is not incumbent on the Greek Cypriot side to submit counterproposals, both sides now have a duty to conduct flexible negotiations on their respective proposals at the negotiating table. Despite this mutual task, the Greek Cypriot side is once again taking the initiative. Although the Turkish Cypriot proposals are disappointing and fail to constitute a basis for a lasting and just settlement, the Greek Cypriot side has decided to make new proposals which will lead to a substantive and constructive dialogue. It is doing this as a contribution to the efforts of the UN secretary general and as an indication of a sincere desire to achieve an effective dialogue.

In the introductory section of the Greek Cypriot proposals, it is stressed that before the 11 Greek Cypriot proposals are negotiated, there should be a return to the question of Maras [Varosha]. This repeats the Greek Cypriot demand that priority should be given to the question of opening Maras for settlement. It is argued that this is in keeping with section 5 of the summit agreement on 19 May 1979. Another condition put forward is that the question of settlement in Maras should be finalized without waiting for the settlement of the other aspects of the Cyprus issue.

The first document ends with the expression of a belief that the Turkish Cypriot side will study carefully the four Greek Cypriot documents, particularly the second document which contains the 11 new Creek Cypriot proposals. This belief is connected with the further expansion of the Turkish-Cypriot territorial and constitutional proposals to embrace the settlement of the question of settlement in Maras. Putting it briefly, the Greek Cypriot side expects the Turkish Cypriot side to make such concessions on the subjects of territory and constitution that would come closer to their own claims.

DEBATE ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES EXAMINED

PM240821 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 19 Sep 81 p 6

[Bergthor Kjarenested dispatch]

[Excerpts] Reykjavik -- Earlier this summer it was possible to read a form of distress call in a few Social Democratic newspapers in Scandinavia. "Do not leave us outside the nuclear-free zone" the call went, and it originated from Icelandic Finance Minister Ragnar Arnalds.

The debate around the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries and the new U.S. neutron bomb has been lively in the press. The Social Democrats have joined their Nordic counterparts in this question and party leader Kjartan Johansson stresses that a unilateral declaration on the part of the Nordic countries without connection with comprehensive disarmament in the whole of Europe would be meaningless. Conservative circles have pointed out that the peace movement in the West must remember that while in Europe it can freely organize peace marches to and from Paris, similar activities in the Soviet Union are forbidden. The nonsocialist democratic parties want in this way to stress the rights of the Western citizen to express divergent opinions freely in the Western democracies. The nonsocialist parties in Iceland also see the defense treaty with the United States and NATO membership as a guarantee of the country's sovereignty and independence.

Significantly enough it was only the leftwing Socialist People's Alliance which took part in the peace congress on Aaland this summer, where both the party's chief editor and Central Committee chairman took part. Now Iceland's state church will arrange a seminar in October around the question "peace on earth," and representatives of all the country's political parties have been invited. Church leaders have taken part in the nuclear arms debate and have stressed the importance of halting the lunatic arms race between the superpowers. The state church is the country's largest citizens' organization, with around 97 percent of the country's population as members.

Iceland's prime minister and foreign minister have added their voices to their Nordic counterparts' declarations on the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries and the government is said to have in principle a positive approach to such a zone.

SYSTEMATIC ESPIONAGE BY EAST BLOC REVEALED

[Text] Bern, 24 Sep (AFP) -- The Swiss Government said today that Eastern European countries had been carrying out systematic espionage against Switzerland "for several years".

The government, in a parliamentary reply to a deputy's question, said: "The Federal Council (government) is seeking to prevent as much as possible the multiple attempts -- insistent and systematic -- by mainly Eastern European libraries, publishers and other organisations for information on Switzerland's administration and infrastructure."

It added that "on various pretexts" these foreign services were asking for "maps of city streets and areas: regional guides, aerial photographs and even detailed plans of water, gas and energy supply lines, and telecommunications, main roads and railways."

RETIRING ARMY CHIEF URGES PURCHASE OF MISSILES

[Excerpts] If Emil Spannocchi calls for interceptors and missiles, these are not the loud words of a general who shortly before his retirement wants to make an instant hero of himself, but the expression of the worries of a man who in the 8 years during which he was chief of the Austrian Army has always spoken up candidly. And while Emil Spannocchi has been moving through Austria during the past few weeks to say goodbye to "his army," there are only two dark clouds on the horizon that really worry him: the missing interceptors and the missile problem.

On this the otherwise quite calm army commander becomes rather indignant: For years, he says, he has pointed out that Austria's neutrality ends 5 meters above the ground. And because the duty to defend neutrality is laid down in the constitution, Spannocchi does not accept the argument of balance of payments difficulties and structural problems: "I would accept that only if we were Europe's poorest country." And he continues, even more sharply: "The other countries can expect that we will fulfill our duty. What is going on here is cheating, playing with marked cards. Moreover, the return business would be of vital importance for the Steyr and Ranshofen companies."

And air defense? "Yes, we do need missiles, primarily ground-to-air missiles. And we should simply go ahead and buy them, without talking too much about it." And he adds musingly: "If there are four for it (Austria, the United States, Britain and France) and only one (the USSR) against it, nothing at all could happen that would harm us." Spannocchi does not part with the military as the predominant factor in his life. There are military publishing houses and: "A large industrial firm has approached me. I am to do a concrete research study which would ensure that our know-how does not get lost and remains effective for the 1990's. This involves purely defensive weapons. And a small state must always feel it is in genuine danger. Hence we certainly must produce [arms] ourselves."

PAHR INVITES CSSR FOREIGN MINISTER TO VISIT

AU291316 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Pahr and his CSSR counterpart Chnoupek met for a talk in New York while at the UN General Assembly session. They primarily discussed further steps to prepare the official visit to Austia of CSSR President Husak. Pahr invited Chnoupek to pay a working visit to Austria at the end of this year or early next year.

Invitation to Shamir

[Excerpt] New York -- At a meeting while at the UN General Assembly session, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir asked Foreign Minister Pahr about Austria's conclusions regarding the latest acts of terrorism in Europe, especially in connection with the latest Palestinian operation in Vienna. In his reply, Pahr stressed Austria's position that one could not constantly hold the PLO responsible for the fact that Palestinians commit attacks, nor could one accuse Italy or any other country if individual terrorists were to commit crimes there.

An Austrian delegation spokesman announced that within the framework of his nearly 1-hour talks with Shamir, Pahr renewed the invitation to him to pay a visit to Vienna.

COOPERATIVE SIGNS GAS PIPELINE DEAL WITH USSR

[Text] Duesseldorf, 29 Sep (DPA) -- After several months of negotiations, the Soviet Government and the German-French cooperative group Mannesmann-Anlagenbau AG Creusot-Loire have agreed to supply and assemble 22 compressor stations for the planned Urengoy (Yamal) gas pipeline. The deal is estimated at DM2.2 billion.

Mannesmann AG announced in Duesseldorf today that the agreement was signed on Monday. Under the agreement, contracts also were concluded with the firms of Aeg-Kanis, Essen, and John Brown, Glasgow, as subcontractors for this major project. Mannesmann Anlagenbau AG had earlier concluded an initial agreement with the Soviets to supply equipment valued at DM135 million. Talks on further orders are to be continued soon. It was further confirmed that the orders for supplies of large pipes for the Urengoy project (?in annual quantities) are being concluded. Talks to this effect are underway.

CHANCELLOR DISCUSSES LOWER SAXONY ELECTIONS

DW291315 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Reporter Udo Philipp interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Is the outcome of the Lower Saxony election the result of internal SPD conflicts?

[Answer] I believe that the result of communal elections in Lower Saxony, which was a defeat for us, is very much connected with the not very homogeneous picture my party has presented in past months to the voters.

[Question] How can you achieve a homogeneous picture again? Do you have a recipe?

[Answer] The party chairman and I have just discussed this. We will have a somewhat longer talk on that.

[Question] Is it so difficult that you will need more time for it?

[Answer] It is not necessarily so difficult between Willy Brandt and myself but, as a whole, it is certainly not very easy.

[Question] What are your problems? You say it isn't Willy Brandt. Is it then the party base, the youth? What is the most pressing problem?

[Answer] Everybody is now using the term base. But the people sometimes misinterpret this. Many SPD people speak of the party base but they actually mean the body of delegates. Many Social Democrats devote too much of their activities to internal party discussions and disputes and too little to explaining our policy campaigning for it and promoting it outside the party. The real base of a party is its electorate.

[Question] But in saying base, I also meant the party congresses that have taken place now in northern Germany, for example, in Schleswig-Holstein. Don't you feel somewhat abandoned in this respect if I mention the key word "peace policy," for example?

[Answer] Party congresses are in no way the base. Party congresses are meetings of men and women who have been elected by local organizations, district organizations or regional organizations. The base is the electorate and the party members and the latter has an even stronger effect than the former. Regarding party membership and the electorate of the party, I feel actually to be on very solid ground.

[Question] How about the land chairmen such as Jansen?

[Answer] Mr Jansen is not the only land chairman. We have 11 land organizations. If I understand things correctly, he has fought bravely at his party congress with regard to several points, with regard to something I consider correct.

[Question] May I get back to Willy Brandt, the federal chairman? Do you still feel supported by him?

[Answer] Yes, I can say so. But I must also add that we must fight together for a more homogeneous external picture of German Social Democracy.

SPD OFFICIAL LEAVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT TO POLAND

LD281836 Hamburg DPA in German 1340 GMT 28 Sep 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 28 Sep (DPA) -- Hans-Jochen Vogel, chairman of the SPD faction of the Berlin Chamber of Deputies, left on Monday for a 3-day visit to Poland. At the invitation of "Action as a Sign of Atonement," he will attend the laying of the foundation stone of an international conference center near Auschwitz. The memorial was planned jointly by "Action as a Sign of Atonement" and former Polish resistance fighters. It is to be dedicated in 1984 and is in memory of the victims of national socialism in the concentration camp at Auschwitz.

PROSECUTOR IDENTIFIES ATTACKER OF U.S. GENERAL

[Text] Karlsruhe, 28 Sep (DPA) -- According to the findings of the investigating authorities, Brigitte Mohnhaupt -- who is being sought as a terrorist -- was involved in the attack on U.S. Gen Frederick James Kroesen in Heidelberg on 15 September. The Federal Prosecutor's Office confirmed today that analysis of a fingerprint proved Frau Mohnhaupt was involved. The print was found on the back of the number plate of an Audi car impounded in Heidelberg. Kroesen was slightly injured in the attack.

The Federal Prosecutor's Office said a shell fired from a Heckler-Koch 223-caliber automatic rifle also was found at the scene in Heidelberg. A shell like this was confiscated after the kidnapping of Employers Federation President Hanns Martin Schleyer in Cologne on September 1977.

The Federal Prosecutor's Office said with reference to the involvement of Christian Klar, the most-wanted terrorist of the Red Army Faction, there were fingerprints attributed to the attack in Heidelberg and the attack on the Ramstein headquarters of the U.S. Air Force in Europe on 31 August. [sentence as received] However, the fingerprints require further analysis by forensic scientists.

FOREIGN MINISTER SET TO VISIT POLAND 8-9 OCTOBER

[Text] Paris, 29 Sep (AFP) -- French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson will make an official visit to Poland on October 8 and 9, it was announced here today. He is going at the invitation of his Polish counterpart, the spokesman said. Mr Cheysson would also make a private visit to Auschwitz camp on October 10, the ministry said.

PS PARLIAMENTARIANS PROTEST MOROCCAN SENTENCES

[Text] Following the sentences passed by the Rabat court on Abderrahim Boubid, who was sentenced to 1-year imprisonment, and on four other members of the Socialist Union of Popular Forces [USFP] Politburo, the French National Assembly Socialist group published a communique on 25 September, stating: "These sentences, passed hastily and before the time scheduled for the hearing, come after a trial carried out in conditions contrary to defense rights." The communique adds: "The Rabat verdict punishes a crime and that is unacceptable in a democracy."

At the same time, a USFP communique published in Paris stresses that "the repression can be explained only by the reactionary Moroccan Government's deliberate intention to liquidate the USFP and the Democratic Confederation of Labor [CDT], in other words any real opposition to the antipeople and antidemocratic policy pursued in Morocco for 20 years." Moreover, the Casablanca trial of six USFP and CDT leaders, including the chief editor of AL-MURHARRIR, which resumed Friday, was adjourned until Wednesday.

LE MONDE VIEWS FRENCH 'LOGIC' IN WORLD AFFAIRS

[Editorial: "France's Logic"]

[Text] "France rejects all prohibitions." De Gaulle, who took every opportunity to condemn the "double hegemony" of the superpowers, would not have disowned this expression used by Mitterrand.

In world affairs, France will, therefore, follow its own "logic," which the president expressed with a force and clarity to which the French had grown unaccustomed. What about the Near East? -- Israel's right to exist is inviolable as is the Palestinians' right to build "the state structures of their choice." What about Poland? -- "Strength does not lie in arms alone." What about the review of the European agricultural policy? -- The bases of this policy, accepted by the British, are not negotiable. What about interference in Latin America? -- Any interference "is detestable," but expressing your opinion, be it on El Salvador, Poland, Afghanistan or Kampuchea, does not constitute interference.

But it was on East-West relations that the president intended to be most categorical, even in what he left unsaid. Giscard d'Estaing deemed it useful to go to Warsaw to persuade Brezhnev to withdraw from Afghanistan. Under his presidency, France refused to take a stance on the Euromissiles question. Of course, the Elysee said, France approves of the U.S. decision to restore the nuclear balance in Europe. But since it is not integrated into the Atlantic system, it will not give a public opinion.

Mitterrand wants nothing to do with all those subtleties. As soon as he arrived in the Elysee, he informed Chancellor Schmidt that he sides firmly with him against the temptation of neutralism raging in the ranks of the West German socialists and that France will take a clear stance on the deployment of the U.S. Euromissiles.

The president did so in a particularly demonstrative way on Thursday. He first refused to confuse pacifism and peace. Only the latter interests him and "only the balance of forces can preserve it." Thus, he warned the public about "excessive Soviet armament in Europe." Examination of secret documents he has at the Elysee convinced him that the Soviets, who already have "an enormous advantage" in conventional forces, will also have nuclear superiority in 1985 unless the Americans and their allies react. But arming is not enough. It is necessary to negotiate at the same time without waiting to establish who is the strongest.

Where does this leave French-Soviet relations? Asked whether he would resume the practice of summits with Brezhnev, Mitterrand replied that Foreign Trade Minister Jobert would take part in the next meeting of the grand commission in Moscow in the role of cochairman. There is, therefore, no immediate prospect of a Mitterrand-Brezhnev meeting unless the president quickly attains his real objective: to force the Soviets to show greater realism, to sincerely abandon the arms race and "to resolutely discuss the conditions for peace." Experience -- even that of General de Gaulle before his visit to Moscow -- shows that this language can be heeded by the Kremlin.

CHIRAC-HEADED GROUP INAUGURATES PRIVATE RADIO

[Summary] Paris has another private radio station. It is called "Radio Service Eiffel Tower" and it is run by an association headed by the mayor of Paris, Jacques Chirac. The radio station, whose 100-watt transmitter is installed on the Eiffel Tower, began broadcasting today on frequency modulation. It is not a municipal radio since they are not allowed in the bill currently under discussion in parliament. The radio station will occupy a frequency until mid-November; it will only broadcast within an area of a few kilometers, the equivalent of five or six districts, then some new equipment should allow the whole of the capital to be covered.

JET FIGHTER INTERCEPTS LIBYAN PASSENGER PLANE

[Text] Rome, 29 Sep (ANSA) -- The Italian Air Force reported today that one of its fighter jets tailed a Libyan passenger plane which entered Italian air space Monday without authorization while adamantly denying insinuations from Tripoli that any assault was made on the trepassing craft.

In a statement to the press here today, General Vito Mangani described such "interceptions" as routine operations whenever an unidentified plane entered Italian air space.

The official Libyan News Agency released a dispatch this morning reporting that a Libyan passenger plane had been intercepted yesterday by an Italian fighter. "JANA" suggested that the "interceptors" may have thought Libyan strongman Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, who flew home from Belgrade yesterday, was aboard.

The Italian Armed Forces spokesman said the plane escorted out of national air territory was enroute from Zurich to Tripoli when sited. "The pilot was first given a warning from Rome", Mangani said, "and then, when there was no answer, a fighter was dispatched to tail the Libyan civilian aircraft until it was outside Italian air limits."

Other sources disclosed today that Italian jet fighters chased three other aircraft out of Italian skies in recent days, a Libyan plane enroute from Belgrade to Tripoli and two British planes.

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO COMMENTS ON UN SESSION

[Text] Rome, 28 Sep (ANSA) -- The decision to open Euromissile negotiations on November 30 and the decisive roles played by West Germany and Italy within the Atlantic alliance for the startup of these talks were major features of an auspicious beginning last week of the 36th General Assembly of the United Nations in New York, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said here in the evening.

Colombo, who returned to Rome Sunday at the end of an intensive week at the United Nations, declared that the opening of the assembly "can be said to have taken on a significance far beyond what could have been imagined some weeks ago. The importance of this week in New York," he said, "Lies not so much in the undeniable value of assembly discussions as in the chance for numerous consultations among foreign ministers which the occasion provided."

The foreign minister went on to describe the preparations which went into the meeting, on the sidelines of the assembly, between the U.S. secretary of state, Alexander Haig, Jr, and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko, and pointed to the "resumption of the East-West dialogue and, especially, to the decision to begin Euromissile negotiations on November 30.

"In order that this could come about," the Italian diplomatic chief continued, "Europe, particularly Italy and West Germany, held down a decisive role within the framework of the Atlantic alliance."

Colombo also applauded the diplomatic work logged in seeking to come to grips with a number of crisis situations around the world. "On one of these issues, the one concerning southern Africa and the independence of Namibia," the foreign minister reported, "the work of the contact group brought about a clarification of the negotiations, on the basis of resolution 435, and its acceptance by all the sides concerned, and for a procedure which would be concluded before the end of 1982.

"If these affirmative premises are followed up, another serious crisis which disturbs Africa could be settled and, along with it, the aspirations of a people who have been waiting for their independence for years," Colombo said.

To conclude his statement, the foreign minister affirmed that "overall, it is possible to say that the work (of the general assembly) has been positive without, however, drawing an optimistic conclusion, because the international situation is still very sensitive and a genuine desire for moderation and peace is still not noted in all quarters.

VATICAN NOTES TRIAL OF CATHOLIC GROUP IN CSSR

LD292222 Vatican City in Czech to Czechoslovakia 1845 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Text] On Monday, the trial started in Olomouc of a group of six Catholics who had distributed religious literature in mimeographed editions. They are accused of so-called illegal enterprise. The accused include two priests, a 40-year-old Jesuit Father (Frantisek Lizna) and 33-year-old Father (Rudolf Smahel), former administrator from Uhersky Brod. The others are 54-year-old (Jan Krumbholt), 61-year-old (Vlcek), 59--year-old (JanOdstrcil) and 67-year-old (Josef Adamek), from Brno.

At the opening of the trial, two French observers were present, of whom one was a representative of the Commission Justitia et Pax. Friends of the accused have not been permitted to attend. Only a few relatives have been allowed inside. The indictment accuses them of profit-seeking in disseminating religious literature. Objective testimony would deny the accusations since all six accused acted from purely religious motives.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS FOOD ASSISTANCE TO ETHIOPIA

[Text] Addis Ababa, 29 Sep (ANSA) -- Italy is to grant Ethiopia 10,000 metric tons of wheat and rice under an agrement signed here Monday with Ethiopian relief and rehabilitation commission. The agreement, the second of its kind of two years, was signed by Italian Ambassador Aliviero Rossi and Relief and Rehabilitation Commissioner Shimelis Adugna. Last year, Italy pledged to give 6,200 tons of rice to the commission, whose main task is to extend emergency and long-term relief and rehabilitation to victims of war and drought. The food aid, for which transport costs up to the port of Assab will be covered by the Italian Government, will arrive soon, embassy sources told ANSA.

Sweden similarly gave a million dollars to the commission for a soil and water conservation project in the northern Wollo Province at the weekend.

FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER SUMMARIZES PRC VISIT

[Text] Rome, 29 Sep (ANSA) -- The extensive opportunities for expanding Italian industrial operations in China was the leitmotif of Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria's account here today of his seven-day visit to the Asian state. In a statement to "ANSA" upon his arrival in Hong Kong today, Capria said his overall impression of the visit was "positive" and his talks with Beijing government officials were "characterized by their clear...political determination to strengthen economic ties" with Italy.

The final document issued by the joint Italian-Chinese economic commission meeting he chaired in Beijing was said to have laid out a guideline for operations "susceptible of opening up major prospects for trade." Trade swaps between Italy and China, however, necessarily have to fit into the Chinese Government's present policies designed to give a better balance to the economy, Capria noted. Nevertheless, there was "broad agreement" between the two delegations that this period should not be considered an idle one, but an opportunity "to explore the potential of existing economic relations...and the possibilities of reaching major agreements by which Italian technology may fulfill the extensive strategic objectives being set in China."

More specifically, the Italian Government official cited the fields of mining prospection and transport, particularly port installations. He also indicated the possibility of setting up joint holdings with the Chinese, even with outside capital from third countries.

"Naturally", Capria put in, "all these opportunities will have to be backed up by suitable policies in Rome, allowing for government loans and aid credits". The Italian foreign trade minister attached key importance to the sub-convention drawn up with the Bank of China to reopen a one billion dollar credit line Italy extended a few years ago, but which has not yet been drawn upon.

Capria went on to describe his meeting in Beijing with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang in enthusiatic terms, saying he considered Zhao's move to arrange for the encounter a show of "particular kindliness towards Italy". "I confirm once again here in Hong Kong the gratitude I expressed in China to the authorities of that country", he said, adding that his meeting with Zhao was not just a mere formality.

The Chinese Government leader took the occasion to endorse the possibilities that emerged from the joint commission session and reiterate "the importance (Beijing) attaches to relations with Italy". Zhao also reminded Capria that biddings for the job of building an offshore oil drilling platform will be open only until the beginning of 1982. The state-run Italian Fuels Corporation (ENI) is one of the firms vying for the contract. Although Chinese development plans laid the stress on light industries, Zhao told him, major construction jobs could hardly be barred.

Capria also dwelt on the technological role Italy could play in the development of China's textile and fur manufacturing industries, indicating that a 30-million dollar investment in the textile industry was planned and Italian businesses with advanced pelt-treatment technology were negotiating operations in the Asian state.

The Rome government official leaves tonight for London, where he is scheduled to confer with his British counterpart and inaugurate a new Italian Foreign Trade Institute (ICE) business center. He will head home from there October 3.

SOMALI DELEGATION RECEIVED BY PCI LEADERSHIP

PM281057 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 17 Sep 81 p 17

[Text] Rome -- A Somali Socialist Revolutionary Party [SRSP] delegation, headed by International Relations Section Chief Mohamed Hashi Egal and comprising Comrades Adan Husen Hayle, Mohamed Geilani and Marian Ahmed, had a meeting at the PCI Directorate with PCI Secretariat member Alberto Minucci and PCI Central Committee member Giovanni Giadresco. Previously the SRSP delegation had meetings with Comrades Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and foreign section chief, foreign section member Claudio Bernabucci, and Comrade Luciano Gruppi, a Central Committee member and director of the Palmiro Togliatti Institute in Frattochie.

During the cordial talks there was an extensive exchange of information on the situations in the two countries and on some aspects of the international situation. The Horn of Africa's problems were examined in particular, and hope was expressed for a peaceful solution.

PRESIDENT CARSTENS PRAISES FRG-SPANISH RELATIONS

[Excerpt] Madrid, 29 Sep (DPA) -- Today, the second day of his state visit to Spain, Federal President Karl Carstens reaffirmed the Federal Republic's support for the "realization of the great aim of the consolidation of Spanish democracy, the stabilization of economic relations and internal and external security and Spain's entry into the European Community." At a gala dinner which the federal president gave for the Spanish royal couple in Aranjuez Castle this evening, Carstens praised the "close and untroubled" relations between the two countries and the agreement between the two governments in "all important world political questions."

Carstens noted that Federick the Great contributed to the creation of the Spanish national anthem, which resulted from a draft written by the Prussian king, and he also pointed to the link between the festive surroundings of the gala dinner in Aranjuez Castle and Schiller's drama "Don Carlos," the first act of which is set in the still magnificent park of Aranjuez.

Genscher Returns to Bonn

[Text] Madrid, 29 Sep (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher flew back on Tuesday morning from Madrid to Bonn. On the periphery of the state visit of Federal President Karl Carstens, he had talks with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca. They concerned primarily Spain's entry into the European Community and Spain's attitude toward joining NATO.

UCD CHAIRMAN EXPLAINS 'PARTY INTEGRATION'

PM281033 Madrid YA in Spanish 20 Sep 81 p 12

[F.L. de Pablo report: "Rodriguez Sahagun Wishes To Put UCD in Order"]

[Excerpts] Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Chairman Rodriguez Sahagun will submit next week to the party's Executive Committee the conclusions which he read out Friday in his report to the Political Council with the aim of achieving the utmost integration of the "ruling" party. This is what he announced at a press conference to explain the debate which occurred at last Friday's Political Council meeting. Following several months of dialogue with the party's various currents and personalities, the centrist chairman has taken the offensive and is assuming a leading role which the "barons" hitherto denied him. Rodriguez Sahagun wishes to guarantee the party bodies' functioning and primacy without prejudice to enhancing the party's internal democratization and pluralism.

Thus, the document of conclusions, which will be submitted to the Executive Committee and later to the Political Council, which will meet again 28 September, states:

"1 -- All party members will publicly support the party and the government and will guarantee political and parliamentary stability.

"2 -- The putting forward of stances and debate within the party bodies will be promoted by everybody.

"3 -- Without prejudice to the freedom of expression which the party upholds and respects, the party's internal conflicts, whatever their nature and especially those which could harm its image, must be expressed through internal debate.

"4 -- Once a decision has been made, everybody, collectively and individually, must promise to respect it publicly, guaranteeing that disagreement will not be expressed publicly.

"5 -- It is accepted by everybody that the UCD will run as such in the elections.

"6 -- The election program will be one of synthesis and drafted by a broadly representative committee.

"7 -- The UCD's lists of candidates in the next election will be composed of party members."

"It is not a matter," Rodriguez Sahagun specified, "of an Arias-Salgado document, as has been said; rather, there has emerged from the meetings held over the last few months with over 125 parliamentarians and other party leaders a set of conclusions which will be used by the party's various collective bodies, which I intend will meet more frequently."

"No" to Organized Tendencies

Concerning relations between the party and the prime minister, Rodriguez Sahagun said: "It is not true that the centrist Executive Committee is seeking to become a shadow cabinet. Yesterday, I said that we are the 'ruling party' because that is true. And from that viewpoint, we want the government's activity to implement the party's guidelines. There must be mutual support within the framework of prior debates through all the party's collective bodies." "I do not believe," he said, referring to Camunas' opinion that Calvo-Sotelo should lead the party, "that the party's integration can be achieved by means of messianic leaderships; rather, that it can be achieved by means of the party's institutionalization, which is achieved through dialogue. I am attempting to reconcile stances but if dialogue is not accepted, I am determined that majority decisions in the party bodies will be respected. We will practice respect for the minorities, without allowing organized tendencies and without minorities seeking to impose their voice on the majority."

Concerning the possible inclusion of independents in the government, Rodriguez Sahagun said that the prime minister chooses the ministers. "Calvo-Sotelo has not told me that he wishes to make these inclusions. I do not believe that some of those who are mentioned as independents are such because they belong to political groupings, parties or not. Knowing Calvo-Sotelo's uprightness and honesty, I believe that he will honor what he said in his investiture speech."

As for platforms and tendencies, the UCD chairman said that it would remain a reformist and progressive center party because this is how most of the electorate want it to be and this is how it will run in future general elections. "The rules do not accept the organization of tendencies. I have not put [apparent word drop] to Mr Alzaga, since he did not attend the meeting at which it was examined and to which nobody was summoned representing anybody, but on an individual basis." However, the document of conclusions, according to what we were able to establish during Friday's Political Council meeting, was signed by its 238 members, except the signatories of the moderate platform.

We Do Not Exclude Anybody

"The integration of the party," Rodriguez Sahagun added, "is a balancing process; we exclude only those who wish to exclude themselves. A party is a living organism which people leave and enter. I do not believe that Jesus Esperabe, with whom I have a meeting on Monday, will leave. In any event, if he so decides, the UCD's losing the majority on the congress committees because of his departure will cause no grave upset.

What is the matter with us is that we do not know how to sell our image and we frequently take outside the internal tension caused by our balancing process. This is bad because our people have not completed their psychological adjustment.

"They have not become accustomed to a party's internal pluralism being demonstrated in constant debate, even disagreement, without this meaning that it will break up. Nobody wishes to abandon the electoral machinery represented by the UCD with its 152,000 members, 32,000 councillors, 36 provincial council chairmen, 4,000 mayors and about 3,000 local and provincial committees. This structure in itself guarantees some election results at the outset."

PM291331 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Sep 81 pp 3-4

[EUROPA PRESS and EFE report: "Union of the Democratic Center in Search of Cohesion"]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 25 Sep -- The Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Executive Committee meeting presided over by Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun lasted 3-and-1/2-hours. The meeting analyzed the drafting of a resolution to be presented to the Political Council and examined the constitutional and political consequences of censuring individual ministers.

After the meeting which was attended by almost all the members of the Executive Committee, Rafael Calvo Ortega gave a press conference to explain the agreements reached on both subjects. The UCD secretary general described as "very important" the resolution drawn up by the Executive Committee on the basis of the document of seven conclusions presented by UCD Chairman Augustin Rodriguez Shahagun and pointed out that the executive's decision embraced these conclusions together with some further conclusions and proposals put forward by the Executive Committee. He said that the document, which he did not release to the media so that the Political Council could see it first, ratifies "once again the UCD's characteristic as a party open to all those who agree with our political blueprint" and as a progressive and unifying party. Asked why the adjective "centrist" was not used, he said: "The fact that it is centrist is obvious."

Calvo Ortega said that the resolution will be presented to the Political Council as an Executive Commitee document approved by all members of the committee. "But, of course," he added, "this does not mean that there were no reservations concerning the debate in the Political Council."

Social Democrats' Reservations

Another source from the Social Democratic sector of the Executive Committee told reporters that all members of the Executive Committee agreed with the document, though he expressed his personal opinion that a party cannot be pacified with documents alone -- "still less with one like this." He also said that the additions made to Rodriguez Sahagun's document basically consisted of a preamble which refers to political ideology and confirms the party's progressive nature, together with some adaptations to the terminology of the party rules.

Francisco Fernandez Ordonez told EFE: "I have signed the seven-point document, but it resolves nothing." The Social Democratic leader, who left the meeting after 0100, said: "The party's problems are major ones and this document does not resolve them."

Open Party

According to EFE, the ideas contained in the aforementioned preamble are:

-- The definition of the UCD as a progressive party which advocates change. This definition as a progressive party corresponds to the concept supported by the party's honorary chairman, Adolfo Suarez, with the Social Democrats' backing.

-- The UCD's character as an open party, for people with a similar ideology who want to assert their rights and meet obligations. It seems that this was the sense of the proposal put to the committee this morning by the prime minister.

-- The UCD aspires to cordial relations and consensus among its members. To this end, decisions will in the future be made with the approval of the currents, a vote being taken only as a last resort. This criterion contained in the preamble is apparently supported by the party minorities and by party Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun himself.

PSOE'S MORAN DISCUSSES NATO ENTRY, DEFENSE

PM250901 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 15 Sep 81 pp 14-15

[Pablo Sebastian interview with Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) representative on Spanish Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Fernando Moran; date and place not given]

Answer: The slogan has, in fact, caused some surprise. It also surprised me but, according to the experts on this kind of campaign, it fulfills its aims because it attracts attention and opens up a whole set of questions which must be answered. In any event, the slogan's intent is to assert the PSOE's intention to oppose entry into NATO without this meaning being opposed to the Atlantic organization's existence and, at the same time, to criticize the government's attitude on this issue, which should be the subject of a major national debate, as several government ministers promised some time ago, and which has been supressed by the government itself, which wishes to restrict it to a mere parliamentary vote, avoiding even the holding of a referendum on an issue as important as this.

Question: Isn't it true that the PSOE is more concerned today about its good image and its prospects of attaining power than about really preventing entry into NATO?

Answer: The PSOE is in favor of the transformation of Spanish society in the direction of socialism but by means of democratic and parliamentary life. Hence, its concern about that "good image" to which you refer, which does not necessarily imply the sacrificing of its principles. This is an equation which is managed daily by most of the West European socialist parties, which remain very mindful of the course of domestic events in their respective countries and which lay down their own order of priorities in accordance with what they deem to be the national interest. The timetable has not taken the PSOE by surpise. But since this was a policy involving the national interest, frequent attempts were made to reach agreement with the government on a national defense policy. The most recent development is that this possibility to agreement was dashed by the government this summer. There was no hesitation or naivety but final attempts to make the Spanish stance on this issue, as a national stance, appear more firm through achieving some agreement to strengthen the Spanish stance with a view to the negotiations for the renewal of the treaty with the United States. The government has opted for going it alone and forcing through a stance which we cannot accept and the responsibility for the results of this operation rests with it.

Question: In their speeches before parliament, former Minister Oreja Aguirre and current Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca also spoke of progress in the negotiations on Gibraltar and on entry into the European Community before completing the NATO process. What is your opinion of the two issues?

Answer: The truth is that the government has effected a complete change in its stance. It is clear that it has stood the argument on its head and is now attempting to present the NATO issue as a favorable framework for resolving both problems, and not the prior approval of these issues.

NATO and the EEC are two different and distinct options. Well now, the Atlantic option, in the way in which the government is currently presenting it, constitutes for the government a priority over the European option, although it does not run counter to the latter. As for Gibraltar, the essential thing is not that the base should not be British but that the colony should become fully Spanish before we enter NATO. Even if Gibraltar became a NATO base under Spanish command, this would constitute a strategic loss for Spain, which some very committed Atlanticists would term "a restriction on defense sovereignty." The danger also exists that a hybrid solution to the Gibraltar problem would consolidate indefinitely the British presence on the rock, or at any rate, incomplete control to the Gibraltar problem would consolidate indefinitely the British presence on the rock, or at any rate, incomplete control over that territory by Spain.

"Calvo-Sotelo Doing Opposite to What Suarez Did"

Question: In the PSOE's opinion, why has Calvo-Sotelo decided to impose his Atlantic option as having priority?

Answer: In our opinion, there are four basic reasons. In the first place, the current prime minister's principal aim is to project an image completely different from that of his predecessor. Certain rightwing sectors accused Suarez of having Third Worldist inclinations in his foreign policy. So Calvo-Sotelo is doing quite the opposite to what his predecessor -- Adolfo Suarez -- did in this field. Second, it must be pointed out that the Atlanticist option helps the broad right operation. Both the prime minister and the foreign minister are committed to openly rightwing stances in foreign policy. This is an asset for bringing together the broad right -- hence Fraga's response and the liberal operation -- at the same time as serving as a factor of linkage with the so-called peripheral right, such as we might term the Catalonian and Basque Nationalist Parties.

There are also two other external reasons. The government, which like all the parliamentary parties had espoused the European option, has been left without a foreign policy following former President Giscard d'Estaing's speech whereby Spain's entry into the EEC was checked and the European timetable proposed by Calvo-Sotelo himself when he was minister for relations with the EC (which envisaged entry into the EEC in 1983) was ruined. And the government is attempting to conceal this, which is a major failure in the light of a coming election campaign, either in 1983 or 1982, through the NATO operation.

The last reason which gives rise to these question marks lies in the fact that the government has found itself completely blocked in the bilateral negotiations with the United States through Washington's not giving a guarantee of defense, not only for us possible scenarios of conflict, such as North Africa, but even for a global conflict, and through the Americans demanding to be allowed to use their bases in Spain with extensive operational facilities in other areas, such as perhaps the Near East. The truth which the Spanish people must be told is that Spain will secure no guarantee or defense at present, neither in the bilateral treaty with the United States nor in NATO. The guarantees in articles 4 and 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty do not cover our possible scenarios of conflict in North Africa, which are excluded in article 6, nor is the guarantee automatic even in article 5.

Question: Is the PSOE now opposed to NATO and also the agreements with the United States?

Answer: Our current stance on this issue is one "no" to NATO, and, as for the bilateral agreements, to say that under the current conditions we cannot support their renewal. We want a good treaty with the United States and this means a balanced treaty and not a stance of disregarding the people's will, such as the government is adopting over the NATO issue. We would like to be able to vote in favor of a good treaty with the United States, but as matters stand, without the necessary quids pro quo, or guarantee of defense or full control over the bases, I do not believe that the PSOE could vote in favor of such an agreement.

"USSR's Memorandum Contradicts Minister"

Question: You have mentioned the issue of the guarantee of defense and the fact that, in the PSOE's opinion, neither the bilateral agreement with Washington nor NATO guarantee the defense of the whole of Spanish territory. Are you referring to Ceuta and Melilla? What is the party's stance on these cities' future and defense?

Answer: As long as Spain has sovereignty over Ceuta and Melilla, any Spanish defense treaty should include the guaranteeing of the defense of both cities. France included the territory of Algeria at the time of the signing of the Washington treaty and, when Turkey joined NATO, the alliance's area of influence was extended in accordance with article 6 of that document. So there is no reason why Spain's entry into NATO should not have the same guarantees for Ceuta and Melilla as other countries secured for their territories.

Question: The memorandum on Spain's entry into NATO which the USSR submitted at the Santa Cruz Palace is undoubtedly a topical issue. What is your opinion of this issue and of the document's contents?

Answer: In the first place, the memorandum constitutes a clear rebuttal of the statements by the foreign minister who asserted that the USSR had assimilated Spain's entry into NATO and that this would even help and clarify relations between the two countries. A family situation is also clarified, for instance, when a couple become divorced. The document has contradicted this way of thinking on the part of the minister who finds everything that leads to NATO positive. As for the handing over of the memorandum, I must say that the problem posed by the incident lies in the publicizing of it. I believe that if Yugoslavia decided to join the Warsaw Pact, the United States would inform Belgrade of the consequences which, in its opinion, that action would have. Who publicized the note? The government, with its protest? The TASS news agency? This is a priority issue to be debated. As a party, we reject any interference by the USSR in internal affairs. As for the contents of the USSR's document, three aspects of it must be highlighted: First, it states that entry into NATO is an issue to be decided on by the Spanish people, which is positive and an advance in Soviet stances; second, it emphasizes the harmful effect of this entry on detente; and there is a third part, with veiled threats against Spain, which is totally unacceptable.

Question: What is the PSOE's alternative in defense and foreign policy? The nonaligned countries?

Answer: In the first place, it must be pointed out that bipolarity is over, in the sense that the two powers are incapable of controlling the rest of the world, because of development and cultural problems -- the resurgence of Islam, for instance -- and so forth. This means that neither the United States nor the Soviet Union can control their old empires any longer, although they act in mimicry of their former influence, as is evidenced by the invasion of Afghanistan, the Iran crisis or the U.S. pressure on Central America.

Under these circumstances, Spain should seek its place in the search for political solutions to international problems and not merely strategic and military solutions. To achieve this, we should conduct a policy which will not upset balances and which will allow Spain a degree of independence in upholding our stances. We want balanced relations with the West, but not to join NATO. As for the nonaligned countries, it must be said that Spain is not culturally linked with the nonaligned countries which are a very important movement but not European, which is our natural area of association.

Question: What consquences could entry into NATO have for Spain?

Answer: It has been said that this entry could serve to subordinate the Spanish Army to the civil power and to modernize our armed forces. Well, this is possible but not certain. For instance, there is Turkey, with a coup; in the case of Portugal, the only unit which did not take part in the 25 April [1974] revolution was the Santa Margarita unit, which was linked with NATO and commanded by Soares Carneiro, the extreme right's last candidate in the Portuguese presidential election. Moreover, it must be pointed out that although most of the countries in NATO are democratic, people who are less democratic and more remote from parliamentary life -- since they always approach political problems from the military and strategic viewpoint and not from the democratic political viewpoint -- operate in its institutions. In the corridors of NATO, democracy is not breathed in the same way as in the British Parliament or in the French Assembly. Moreover, the modernization of weaponry can and should be carried out, whether or not we are in NATO. This includes a cost greatly exceeding the mere NATO membership fees, totaling about 8 billion pesetas. At any rate, the adjustments of our forces to the level of certain allied detachments, such as those kept by the British Army on the Rhine, would entail a 20-precent increase in the defense budget.

[Excerpt] Spanish socialists want NATO to recognize the Madrid government's sovereignty over Gibraltar, Cueta and Melilla if the Spanish Parliament, contrary to what the socialists wish, authorizes the government to apply for membership in the alliance. This decision was made at this morning's meeting of the PSOE Executive Committee. The main opposition party repeated that it is against Spain joining NATO and said that, should its objective not be achieved, it will propose that the protocol of membership should specify, as France, Greece and Turkey did previously, the Spanish territory which would be affected by this step and that Spanish sovereignty over Ceuta, Melilla and Gibraltar be recognized.

REPORT OF AKROTIRI BASE CONVERSION FOR U.S. USE

[Excerpt] The British base at Akrotiri is being speedily converted into a U.S. base destined to serve the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force aimed at the progressive Arab states, the anti-imperialist regimes, the Soviet Union and other countries of the socialist community.

According to absolutely confirmed information available to us, work on the installation of new and modern radio surveillance and radar equipment is being speeded up at Akrotiri. Simultaneous work for the repair and expansion of runways is also in progress to make them suitable for use by heavy U.S. Air Force bombers and transports.

A number of Nimport [as published] type espionage aircraft, equipped with accurate scientific equipment have been at the airport for some days. Air Force experts recently arrived in order to check this equipment.

Speeding up of the work at Akrotiri commenced immediately after the recent visit by British Prime Minister Thatcher to Washington where, during her talks with President Reagan, she placed the British bases in Cyprus at his disposal as a British contribution to the Pentagon's plans to control the east Mediterranean, the [Persian] Gulf and the Indian Ocean.

The "Americanization" of the Akrotiri base was the result of a study submitted to Mrs Thatcher by British Defense Secretary Nott, who visited the Akrotiri and Dhekelia bases on 18 September. During his short visit, he inspected installations on these two bases and on his departure he took with him a report from base commander Lesley Davis. Nott left Akrotiri for Amman without attempting to make any contact with the Cyprus Government.

Political observers connect the visit of the British defense secretary with the more general U.S. imperialist plans in the Middle East and in the Gulf which were discussed at the White House during the Thatcher visit.

The recent Reagan-Begin agreement for "military cooperation" which, as is well known, permits U.S. utilization of Israeli territory and Israeli armed forces, falls within these plans.

KIPRIANOU SEEKS COMMONWEALTH SUPPORT AT MEETING

[Text] Addressing a gathering of Greeks in Melbourne at noon today, President Kiprianou stressed that the Commonwealth can and must play a great role in order to back the UN effort for the implementation of the UN resolutions and of the summit agreements. He added: The solution must be truly realistic. Otherwise, the wound will not be healed but will remain open and will influence not merely Cyprus but also the eastern Mediterranean and possibly the entire world. The Turkish policy, he said, must be radically changed, and for this reason there is a need for the systematic and continuous internationalization of the Cyprus problem. President Kiprianou said that it is within the framework of internationalization that he views his presence in Australia at the Commonwealth conference.

Representatives of the Greek community addressed President Kiprianou and promised to continue their aid and support for Cyprus until the vindication of Cyprus' struggle.

ROLANDHIS HOLDS SEPARATE MEETINGS AT UN SESSION

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis had separate meetings in New York today with the foreign ministers of Argentina, Hungary, New Zealand and the Chinese deputy foreign minister, whom he briefed on Cyprus developments.

In a statement, Mr Rolandhis said that his contacts thus far at UN headquarters have been very constructive and have confirmed the great international interest in Cyprus, despite the huge number of questions and problems which occupy the United Nations. He added: The government's prudent and planned policy is appreciated by all my colleagues, who have assured me that they unhesitatingly support the principles which have been violated in the case of Cyprus. The briefing of the delegates of the various countries, Mr Rolandhis said, is being continued at a fast pace both by himself and by the other members of our delegation.

Mr Rolandhis said that his contacts with the UN secretary general, Mr Gobbi, and with other senior officers of the UN Secretariat are in an advanced stage. He also said that he is briefing the president of the republic so that he can carefully weigh the developments by taking into consideration both Mr Waldheim's position and the views of the various governments. In conclusion, he said that Mr Kiprianou's meeting with the UN secretary general on 12 October will be a most important event.

Confers With Mitsotakis

[Text] Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis last night had a new meeting in New York with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis prior to Mitsotakis' departure for Athens. During the meeting there was a final review of developments concerning the Cyprus issue in light of the contacts which the two ministers had in New York with UN Secretary General Waldheim and their colleagues from various countries.

Missing Persons Issue

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis met at UN headquarters today with UN Under Secretary General Urquhart and continued with him the discussions they began last week on the missing persons question. Rolandhis told our radio correspondent that efforts are being exerted to resolve the difference between the two parties in connection with procedural matters, as well as the difference on the way of investigating the fate of missing persons. He also said that he expects that this question must be finalized and clarified this week and that if the talks succeed, the work of the investigatory committee in Cyprus will begin immediately. Otherwise, Rolandhis added, the Greek Cypriot side will not participate in the work of the committee and will seek through other means the visit to Cyprus of an investigatory committee.

Answering a question, Rolandhis said that the Human Rights Committee in Geneva also could authorize one of its teams to visit Cyprus.

MITSOTAKIS HOLDS MEETING AT UN HEADQUARTERS

[Text] The Greek foreign minister's talks in New York with foreign ministers of various countries and with UN Secretary General Waldheim have been called significant. The members of the UN General Assembly paid particular attention to yesterday's address by the foreign minister, who, when referring to the Cyprus issue, stressed that a great effort is still needed so that the issue will reach a substantive and just solution.

This evening, Mr Mitsotakis met with U.S. Secretary of State Haig, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and FRG Foreign Minister Genscher. Yesterday, he had a 1-hour meeting with UN Secretary General Waldheim in the presence of Urquhart, UN under secretary general; Gobbi, the UN special representative in Cyprus; Ambassador Katapodhis, Greece's permanent representative to the United Nations; and Ambassador Sekeris, the director of Mitsotakis' office.

In answer to a journalist's question after the meeting, the UN secretary general said: I thank the Greek minister, who gave me the opportunity to exchange our views extensively. We had a very constructive discussion. Immediately afterward, Mr Mitsotakis stated: I would like to confirm what Mr Waldheim said. I am certain that our meeting was useful and sincere. We had a full exchange of views, and I am very satisfied with this meeting.

Mr Mitsotakis also met with PRC Foreign Minister Chang [as heard], Albanian Foreign Minister Malile [as heard], Iraqi Foreign Minister Dr Sa'dun Hammadi, Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei and Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov, with whom he discussed bilateral issues, exchanged views on major international issues, and whom he briefed on the Cyprus issue and Greek-Turkish relations.

Statement on Contacts

[Text] At noon today, prior to the reception he gave in Mr Waldheim's honor, Mr Mitsotakis met with correspondents from major news agencies. He explained the object of his visit to the United States and referred to the meetings he has had with the U.S. and the Soviet foreign ministers. Among other things, he stressed that he hopes that the awaited initiative by Mr Waldheim will promote the intercommunal dialogue, and in general the progress of the Cyprus problem. Answering a question, he said that the Turkish foreign minister has assured him that Turkey's stand toward the question of progress for a solution of the Cyprus problem is positive.

Further Comments

[Text] The talks which Foreign Minister Mitsotakis had in New York, both with Secretary General Waldheim and with the foreign ministers of various countries, are described as very important. Shortly before his departure from New York, Mitsotakis made the following statement on his meetings with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and USSR Foreign Minister Gromyko:

My meeting with Haig was very satisfactory and the atmosphere in which our talks were conducted was very friendly, cordial and sincere. We discussed Greek-U.S. relations and the Cyprus issue on which the secretary of state showed particular interest. We also examined the Middle East and other international problems.

With Gromyko, Mitsotakis continued, we also talked for about 1 hour in a very cordial atmosphere. We examined Greek-Soviet relations as well as the Cyprus question.

I grasped the opportunity to reiterate to Gromyko the standing invitation for his visit to Greece. He assured me that he has accepted this invitation and that he will undertake the visit next year. Gromyko expressed the desire for the further expansion of the good relations which exist between Athens and Moscow and I assured him that it is also the desire of the Greek Government that the good relations which exist between the two countries should be preserved, as we jointly established in reviewing their progress, and that we should further expand them.

PAPANDREOU GIVES SPEECHES IN ATHENS, IOANNINA

Athens, 25 Sep

NC261618 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 26 Sep 81 p 7

[25 September speech by PASOK Chairman Papandreou in Athens]

[Text] Good evening. PASOK's certain great victory in these elections, which are critical for the nation and the people, fills us with responsibilities and optimism. The unprecedented multitudinous gatherings of the election campaign, in addition to great crowds and great emotion, display another characteristic: decisive popular participation. An entire people are not merely watching; they are sending messages; they are declaring their faith to the great change and, at the same time, their will to actively participate in the course of change after the great victory.

For decades, the right has been keeping the people in the corner, along the sidelines of the country's life. The time has come for these people to put the right along the sidelines of history. Currently, every Greek citizen knows that a change is a condition for the nation's survival.

The deeds and days of the policy of the right have brought our country to a critical crossroads. These deeds and days are stamped on the course of our great national issues, the dangerous deadlock our country's economy is facing, and the daily life of the inhabitants in the cities and villages.

About 4 years ago, from this very same position, I had the opportunity to speak about the significance of the elections of 1977, elections that brought PASOK to the position of official opposition. Friends: In the 4 years which have passed, our accession to the EEC took place, an accession that transferred to Brussels critical decisions for our economic course. This accession was made under unacceptable conditions which do not safeguard Greece from our partners' competition but rather safeguards our partners from the competition of Greek products. The unfavorable results of the accession for our agricultural produce, small businesses and our industry are already obvious.

In addition, our return to NATO was completed without any of the reasons for our withdrawal in 1974 having been eliminated, without any step having been taken to restore the independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus. Return to NATO within the framework of the Rogers agreement has put into contestation Greek responsibility over Agean operational control. This has been done without any guarantee for our country's territorial integrity to the threats from the east. A similar course has marked our country's economy.

Currently, citizens ask ruthless questions: Who is responsible for the galloping inflation which, for the third year in succession, is shaping up to 25 percent?

--Who is responsible for the quick and dangerous devaluation of the drachma which not only feeds inflation but also shrinks our true national income?

--Who has created the huge deficit -- 350 billion drachmas -- for 1981 in the public sector?

--Who is responsible for dealing with the foreign exchange reserves -- something that has caused a loss to our country of over $350 million?

--Who is responsible for a policy of incentives and credits that threatens to eliminate small and medium sized businessmen and has led many large enterprises into bankruptcy?

--Why is it that almost the only enterprises which prosper in our country are the multinational enterprises?

--Finally, who is responsible for the de-Hellenization of our industry?

--What happened to the scandalous subsidies and how were the gratuitous payments distributed? Why are industrialists prospering while industries are going bankrupt?

--Who is responsible for the thoughtless destruction of the environment, for inhuman conditions in cities and stagnation in the countryside, the downgrading of education, the merchandizing of health -- for our sellout, for favoritism, for our cultural sellout, for corruption, the paralysis of the government machine, the government of New Democracy? The country has known many governments of the right; autocratic, antipopular, they always governed without the people's participation. For a year now the country has been governed without the participation of the government itself.

However, the hour of reckoning has come. With their votes in the elections the Greek people themselves will give replies to the questions.

Friends: The great struggle of PASOK and the people will begin after the electoral victory. We are taking delivery of chaos. We are not miracle workers but we shall succeed. Relying on the people's inexhaustible forces and with a responsible government strategy and program, we shall put an end to the country's slide and we shall lay the foundations of the new course toward development and progress.

With a set of immediate measures we shall curb inflation. At first we shall stabilize -- and later we shall reduce -- the deficit in the balance of payments. We shall promote the quick rebound of our economy from recession and we shall protect the true income of the working people and pensioners from the rise in the cost of living index through the establishment of automatic increases based on the cost of living index. For the PASOK government, national defense, education, health and pensions are of immediate priority. Of course, our basic goals remain the purge of the administration and its decisive decentralization.

I would like to say a few words to young Greek people: Education in our country has been downgraded and weakened within the framework of an anachronistic structure. For us, for PASOK, education is the foundationstone of change, it is the affair of all the people. For this reason, as a government, we shall take radical measures for reorganization. One of these measures will be the abolition of the Panhellenic examinations for acceptance into lyceums and universities.

Friends: The elections in October are of historic significance for the nation and our people. Currently, for each of us, the choices constitute critical dilemmas given the fact that these elections have acquired the nature of a referendum. The contestants are:

--change against conservatism.
--national independence against foreign dependence.
--economic development against crisis and stagnation.
--true democracy against autocracy.
--cultural regeneration against stagnation and sellout.
--social justice against larcenous exploitation and blatant injustice.

No alarmism, no preelection payments and promises by New Democracy, no staged inauguration performances can stop the people's electoral victory and their course toward the great change; the great change that will vindicate the struggles, the sacrifices and the expectations of entire generations for national independence, popular sovereignty, social justice and liberation.

From the chaos and the landscape of a scorched earth, which panic-stricken New Democracy is leaving behind, the new Greece will be born. For the first time, the overwhelming majority of the underprivileged Greeks will at last become a political majority. They will elect, from within a strong self-sustaining PASOK government, the people who will be omnipotent in power. Friends: Tonight I call upon you to overcome your traditional political affiliations and actively participate in the regenerative PASOK course for the great change, so that all of us, together, may lay the foundations of a new Greece nationally proud and socially just. I thank you warmly for having listened to me. Good night.

[Text] We broadcast a summary of the speech delivered at Ioannina tonight by PASOK Chairman Papandreou.

PASOK Chairman Papandreou, addressing a people's gathering in Ioannina at 2000 today, referred to his party's agrarian policy and accused the government of not having carried out infrastructure projects so that the rapid economic development of Epirus could be possible. Papandreou then spoke about the projects to be given priority by a PASOK government; these would be national defense, education, health and insurance. He also stressed that primary questions would be the reorganization of the administration and ridding the agrarian population of middlemen.

Finally, the PASOK chairman criticized the prime minister, saying that while he was declaring at Lesvos that NATO is securing our borders, NATO Secretary General Luns made a statement in Brussels undermining our country's sovereign rights in the Aegean and inadmissibly intervening in our country's internal affairs. From Ioannina, PASOK Chairman Papandreou challenged Prime Minister Rallis to clearly denounce Mr Luns' statement which undermines our nation and our sovereign rights. He also warned Mr Luns that the Aegean islands are Greek and that the Aegean airspace is also Greek. Finally, he denounced as inadmissible NATO's flagrant intervention in our internal political life.

News Conference

NC290714 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 28 Sep 81 p 9

[By special correspondent Yeoryios Votsis]

[Excerpts] Ioannina, 28 Sep -- "As a government, we want to have excellent relations with the West as well," stressed Andreas Papandreou in answer to questions (not always innocent) from foreign correspondents immediately after the Ioannina impressive gathering last Saturday night.

Following are the questions from the foreign correspondents and Mr Andreas Papandreou's full answers:

Question: You have many followers, but you also have many opponents. What you have been saying is provoking the rightwing forces in Greece and/or the military government in Turkey. Do you expect any indirect or direct reaction from these forces after the elections?

Answer: I do not anticipate any indirect or direct action; absolutely none. Probably you did not listen carefully to what I said tonight. To what I conveyed to the Turkish leadership; the peoples of Greece and Turkey must struggle together for their independence from other forces. We have nothing to share. We are not threatening Turkey. We want peace with Turkey. It is clear, however, that the Greek people and the Greek Armed Forces will never cede even an inch of Greek territory.

Concerning the Greek Armed Forces, they are loyal and have shouldered huge responsibilities for the defense of the territorial integrity and the safeguarding of national independence. What I can say about the Greek Armed Forces is that we respect their serious mission for Greece and its people.

Question: You have made a distinction between the people and the present government of Turkey.

Answer: I have not said this. You have been given the wrong translation. I do not interfere in Turkey's internal affairs. It is not my business. I have sent a message to the Turkish leadership. It is a message of peace but at the same time a message of strength. Greece will not be forced into concessions.

Question: Do you believe that Luns' statements are the beginning of some expedient actions by NATO against PASOK?

Answer: Not so: What Luns has done was to wage an attack against Greece. You might have noticed that my answer was not actually different from the answer which Mr Averof has given -- later of course. Naturally, as long as he interferes with our internal affairs, there is also a question for PASOK. What Mr Luns has done, however, was to insult the Greek people; not merely PASOK but all the Greeks.

Question: Some people say that these elections will bring about basic changes in Greek policy. There is the view that Greece, under your leadership, will turn toward the left and away from the West.

Answer: PASOK is clearly a socialist party and, therefore, it is leftist. Concerning the story that PASOK will turn Greece away from the West, I believe that the matter is placed wrongly. We want to have excellent relations with the West. However, we do not consider that the West is the entire world. There is also Eastern Europe; there are the Balkans and the Mediterranean.

Greece is part of southern Europe, the Mediterranean, the Balkans and of Europe. As I have also said in my speech, our target is to turn toward all cardinal points; East, West, North and South. As to the change you said that PASOK will bring about, this is true. We promise the change to the Greek people.

LUNS CLARIFIES STATEMENT ON AEGEAN, AIRSPACE

[Text] Following a demarche by Greece's permanent ambassador to NATO, the alliance's secretary general Joseph Luns Saturday retracted parts of his statement Friday concerning the status of Greek islands and Greek airspace over the Aegean.

The Greek ambassador, Mr Athanasiou, visited Mr Luns Friday to demand explanations concerning Mr Luns' remarks, which appeared to question Greek sovereignty over the Aegean islands and airspace. Following the visit, Mr Luns said that some points of his statement "had not been rendered accurately" by the French news agency (AFP) which had carried the original story from Brussels.

Mr Luns said he had asked AFP to clarify that:

1) The status of Greek islands was never mentioned during Luns interview with the AFP correspondent Friday. This status, Luns said, has been determined by the Treaty of Lausanne.

2) Luns did not speak of the command over Greek-Turkish airspace, but only of the command of Greek airspace over the Aegean.

FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH HAIG AT UN 29 SEP

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in New York for the UN General Assembly sessions, held a meeting with Secretary of State Alexander Haig last night. Our correspondent has learned that bilateral relations and military and economic aid issues were reviewed at the meeting. Various international issues and the Cyprus question were also discussed.

In a statement after the meeting, the U.S. Government spokesman said that his country would continue to actively support the intercommunal talks that aim at finding a lasting solution to the Cyprus problem. He added that the Turkmen-Haig meeting was held in a positive and sincere atmosphere. Turkmen will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and Yugoslav Foreign Minister Vrhovec today.

ULUSU TOURS SOUTHEAST, SPEAKS IN SIIRT

[Excerpt] Pointing out that those who are exerting efforts to disrupt Turkey and to separate Turkey from the West and the civilized world might be willing to resume their ideological activities as in the past, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said: Those involved in such activities should know that their efforts will not be successful.

Ulusu departed Ankara today for Diyarbakir on the first leg of a 3-day tour of southeastern Anatolia. Public Works Minister Tahsin Onal, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol and Village Affairs and Cooperatives Minister Munir Guney are accompanying the prime minister on his tour.

Ulusu was received at Diyarbakir airport by Governor Erdogan Sahinoglu and senior officers. He then flew by helicopter to Siirt where he was welcomed by Governor Musa Atik and Brigadier Gen Ismet Avsar with a military ceremony. After he visited with the governor, Ulusu addressed the people in front of the governor's office.

After recalling that his government engaged in a major struggle against anarchy, terrorism and secessionism since its formation a year ago, Ulusu said that important results were achieved in this field. The prime minister noted that in the past state authority was undermined, particularly in the border areas, and that economic and social problems were exacerbated as a result. But, he said, due to the firm policies of the government, peace, tranquility and economic stability have returned here and throughout the country.

Ulusu continued: It is a known fact that the inhabitants of this area are no less patriotic and no less sympathetic to our armed forces than those living in other parts of the country. In the past, our citizens in this region -- like those in other regions -- lived through difficult and bitter days. Treacherous murders were committed, families were hurt. However, due to your cooperation and efforts, those days are a thing of the past. You can now face the future with hope and security. Let us express our gratitude for this as a nation to the Turkish Armed Forces -- which have always cared for the lofty interests of our country and our people -- for the historic task they have carried out.

Prime Minister Ulusu pointed out that all government employees as well as all workers and employers like the rest of the people currently are performing their duties in a climate of patriotism, national unity and brotherhood. He continued: I am warning all concerned government employees to be fair and impartial in the discharge of their duties, in this part of the country as in the rest. I must express my appreciation for efforts that have been made in this direction. We are witnessing the consolidation of feelings of national unity and solidarity which reached the point of destruction prior to 12 September 1980. No internal or external force will succeed in dismembering this country.

Those who are exerting efforts to disrupt our country and to separate it from the West and the civilized world might be willing to resume their activities as in the past in order to spread their ideological venom or use their unchanging tactics under the guise of the Armenian problem or another problem. Our geographic location has been the reason for being subject to such aggressions and aspirations throughout our history; this might be the case in the future as well. However, those resorting to such initiatives should know that their efforts will be unsuccessful.

COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH TUNISIA

[Text] Official talks between Turkey and Tunisia have ended in Ankara. An agreement on cooperation in the fields of economy, industry and technology and a supplementary trade protocol were signed today at the conclusion of the talks. Turkish Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk and Tunisian National Economy Minister Abdelaziz Lasram signed the agreement on behalf of Turkey and Tunisia respectively. In a statement on this occasion, Canturk said that the agreement represented the first step in the realization of a broad cooperation envisaged between the two countries. Canturk said that an agreement was reached for the formation of a joint marketing firm and the construction in Tunisia of factories to produce cotton yarns and compressors for refrigerators. Canturk added that prospects would be examined for the building of a fertilizer factory in Iskenderun with the participation of Kuwait. In his turn, the visiting economy minister said that his country regarded comprehensive cooperation with Turkey as vitally important. Noting that proposals of cooperation were being examined meticulously by Turkish officials, Lasram said that he was optimistic about the outcome. The Tunisian trade delegation will depart Turkey today.

[Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk's 29 September statement on the signing of Turkish-Tunisian agreements -- recorded]

[Text] The purpose of these agreements is as follows: One of them is a document aimed at developing Turkish-Tunisian cooperation in the economic, technical and industrial fields. The second is a protocol aimed at raising the level of our trade. The last deals with the minutes of our talks. We believe that the economic cooperation toward which we aspire, in addition to the historic ties existing between the two countries, will play a great role in the two countries. One of the documents we signed aims at developing existing trade relations. It is a short term project. The agreement which will secure technical and industrial cooperation is a long-term one and is very significant. I believe that cooperation in this field will greatly strengthen the economies of both countries. The cotton yarn and refrigerator compressor factories we plan to build jointly and the fertilizer factory we plan to build in Turkey with the participation of friendly Kuwait is only a start. I believe that from this start we shall move on to an atmosphere of joint activities including tourism and transportation. The new economic ties to be formed between the two countries will further strengthen our friendship.

GOVERNMENT, U.S. SIGN AGREEMENT ON DEBTS

[Text] An agreement concerning the rescheduling of Turkish debts to the U.S. Government and certain other U.S. financial bodies amounting to $60 million was signed in Ankara today. A statement by the Finance Ministry says the agreement was signed by Nazif Kocayusuf Pasaoglu from the Turkish Finance Ministry and by U.S. Ambassador to Ankara Robert Strausz-Hupe. The payment will be made in 10 years but no payments will be made during the first 5 years.

TURGUT OZAL COMMENTS ON MEETINGS IN WASHINGTON

[Statement by Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal in Washington to attend annual International Monetary Fund and World Bank meetings; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] We arrived here on 25 September. That same evening a meeting was held with the participation of Turkey, Belgium and Austria, and the following day, meetings of the interim committee and the development committee began. Our colleagues attended these meetings. Yesterday we attended a seminar on Turkey organized by Georgetown University. I addressed the opening and afternoon sessions of the seminar which dealt with economics. The seminar was very successful. I believe that I was able to explain in detail to the U.S. administration and to the private sector the current situation in Turkey.

The World Bank General Council meeting will be held today and in the coming days. We met with the IMF managing director, Jacques de Larosiere, yesterday evening. Any problems with the IMF are out of the question. On the contrary, they are most satisfied with developments in Turkey. They expressed satisfaction. I believe that in the coming months Turkey's situation will continue to improve. We shall meet with the World Bank deputy president and the president tomorrow. We will meet the U.S. finance minister [as heard] on Friday. We shall also meet with various foreign ministers.

MEETING HELD WITH YUGOSLAV TRANSPORT DELEGATION

[Text] The Turkish-Yugoslav joint transportation committee met today in Ankara to discuss possibilities for cooperation in the field of highway, maritime and railway transport. In an opening statement, Transportation Ministry Deputy Undersecretary Orhan Bugdac said that Turkey aims at further developing its relations with Yugoslavia, especially in the field of transportation. Also speaking at the meeting, the head of the Yugoslav delegation, (Slavko Simonovic), said that the talks will contribute to transportation relations between the two countries. Increasing the quota for highway transit passage will also be discussed at the talks. A protocol is expected to be signed at the end of the talks that will end on 30 September.

JOURNALIST SENTENCED TO 75 DAYS IN PRISON

[Text] Ankara, 29 Sep (AA) -- Nahit Duru, editor in chief of ARAYIS magazine, was given a 75-day prison sentence by the martial law court today for an article titled "The Political Show." The court decided that the article was in violation of communique No 52 of the National Security Council banning political speculations in the press.

TCP SECRETARY BILEN'S REPORT TO PARTY PLENUM

Part Ten

TA221254 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 21 Sep 81

[Tenth and final part of report submitted by Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General Bilen on behalf of the Politburo to the TCP Central Committee plenum; date not given -- read by announcer]

[Text] Comrades, heavy attacks have been launched against our party, the TCP, and intensive arrests have been made. The collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie thought it could destroy the TCP with these attacks.

It could not and will not be able to. Our party lives. Unfortunately, everything is not as it was before. The work conditions have become more difficult. Our party has been faced with new difficulties. There are great problems to be solved in the organizational field.

Nevertheless, our party began to heal its wounds without delay and launched itself into an intensive work atmosphere in order to carry out its duties for solving these new problems. Now we fight under new conditions. All our activities are characterized by deep secrecy. It is our duty to reorganize our activities in all fields in accordance with the new conditions. The successful fulfillment of these duties depends on the determination of our deficiencies, mistakes and weaknesses in recent times, and on our assessment of the objective and subjective reasons for our losses.

We must (?follow) together the extent to which the resolutions of the May 1980 plenum have been implemented. We must determine reasons where the resolutions were not implemented. Let us keep this in mind first and foremost; it is of constructive importance to carefully and correctly establish the link which connects all the problems, whenever problems accumulate.

Under conditions of heavy attacks and reaction, our basic duty is to protect our party. However, the duty to protect is not only a political organization duty. First and foremost, it is a political ideological duty. Unless this problem is grasped as such, the tactic of organizational withdrawal will not be understood. The difference between defense and withdrawal cannot be seen clearly. Unless we learn how to withdraw in the right way we cannot reach our aims.

The duty to protect the party depends as much on our political tactics as on the political experience of our cadres, and on stronger discipline in party activities. We cannot say that for such conditions our cadres' past experience is sufficient. However, our cadres are gaining this experience now, under fire, and they are becoming stronger. Loyalty to the party and party discipline is strong among our cadres. However, under difficult conditions it is not enough only to obey party resolutions. It is essential to speedily implement them; that is, to further strengthen the party discipline in actual work.

The problem of protecting the party cannot be considered independently from political conditions, from the party's situation, because this problem is closely linked with other political and organizational problems. There is no such thing as absolute secrecy. Such an attitude whould break the party away from the masses and liquidate it. Our party has pursued a path of thrusting itself into the masses, an aggressive policy. Fighting parties are attacked. On the other hand, it is not right for a party to work only in accordance with the conditions of the day. A Leninist party must be able to pass from one type of struggle, and from one type of organization to another quickly. It must always work keeping in mind that the conditions might become more difficult any minute. It is impossible to say that during the past period we took sufficient steps in that direction.

The process of our party's getting up on its feet took place under conditions of relatively expanded democratic freedoms. At the time, mass struggles were developed fast. The masses led by our working class were becoming speedily politicized. Our party's guiding role stepped up this development further. Our party was illegal but it was essential to welcome and guide this development. Our party directed its efforts to that. It was significantly successful. However, this development drew our party toward semilegal positions. Our experience makes it necessary to draw the following lessons; under such conditions of development, it is necessary to further strengthen the illegal party organizations on the one hand, while well assessing the legal work possibilities on the other. The legal work and organization styles necessary for development must be prepared beforehand. It is wrong to avoid such styles of legal political organization and work out of fear of legalism.

Undoubtedly, under all conditions, the success of legal activities is based on strong illegal party organizations.

During this process of speedy development, we have had deficiencies in the election, appointment and development of party cadres. In places, young cadres with insufficient political experience had to assume administrative duties. This situation caused weaknesses in the political administration. It led to certain negative developments in party life. In some places, we observed personal administration tendencies and domination. We had significant weaknesses in the distribution of labor, expert training, supervision and putting an end to partisanship.

The fact that we could not implement the illegal work principles fautlessly all the time made it easier for the police to attack us.

At the present level of our party's development, it has become even more important to implement a cadre policy based on objective and scientific foundations for the election, appointment and development of our cadres. We must take concrete measures at every level to strengthen the collective administration, to develop the distribution of labor and cooperation, to increase supervision and to eliminate the tumors of leftist sectarianism in the party life.

It is necessary to perfect the principle of democratic centralism and to further emphasize centralism. However, domination is not sound centralism, nor is waiting for orders from above all the time in our daily activities. Every organization and every member is responsible for the implementation of the party resolutions in its own field. Such responsibility can be achieved if the basic party organizations can work with initiative.

While assessing the problems of the party organizations inside and outside the countries, we must consider them both in the light of the general party norms and in the individual working conditions of each of them. Under the new conditions, our Western Europe organizations will make important contributions to our party in pulling itself together and in becoming stronger.

We establish this once again: Every kind of weakness in the ideological field inevitably reflects on the organizational structure and activities. To strengthen the ideological struggle means to strengthen the party organizations. On the other hand, a right policy can be implemented only if there are sound and strong party organizations.

Comrades, the TCP Central Committee plenum is carrying out a historic duty. Today, in Turkey, millions of workers are separated from each other, they are dispersed. The progressive forces and groups can no longer see the so-called leaders who led them under parliamentarian conditions. The bourgeois parties have abandoned their masses, the chiefs of the leftist radical groups have abandoned their militants whom they used as tools. The reactionary military dictatorship closed the masses' democratic organizations and arrested the leaders of these organizations with the use of the bayonet. Millions of people find themselves without organizations, without leaders today. To heal the party's wounds, to put our steel-disciplined organization on its feet with a much greater energy than before and to establish the unity of the national democratic forces means to lead the millions. If we can succeed in this duty, then the working class and our people will emerge stronger from the 12 September coup. We will succeed in that, because there is an organized force, a party, in Turkey today which can succeed in this duty and which has the right policies. That party is the TCP. The TCP is living and fighting.

Certain Aspects of Ideological Activities

Comrades, for our party to overcome the present difficult problems, it is necessary for our ideological activities, especially our agitation and propaganda activities, to become stronger.

All of the resolutions adopted during the May 1980 plenum could not be implemented under the new conditions created by the military coup of 12 September. Consequently, it is correct to say that the criticisms leveled by the previous plenum on our ideological activities are still generally valid, and that the weaknesses of our ideological activities have not been completely eliminated.

The plenum must extensively discuss ATILIM, our party's central organ, and must supply answers to the question of how to develop it more. ATILIM is the organ of the party's Central Committee. It spreads its policies. However, it is a fact that a newspaper which does not have sound communication channels that can overcome all obstacles between itself and the masses loses a great deal from its character as a collective propagandist, collective agitator and collective organizer. Unless ATILIM carries information, reports and commentaries vital to the masses' struggle and life, the masses will not look for it. ATILIM can carry out its real functions to the extent that the party organizations supply it with lively news from the masses.

Under these difficult conditions, many communists are working with great self-sacrifice and proving that they will find the ways of linking ATILIM with the masses.

Comrades, our party took a decision to publish an organ which would deal with theoretical problems. We must discuss that decision now once again in order to be able to implement that decision. Such a publication must carry extensive discussions, based on the party line, to the complicated problems we are faced with today.

The Voice of the Turkish Communist Party radio is our most powerful weapon for disclosing the truth in our country today. Are we using it sufficiently fruitfully and effectively and in a way that the masses can understand it? Before everything else, radio talks must be short and striking. The radio must stop its single type of dry and conventional broadcasting. It must broadcast different types of comments, use interesting methods in broadcasting them and it must base itself on definite and clear facts.

The importance of face-to-face and verbal agitation propaganda increases in the present conditions. On the other hand, various verbal, written visual, aural, legal and illegal methods and means must be used to reach the widest masses. In doing that, we must refrain from using any methods or means which might alienate us from the masses.

Comrades: Our party's agitation and propaganda instrument must wage the ideological struggle in a much more energetic way. There are many steps to be taken in this field. There are difficulties that must be overcome. It is necessary to train experts and scientists for our party. The importance of party training has increased with the worsening of conditions and increasing difficulties. Means and methods suiting the present conditions must be sought and implemented in order to ensure the political training of members and sympathizers and to raise their ideological and theoretical levels.

The ideological struggle gains special importance today. Our party received wounds. From among those who used to praise the TCP more than everybody during the days when the masses could shout revolutionary slogans, there may be circles who might attack evey weakness of the party today. Opportunists expelled from the party are joining the ruling forces in their attacks against our party. Under these conditions there might be persons who deviate from the party line as a result of discouragement. An ideological struggle is essential against this and against all kinds of wrong views within the party. Today, the leftist deviationist movements which caused great losses to the Turkish workers movement must be absolutely exposed.

A determined struggle must be waged especially against the theories and practices of the Voice of the Worker group. It must be demonstrated that this group has completely degenerated and that it has slipped from being anti-TCP to being anti-Soviet.

It has become even clearer now that this group has slipped from extreme leftist positions toward being defenders of European communism; that it has approached rightist revisionism in its attitudes regarding the party's role in socialism and the problems of socialist democracy, and that it has broken the tie between nationalism and internationalism. This party conducts destructive activities that serve only the interests of the political police, as their attack on the TCP has taught us very well. The party must take up its ideological struggle against this group very decisively.

The aim of the TCP's agitation propaganda activities is to explain the party line and our political aims to the masses and to make the masses understand them. Our agitation propaganda will serve to improve the communists' working style among the masses and to strengthen our party organization under the new conditions.

Sound and principled ideological positions are necessary in order to pursue a flexible policy, to move toward a wide alliance, to link with the masses and to become part of it. It is necessary not to abandon even for a minute our ideological struggle to erase all traces of leftist sectarianism in all the working fields of our party or our alertness against [word indistinct] mistakes.

To demonstrate the TCP's struggle against anticommunism and antisovietism, to demonstrate its national character, to demonstrate that it is a party defending national interests first and foremost and to demonstrate that the party's loyalty to the principles of proletarian internationalism and its patriotic character complement each other. These are the important fields of our agitation propaganda activities.

BILEN ADDRESSES CLOSE OF PARTY PLENUM

[Speech by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen at the closing of the Central Committee Plenum; date and place not given -- read by announcer]

[Text] Comrades: The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Commitee Plenum is concluding its work. This plenum has opened a new horizon in the struggle path of our party. This carries an historic importance in the current difficult phase. Through this meeting, the directing role of the Central Committee clearly has been strengthened. This fact enables us to view the future class struggles with revolutionary optimism regardless of the harsh conditions.

The Central Committee is taking steps to guarantee the future of the TCP in the face of the fierce attacks by the reactionaries. The plenum concluded its meeting and work with success. It further enhanced the Leninist unity of the party. It thus gave the first strong reply to the recent anticommunist attacks against the democratic forces launched by the bourgeoisie and the junta.

The plenum showed that the TCP can convene an assembly despite the severe conditions it is currently facing. It charged the Politburo with the task of completing the perparations for the fifth congress.

The plenum convened at a time when the international tension has reached dangerous dimensions and when U.S. imperialists pressure on our country has increased. At a time when U.S. imperialists are seriously threatening world peace, the Central Committee Plenum accorded priority to the struggle for peace.

Comrades, the TCP Central Committee Plenum determined the most important duties facing our party, the working class and the toiling masses under military dictatorship conditions and the current struggle.

The plenum supported, with a revolutionary consistency, the struggle waged by all the national and social forces against imperialist hindrance of world and regional peace and pressure on our country, the exploitation by monopolies and the military dictatorship's pressure against the progressive forces. The plenum once again demonstrated the way to be free of military dictatorship and the revolutionary transition into a genuine democracy through the unity of front and struggle of all these forces. The plenum determined the political line of our party in the present phase. It clarified the kinds, methods and goals of communists' work among the masses that would be valid under the new conditions. The plenum laid the foundations for a wide alliance policy under current conditions. It determined the most urgent duties -- with its numberous aspects -- of healing the wounds caused by the attacks against the democratic forces. It enhanced the efforts to erase all traces of leftist (?deviation) from party life and conduct the struggle from Marxist-Leninist positions. In short, the plenum placed the struggle against the rightist military dictatorship at the top of the current tasks of its struggle line. It introduced a flexible policy and stressed the way to establish a wide alliance system. It worked on a correct style of work among the masses. It also confirmed that an iron discipline is a Leninist precondition for our party's new work under conditions of deep secrecy.

Comrades, the plenum witnessed lively discussions in all fields. The members of the Central Committee criticized past mistakes in a thorough manner. They drew lessons from these mistakes for our future struggles. The party benefited from these criticisms. From what viewpoint should we view our errors? Our party is not a spectator of the class struggle; it is actually involved in this struggle. Its mistakes are also within this struggle. The mistakes are ours. Our party was also hit in the attack directed against the democratic forces. Our losses result both from objective reasons and from subjective errors. We discussed these errors candidly and exposed them. We are approaching this problem with the knowledge that a struggling party can be assailed at any time. The plenum did not get bogged down with the criticism of the mistake or become introvert. It showed the ways to rapidly solve the problems and leap forward. As Lenin would say, [word indistinct] sound and principles ideological institutions amont the masses are needed in order to follow a flexible policy and turn toward a broad alliance. The plenum, which deemed it necessary to wage a constant ideological struggle against all traces of leftist sectarianism and be alert in the face of rightist mistakes, further enhanced the ideological unity of our party on the basis of Marxism-Leninism.

Comrades, if we want to point out an obvious characteristic of the Central Committee Plenum, it would be useful to recallan historic anniversary. The third congress of the Comintern convened 60 years ago with its message to the masses. This congress, which was very important in determining the strategy and tactics of young communist parties, was based on the struggle waged by Lenin and the Bolsheviks against leftist opportunism. Also during the second Comintern congress, which was held 1 year previously, Lenin introduced his work "Leftism -- the Childhood Disease of Communism," which is a basic guide to all world communists.

As it concludes its work, the plenum wishes all comrades great success in their future duties. Long live the TCP! Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

LOME GROUP EXAMINES EUROPEAN FOOD AID METHODS

[Text] Luxembourg, 30 Sep (ANSA) -- "Rome could become the capital of the battle against hunger in the Third World" in the opinion of an African representative to the three-day consultive assembly of the Lome Convention underway here.

The apprisal of the active role of Italy in Third World development and of the two projects presented by Italian M.P.'s Tuesday came in statement to ANSA by the head of the Mali delegation, (Ceewn Yaya Diarra), on the sidelines of the sixth annual assembly. His remarks were echoed by delegates from Nigeria, the Ivory Coast and Mauritania. The consultive assembly is being attended by over two hundred delegates from the European Economic Community and the 69 African, Caribbean and Pacific countries [ACP] linked to the EEC through the Lome Convention.

One of the pair of Italian projects examined during Tuesday's session was filed by the co-chairman of the joint commission, Giovanni Bersani, a Christian Democrat M.P. whose broad extraordinary program covered integrated regional development in the Sahel. The point in Bersani's project -- assessed by the delegates from the western and southern Sahara as more viable and farsighted than all others presented, including the French and Canadian programs -- contains provisions for urgent aid for the agricultural sector, new irrigation systems and new methods of production and marketing.

A project turned over to the assembly by the Italian Communist M.P., Bruno Ferrero, concentrated on the fight against hunger and malnutrition in the Third World. Ferrero, in his presentation, identified the present economic situation in Africa as "the worst epicenter of the world food crisis" and insisted that, for many years to come, food aid will remain the major weapon in the battle against misery and despair in the Third World.

In a statement to ANSA, the Italian Communist said, "our best prospect is to push Africa towards food self-sufficiency by replacing the green revolution, which has failed, with an intense rural revolution for integrated development through the mobilization of independent peoples."

The head of the Niger delegation, (Madou Mahamadou), told ANSA that what the ACP countries are asking of their European partners is a complete overhaul of European assistance and cooperation mechanisms. The Third World spokesman affirmed that it is not enough to offload foodstuffs or pharmaceutical supplies in African ports. What is required, the delegation chief said, is management for the distribution of these goods in the interiors of disaster stricken areas or to hungry people because Africans are not in possession of the means to do so.

In another area of proceedings touching on Italy's contribution to the Third World, confirmation came for a statement released earlier by the director general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), Edouard Saouma, on the utilization of the Italian allocation of some $12 million for FAO. The funds, it was learned, are to be earmarked for the purpose of agricultural machinery, tractors, spare parts, and hydraulic pumps for farm development projects in those countries most severely stricken by economic recession and hunger.

Also the food aid plan drafted by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo was favorably commented on in EEC-ACP quarters here. One Third World delegate told ANSA that, "at a time when the great powers are tending to cut back on their development aid allocations, Italy is showing that it is listening to and understanding African problems and the importance of solving them, also in the interests of the economic and political future of the European Community."

NO AGREEMENT YET IN TALKS ON POLISH DEBTS

[Text] The negotiations [by Western banks] with Poland on a conversion of the Polish debts, which began in Vienna Monday, will continue today. Originally the talks were scheduled for only 2 days. Although the participants in the negotiations are maintaining strict silence, it has been learned from informed quarters that one of the most important questions still unresolved is the Western banks' demand that Poland pay at least 5 percent of the redemption payments due for the last 3 quarters of 1982. It appears, however, that Poland's financial difficulties are such that it cannot even pay this small percentage (for 95 percent of the payments due a respite is to be granted until 1985) without difficulties. At the negotiations the Austrian banks, which have granted non-government-guaranteed loans to Poland, are represented by the Credit-Anstalt and Bawag banks. Polish debts to Austrian banks total 6 billion schillings, of which 1.5 billion due this year are subject to the current conversion talks.

The majority of Polish debts to Austria consist of government-guaranteed loans totaling 24 billion schillings. A conversion of these debts has already been achieved at the government talks in Paris.

AU301415 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 30 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Vienna -- At yesterday's press conference after the weekly cabinet meeting Chancellor Kreisky declared that Austria's socialist trade partners had always fulfilled their commitments punctually, and indeed in an exemplary manner. Apart from Poland's current difficulties, the "people's democracies" have always been exceedingly prompt payers and he wanted to stress this especially regarding the GDR, Kreisky said in reply to journalists' questions and in connection with slanderous reports published in the FRG (but also in Austria).

The GDR to date has met its payment commitments most punctually Kreisky said, and thus it would be wrong not to grant it the earmarked credits. Export policy must not, for political reasons, adopt a course that is not to the benefit of the Austrian economy, he said.

PARTY LEADERS VIEW FORMATION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

[Excerpts] After his party's bureau meeting, Social Christian Party [PSC] Chairman Paul Vanden Boeynants made a statement condemning "what can only be called a refusal to shoulder responsibility by the Walloon Socialists, who are more concerned with electoral motives than with valid solutions to both iron and steel problems and economic and financial problems in general." "Tomorrow," the chairman added, "I will have the opportunity to discuss the iron and steel issue with the press to clearly establish the responsibility of all involved and to specify our stance."

"We are prepared," Vanden Boeynants also said, "to take part in seeking a solution to the crisis provided it means 1) giving priority to settling all aspects of the iron and steel problem and 2) an economic policy which will move away from ultraconservatism. In passing, I would like to stress that the iron and steel industry cannot really be saved in an economy which continues to collapse and until public finances have been brought under control, ensuring the complete establishment and efficient running of national, regional and community institutions."

"If a real change is possible immediately without elections, why not?" Party for Reform and Liberty [PRL] Chairman Jean Gol replied when asked if his party is prepared to join a new government. "We believe," he said, "that elections would not be a good thing for the country, the communities or the iron and steel industry at present. Moreover the people do not want elections."

Turning to the iron and steel issue, Gol also remarked that while it is the main industry in the south of the country it is not the only one at Walloon level and that "if the regionalized funds were to be allocated tomorrow, what would be left for the other Walloon enterprises?"

PVV: "Nothing clarified matters Tuesday; don't count on us before elections. We will not participate in government now in any form." Unlike his PRL colleague, Mr de Clercq refuses to take over from the Socialists. Why? The chairman explained that the policy his party wanted to implement was a 180-degree turn from the policy which has been pursued for 6 years. Such a change must first be approved by public opinion and the voters. In De Clercq's view this is also a question of efficacy. A powerful liberal force is necessary if the draconian measures the PVV is proposing are to be taken.

The Christian People's Party [CVP] does not simply want a rehash of the outgoing coalition. Mr Tindemans explained after a meeting of his party bureau Tuesday that it is now necessary "to implement a real policy of industrial recovery. The country's economic health must be restored. We will ask which other parties are prepared to follow us on this course." Mr Tindemans seems to rule out the possibility of a caretaker government. "The new policy will be difficult. Special powers will be needed. Can a caretaker government do that?" Meanwhile the CVP thinks the Walloon steel question is not, or is no longer, being posed.

EYSKENS BLAMES CRISIS ON FRENCH-SPEAKING SOCIALISTS

[Text] The outgoing prime minister and deputy prime minister have held press conferences which continued the verbal joust they began last Friday. On his return from Laeken Castle. Marc Eyskens was particularly cutting in blaming the [French-speaking] Socialist Party [PS] for the crisis. "It is wrong," he stated, "to claim that the iron and steel issue hastened the government's fall this first day of autumn. It was pressures exerted from outside by a specific party that prompted that fall. Those pressures were inspired by motives other than saving or converting the iron and steel industry."

The outgoing prime minister expressed the view that the PS had exerted pressure on its partners in an unacceptable and dangerous way. Hence, according to Eyskens, the government was forced to resign by a party which represents only 12 percent of Belgian voters. There are two reasons for this resignation. First each member of the government has a duty to protect the institutions, especially when they are weakened and threatened. The rule of collegial responsibility exists within a movement. A minister who disagrees with the majority of his colleagues must bow to their view or resign. Furthermore the prime minister must protect the crown and prevent it from becoming a political stake. The second reason invoked by Eyskens is the fact that the government is no longer able to pursue a wise and energetic policy, thanks to the Socialist Party once again. The country needs waking up, Eyskens said, before concluding: "I am not resigned but outraged, and I am afraid of the fear of frightened people.

Deputy Prime Minister Guy Mathot answered Eyskens an hour later. "I refuse to play the petty game of saying, 'It's not me, it's him,'" the Socialist leader said. "Eyskens says the institutions are in danger. We merely asked for respect and systematic implementation of the agreements and pledges made several months ago." Eyskens talked of an obstacle, but he picked the wrong target. "An attempt was made to blackmail the PS by means of the iron and steel issue. The aim was to give Cockerill-Sambre a means of partial survival in order to continue to exert pressure on the PS." In addition, Mathot said, the competent ministers have not always been sincere. The outgoing deputy prime minister remarked that the prime minister had shown no sign of wanting to overcome the crisis since he had carefully refrained from contacting any PS leader since noon Friday.

Going on to explain the French-speaking Socialists' attitude in the past few hours, Mathot remarked that his party could no longer agree to the gradual erosion of the iron and steel case. It is to be feared that more far-reaching operations are in progress and that the Socialists' presence in the government irritates some advocates of unprecedented solutions.

Flemish Conservatives Blamed

It should be remembered that Claes has a threefold mission: Initially to determine whether there really is no way of repairing the government coalition in some way or another; if his efforts prove vain, to list everything the outgoing team must achieve as regards current business in the economic, financial and community sphere; and finally, to draw public opinion's attention to the serious nature of the country's situation. Unless there is a marked effort by the big parties, which seems highly unlikely, the chances of success for the palace's current favorite seem virtually nonexistent. The rapidity and abruptness of Leo Tindemans' reaction have removed any room for maneuver from the informateur appointed by the king.

In the informateur's view elections would only waste valuable time. In addition, too prolonged a power vacuum would certainly create an extremely difficult situation on the financial level, if only because the measures previously decided but not yet implemented would probably remain a dead letter. Furthermore the normal running of some state sectors will very probably be seriously slowed down. This will be the case particularly in teaching and in the unemployment insurance sector. As regards state reform, Claes envisaged two hypotheses. Either it is decided that the next chambers will be constituent and all or part of the list of articles at present being revised will be resumed, or a legislative term will be given to consider whether there is reason to continue what has been started or whether it is necessary to start over from scratch.

General Election 'Inevitable'

[Jaques van Solinge report]

[Excerpt] Mr Willy Claes was received by the king Monday morning and relieved at his own request of the information mission entrusted to him last Thursday. It is true that that mission had been completed, since the "Little Red Man" from Hasselt was able to give detailed replies to the various questions facing the political world after the resignation of Marc Eyskens' government a week ago.

The answers to these questions can be summarized as follows: No, it is no longer possible to form a government coalition having a majority in Parliament and presenting sufficient guarantees of efficacy without first holding general elections. Yes, there is a majority in favor of making the next Parliament constituent and continuing the incomplete state reform, it being understood that the revision bill which will be submitted to the Chamber and Senate will be limited to the list of articles drawn up in 1978. Yes, there is agreement among the parties in the outgoing majority to deal with current business. Yes, these same four parties are prepared to cooperate, after the elections and before the formation of a cabinet duly invested by Parliament, to guarantee continuity in the running of the state and its institutions.

Elections are therefore inevitable. Everybody has already started active preparations for them. It is true that, psychologically speaking, the campaign began many months ago and Mr Eyskens never succeeded in shaking off his image of an interim prime minister. When will these elections be held? It should all be settled in the course of this week. The government will meet Monday afternoon. All indications are that it will implement one of the agreements secured by Mr Claes from the four chairmen of the defunct majority to prepare the bill giving the next Parliament power to change the constitution. "I think things could move very quickly," Claes said. This initiative by the outgoing prime minister was taken after an audience the king granted to Mr Eyskens Monday morning.

NETHERLANDS

RULING PARTIES DISAGREE ON NUCLEAR ARMS DECISION

PM241247 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 19 Sep 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague -- For the first time a conflict over nuclear arms appeared yesterday between the governing parties of the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA], Labor Party [PVDA] and Democrats '66 [D'66]. Although the parties are agreed on a new postponement of the decision to deploy cruise missiles in the Netherlands, there is disagreement as to whether the whole of the modernization decision should be reconfirmed. As usual the PVDA rejects this, while the CDA and D'66 are in favor.

The reconfirmation of the modernization decision of December 1979, when the Netherlands gave its support to arguments for modernization but postponed a decision on deployment, is on the agenda of the semiannual meeting 20-21 October of the Nuclear Planning Group, which consists of the defense ministers of the allied nations. Before this date the Cabinet must reach agreement on the issue.

The conflict first appeared Friday during an Atlantic commission study day on nuclear arms involving discussions between representatives of the three government parties and of the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy and army officers, officials from the Defense and Foreign Ministries and other experts.

PVDA Second Chamber member van den Bergh said it was "unacceptable" that the government should reconfirm the decision. According to van den Bergh, reconfirmation would conflict with the position of his party that the December 1979 modernization decision was unnecessary. He said he expected the PVDA members of the Cabinet to convince the other Cabinet members of this.

CDA Second Chamber member Mommersteeg, however, wants to "accept the December decision as fact." Although the CDA said in its election program that the controversial decision to produce new weapons should be seen as a U.S. decision, we must not "still be angry about it and attack it," Mommersteeg said. According to the CDA representative. the decision must be accepted as a fact, because it forms the point of departure fo. the arms limitation talks between the United States and the Soviet Union which are to begin soon.

New D'66 Second Chamber defense spokesman Schaper agreed with this and remarked that it seemed politically clumsy after 2 years to wish to withdraw approval.

Ministers To Coordinate

[Excerpt] The Hague, 19 Sep -- The new government's nuclear arms policy will be mapped out in "firmly integrated" cooperation between Foreign Minister van der Stoel and Defense Minister van Mierlo. With this goal in mind, a steering committee has been set up consisting of top officials from the two ministries and alternately chaired by one of the two ministers.

Minister van der Stoel does not believe this interferes with the primacy of the Foreign Ministry in the area of nuclear arms policy. He pointed out that the written agreement with Van Mierlo clearly states that the existing areas of competence of the two ministries will be preserved. According to Van der Stoel, this means that primacy of the Foreign Ministry in the area of political policy and the primacy of the Defense Ministry in the military and technical fields will be preserved.

The steering committee, Van der Stoel said, will concern itself with all problems in the interface between the two ministries. He made special mention of the modernization of medium-range nuclear missiles, the defense budget, which will be presented soon, the Netherlands nuclear arms units in the context of NATO and the Vienna MBFR talks on limiting forces in central Europe.

The initiative for the two conversations between Van der Stoel and Van Mierlo came from the latter, although Van der Stoel stressed that he was also interested in reaching a good agreement. Van Mierlo did not wish to impinge on his foreign affairs colleague, who up to now has carried the responsibility for arms limitation policy. With an eye to the modernization of the Eurostrategic arms in October, Van Mierlo wanted to make sure of his joint responsibility for Netherlands policy at an early stage.

TWO FRIGATES TO RECEIVE MISSILE SYSTEMS

[Text] The Hague, 18 Sep -- The Defense Ministry is to purchase missile systems for two frigates. The purchase and installation of the systems on the frigates will cost 170 million guilders. The Second Chamber Defense Committee gave its approval to this plan in its first meeting with new Secretary of State for Defense Stemerdink.

It is expected that the two ships will be able to remain in service for a reasonable period, as will the missile systems to be installed. Of the 170 million guilders, 40 million will be spent in the Netherlands. In addition Netherlands industries will earn a further 30 million guilders through coproduction of these systems.

INVOLVEMENT IN S. AFRICA OIL DEALS STOPPED

[Cor Groeneweg report: "Help With Oil Exports Will Be Forbidden"]

[Excerpt] The Hague -- In its policy declaration on 12 October the Cabinet will announce a number of measures forbidding the involvement of Netherlands companies or individuals in oil exports to South Africa. However, at present an export ban is impossible, because the customs union treaty between the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg could not permit such a move as long as Belgium and Luxembourg do not do the same. The government intends to hold talks with the two countries on the matter, and if they do not agree it will ask for the union clause to be suspended.

According to an informed source in the Hague, Foreign Minister van der Stoel will give substance in this way to the agreement in the government program that this Cabinet will join in the oil boycott against South Africa.

According to the same source, the minister will only speak of the Netherlands' attitude to South Africa in his speech to the UN General Assembly today in "general terms" and keep the announcement for the government policy declaration.

According to the Benelux customs union treaty, export limitations can only be imposed if the three member states of the customs union subscribe to them. But up to now Belgium and Luxembourg have always opposed participation in the voluntary boycott. The measures which could nevertheless be adopted are the banning of all other possible involvements in oil exports, such as oil transport, the involvement of Netherlands citizens, financial involvement and participation in such matters as construction of oil installations.

GENSCHER ASSESSES TALKS WITH COUNTERPARTS AT UN

[Text] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- During political talks on the East-West dialogue held on the sidelines of the United Nations in New York, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher found great identity of interests, even with GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer. The assessment by the German foreign minister was made in a report to the Federal Cabinet today and outlined by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker at a press conference. The report is based mainly on Genscher's personal contacts with the foreign ministers [as heard] of the United States and the USSR and with his European counterparts.

According to the government spokesman, Genscher reported on "very positive" statements by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko after the latter's talks with Alexander Haig.

At a luncheon given by GDR Foreign Minister Fischer for Genscher, both ministers noted a similarity of interests concerning disarmament, especially concerning the efforts at the Madrid CSCE to convene a "conference for disarmament in Europe." Genscher found Fischer's attitude on this matter to be "very moderate."

Genscher's exchanges of views with his European counterparts, the government spokesman said, revealed that agreement on the continuation of the East-West dialogue is desirable. In his report to the Federal Cabinet, Genscher again drew attention to the three other important aspects of European policy: careful policy toward Poland; convening a conference on disarmament in Europe and participation of the European Community in the North-South dialogue.

FRG VIEWS WARSAW PACT THREAT, WEINBERGER REPORT

[Text] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- The Federal Government considers the Warsaw Pact threat to the West to be "enormous." Government Spokesman Kurt Becker made this clear after today's meeting of the Federal Cabinet at the Defense Ministry on the Hardthoehe. The meeting dealt with the overall security situation and the internal state of the Bundeswehr.

According to Becker, the cabinet "accepted as a report" the U.S. Government documentation on the extent of the Soviet arms drive. However, the Federal Government did not want to launch a debate about it. The compilation by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger "provides a graphic picture of the extent of the Soviet threat."

Becker emphasized that the Federal Cabinet affirmed its view that the West is able "to defend itself in Europe." The risk facing a possible aggressor is "enormously high." This certainty of defensive capability is the best guarantee for the preservation of peace in Europe. On the one hand, defensive capability is to be maintained while, on the other, it is a question of pursuing a policy of detente.

According to Becker, Chancellor Schmidt emphasized that "a little more arming does not touch upon the central problem of Western defense." Even a little more does not decisively alter the question of German public attitude toward the Bundeswehr and national defense. Inspector General Juergen Brandt informed the cabinet that the number of men eligible for military service would drop after 1984. The low point will come in 1994 when there will be a deficiency of 900,000 men.

PRESS REACTS TO U.S. DOCUMENT ON SOVIET POWER

DW301241 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 30 Sep 81

[From the press review]

[Text] In connection with the U.S. document on Soviet power, BADISCHE ZEITUNG of Freiburg writes: What U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger said about Soviet military power is aimed equally strongly at the American as well as the West European public. Congress is tired of cutting social expenditures upon Reagan's request while leaving the military budget almost untouched. This document comes just in time. The question arises as to whether it is convincing enough because almost all important comparative figures are missing. The reader is shocked by what the Soviets are investing in their arms production, thereby grossly disregarding the needs of their people. The reader also wants to know what NATO states can do together and whether enough has been done to stop the senseless race.

WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN of Muenster notes: Weinberger's document published yesterday is supposed to have a deterrent effect. The 99-page document on Soviet armament efforts which go far beyond the framework of defense requirements is supposed to be an instrument of inner satisfaction. With this study the United States hopes to have given realistic arguments to all critics of Washington's defense policy because emotions and not sober considerations still dominate the current counterarmament discussion. It is most doubtful, however, whether Weinberger's document on weapons will have the desired impression on the antagonists of President Reagan's security policy.

WESTFALENBLATT of Bielefeld points out: In the past, the Soviets set up obstacles in the way of every kind of arms control because they did not want to accept inspection measures. Now we know why. It is good that Reagan is not following his predecessor Carter's attitude which fostered wishful thinking regarding security. Now the West and the world can be certain that the United States is striving for arms control measures which will really strengthen international security.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN writes: The U.S. Government is campaigning for the confidence of its allies by demonstrating preparedness for agreements with Moscow through serious negotiations. Together with this information on Soviet armament is being distributed. But the document makes the readers ask what has been done so far to keep the new arms race within limits. The foreign ministers of both superpowers have finally resumed their talks in New York, but Reagan delayed arms negotiations for months.

[Commentary signed Me.: "Turned Tables"]

[Text] From the time nuclear weapons were first introduced, everyone has known that such weapons are mainly political instruments. Since the argument over arms control policy flared up -- this is being waged exclusively in the West, much to the pleasure of the Soviet leadership -- it is becoming increasingly clear that important political effects emanate from arms arsenals. With his documentation of Soviet military power, the U.S. secretary of defense wants to launch mainly a political-psychological counterattack.

The most valuable advantage of the "arms race" being passionately discussed only in the North Atlantic pact area and not in the Warsaw Pact is to be ended. The official American document is intended to touch off a discussion on the other side.

Weinberger's material is hardly necessary for the West because competent scientific institutes and defense white papers of North Atlantic pact members have made comparisons of and data on military strength available to all interested parties. That is not so in the East. Now millions of shortwave radio listeners in the Soviet Union and "fraternal countries" will hear for days the figures on intensified Soviet armament. We can now hope for some sort of political-psychological balance, particularly in view of a winter period with predictable shortcomings in satisfying the simple demands of daily life. In that case, the Soviet side will have to prove its desire for arms limitation in some other way than by voicing the primitive demagogical recipes it has served up dozens of times over the years.

Weinberger's documentation ought to be used most of all as an export article. It will be unpleasant for Soviet information policy which has pursued its so-called peace offensive particularly in the West by avoiding concrete figures about its own strength. It is not a matter of merely reestablishing the military but also the political-psychological balance. If one talks of peace, one must also talk of the policy of strength and the not so peaceful intentions of others. This applies particularly to the people of the other camp. Weinberger has begun to turn tables.

DIE WELT Report

DW301427 Bonn DIE WELT in German 30 Sep 81 p 12

[C. Graf Brockdorff report: "Hamburg or Frisco -- the Threat Knows No Difference"]

[Text] Washington has issued a study on the Soviet threat from the viewpoint of the United States. It emphasizes the global aspect and we are just one part of it.

The event is unique. Never before has a world power dealt with the potential of the other in this way, describing the threats on the seas, in the air and on the ground. The study clearly shows that the danger is not concentrated merely along the central front in central Europe -- a front which we view in a stunned way, to which we give priority in our considerations and which threatens to isolate us. America is not now isolating itself; we are the ones about to slide into isolation and through it into disaster.

The greatest merit of the study is that it has brought the global viewpoint of the current situation back to our attention. Nothing is more important than that. An alliance of free people will break apart if members of the alliance begin to define their interests according to their geographic location. The study does not say that in so many words but it stresses the following very clearly: There is no difference between threats to Bergdorf near Hamburg or to San Francisco. Both live with the same risks and both must bear the same burdens, at least if they want to remain free.

The study is available in English. We hope that the Federal Government will soon have it translated and widely published because nobody should be able to say any more that he does not know what is involved. Our society is an adult society; it can make its own judgments.

Although the document with its precise conclusions has arrived late for the public debate in Europe and especially in the FRG, we must hope that many distorted pictures will be corrected with the study's help. It deals in detail with topics of interest to Europe, particularly those we like to ignore such as the reinforcement of Soviet ground forces by about 30 divisions since 1967. It concludes that Moscow wants to make waging war possible without using intercontinental nuclear missiles. NATO's "flexible response" system is thus supposed to be paralyzed at a point that is critical for us. A war limited to Europe would become possible. Critics of nuclear counterarmament in the West state -- supported by Soviet agitators and KGB followers -- that the Americans have the same aim.

In fact, however, counterarmament is the missing link of "flexible response" because it establishes the connection with American intercontinental weapons. In other words, in the event of an attack against Europe, Moscow would risk an intercontinental war. The Soviet Union knows this but our intellectuals don't.

The progress made by the Soviets in deploying the SS-20 medium-range missiles is clearly described. Missing, however, is a description of the ability to use this weapon for selective strikes against important military targets as long as NATO does not have respective counterarms (Pershing II, cruise missiles). The current NATO strategy aimed soely at making the risk unpredictable is thus being made predictable.

The Washington authors should have considered the European discussion more by describing the "CEP" (circular error probable) of the SS-20 missile and its warheads. The facts about the Soviet threat, which are so well known to experts that they sometimes cannot sleep at night, must be fully revealed in this connection.

The study has a central point. It shows how coldbloodedly the Soviet leaders consider the possibility of war -- including nuclear war -- and how they are making preparations to survive. Moscow's doctrine is simple: It wants to emerge as the winner of the next war because its ideology prescribes that the capitalist world is doomed to destruction. Only proper deterrence can prevent that catastrophe.

The aim of the study is to make us realize these connections. Eppler, Bahr and Lafontaine will continue to publicly take care of the Soviet Union's welfare, with identical concepts of values. Others ought to take the study as a reason to look after our own welfare.

Critics will say that the study does not contain a comparison with "substantiated" figures. The authors were well advised to withstand this temptation. Everybody knows in the meantime that we must describe the strength of tanks, artillery and planes by such figures as 4 to 1 and 2 to 1.

Every experienced interigence officer knows that it is impossible to kae detailed correct comparisons of arms systems, leadership principles, people and doctrines of different parties. That would create a blurred picture of the situation, permitting the politically interested to make manipulations. The last white paper on defense issued by the Federal Government could not resist this. It succumbed to that danger.

SCHMIDT REGRETS KROESEN ATTACK; POEPPEL RETIRES

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- At the Bonn Defense Ministry tonight, Chancellor Schmidt personally expressed his regret to the commander in chief of the U.S. land forces in Europe, Gen Frederick James Kroesen, at the terrorist attempt on his life in Heidelberg 2 weeks ago. Schmidt met Kroesen at the ceremony marking the retirement of Army Inspector Hans Poeppel.

According to reliable information, the chancellor told the U.S. general that this was the action of individuals and that the German public thoroughly condemns the attack. It must not be allowed to harm German - U.S. friendship.

HANDELSBLATT EXAMINES GERMAN-U.S. ARMS DEALS

DW281603 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 25-26 Sep 81 p 2

[Hans Joerg Sottorf commentary: "Roland Turned Down"]

[Text] German-American relations, just highly praised during Haig's visit to Bonn, have their limits in the tough reality of armament cooperation -- as always.

Washington doesn't want the German-French antiaircraft system Roland. When the first armored antiaircraft missile carrier was turned over to the Bundeswehr, State Secretary Leister said that the fact that the Americans have taken out a license is particularly remarkable because they are usually the ones giving or exporting licenses in the arms business.

Through the 90 Roland systems, totalling $477 million, arms cooperation should be extended in the very narrow two-way street. So far, the Americans used only the Leopard gun which they mounted on their XM-1 tank. In addition, there is a compensation deal involving AWACS. The German attempt to sell the Leopard tank as such in the United States was blocked by the American arms industry as well as the purchase of VFW-614 planes by the Coast Guard.

The reason given, namely, that defense reductions force one to discard Roland is probably again just a pretext. Maybe this time Washington's irritation plays a role, created by Bonn's economizing measures that also involve defense.

COMMENTATOR ON NEW U.S. SPIRIT AT IMF CONFERENCE

DW301507 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Sep 81 p 3

[Commentary by Washington correspondent, signed RDS: "Stumbling Block in Washington"]

[Text] Some German politicians who did not particularly care for development policy may have silently given a sigh of relief after hearing the recent news from Washington. Finally, it is no longer the Germans who are feared as the "tough guys" at numerous conferences on North-South issues.

The American about-face has more than just tactical diplomatic consequences. The entire world has known for quite some time that together with the new master in the White House, a new spirit is gaining ground which the President skillfully demonstrated at the Washington IMF conference. The way the Reagan administration representatives sang their song about the market forces and the confidence in their own strength was something new. We have to say that the Reagan team has the courage to present itself to the poor states as "the ugly Americans."

Their one-sided attitude has practical consequences regarding their activities in Western development institutions from which the rich Americans, of all persons, are increasingly withdrawing because they do not consider it a direct lever to promote their foreign policy. That seems to be the actual motive for their song about market forces and private initiative.

Bonn had its own experience in earlier years with this unsuccessful strategy (development aid as an instrument of its own foreign political interests). This experience is not worth imitating. Maybe those who assemble in Cancun in Mexico in the near future will be able to convince Reagan of the hopelessness of his course. For otherwise, there would be another stumbling block after the quarrel on "counterarmament" and the high interest rate policy, a stumbling block over which the partners and friends of the United States would be constantly falling.

DEFENSE MINISTER REPORTS ON MILITARY SITUATION

AU302009 Rome ANSA in Fnglish 1942 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Sep (ANSA) -- Libya's instability poses problems for all the nations bordering on the Mediterranean, Italy included, according to Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio today. Lagorio, a Socialist, was reporting on the Italian military situation to the house Defense Committee.

The report had been eagerly awiated after it was learned only Tuesday night that Italian fighter planes had intercepted a Libyan jet which had violated Italian airspace Monday and after the air battle between U.S. and Libyan planes over the Gulf of Sidra last month. The minister claimed that the southern Mediterranean area was destined to become an area of friction between East and West, unlike the rest of the "front" which runs from the North Cape in Norway to Trieste in Italy. The problem should not be contemplated on military terms, he said, but rather with a view to promoting diplomatic actions aimed at easing tensions.

Concluding this part of his report, he added that he did not think that Libya would join "COMECON," the economic community of Eastern European nations. He said that it may be that Libya will grant bases to the Soviets and that this possibility has already caused Italy to review its current deployment of armed forces within its own territory and to close any existing radar holes in the southern part of Italian airspace.

For Lagorio the installation of cruise missiles in Sicily -- which experts in military matters have seen as a first step by Italy and NATO to contain Libyan expansionism -- did not dim prospects for East-West detente. On the contrary, he said, the recent NATO decision to install defensive missile systems in Europe has induced the USSR to open a dialogue that it had previously shunned.

Commenting on Italy's decision to leave the neutron bomb alone, at least for the time being, Lagorio voiced the conviction that Europe was not on the threshold of an armed conflict.

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON FOREIGN POLICY INDEPENDENCE

[Text] Rome, 30 Sep (ANSA) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo defended the independence of Italian foreign policy in a statement delivered here Tuesday evening to a conference organized by the "Cultural World Outlook Center" turned over to discussion of thirty-five years of the nation's policy abroad. After referring to the "profound autonomy of Italian foreign policy" as regards the United States, the foreign minister said that the big choices in these areas "have been challenges, never ones of conformity."

He argued that Europe, after the continent's contribution to the resumption of negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on Euromissiles, "must now make difficult choices so that these talks will move forward." For this purpose, according to Colombo, European unity must be achieved.

Another speaker to the assembly was Ambassador Robert (Ogaia) who recalled Italy's commitment to European policy formulation and pointed to the "important contributions which deflect the charges of immobility. "

PCI LOWER HOUSE LEADER ELECTED BY SECRET BALLOT

[Text] Rome, 30 Sep (ANSA) -- Giorgio Napolitano was today elected house floorleader for the Italian Communist Party (PCI). He was elected by secret ballot with 170 votes.

There were 8 blank ballots, 2 voided ballots and 8 missing ballots. Napolitano replaced Ferdinando di Giulio who died last July.

In the election of the previous house floorleader, the PCI decided for the first time to make the balloting secret. Di Giulio was elected with only 159 votes out of 182.

In recent months, the Italian press has singled Napolitano out as the most authoritative member of the party to oppose the line of PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer. Napolitano has repeatedly, in recent times, called for the need to forge some sort of political alliance with the Socialist Party around which all reformist and leftwing forces in Italy could rally.

PCI PARLIAMENTARIANS DEBATE PARTY 'APPROACH'

[Text] Rome, 26 Sep (ANSA) -- The approach to Italian politics of the PCI, the second biggest party in Italy and the largest communist party in the West, were aired publicly last night in a televised debate between three PCI parliamentarians, Gerardo Chiaromonte, Luca Pavolini and Achille Ochetto.

Chiaromonte, a member of the PCI leadership, insisted that the country needed a "democratic (power) alternative" to the "corruption" which has marked the Christian Democrat Party's (DC) way of ruling in recent years.

Taking a similar tack, Ochetto stressed that the country had to emerge from the "moral crisis" it is going through by getting "all of the country's healthy forces" to cooperate with each other.

For his part, Pavolini specified that "leftist unity" was in his opinion, the starting point for an "alternative" national leadership.

REPORT ON BERLINGUER SPEECH AT L'UNITA FESTIVAL

PM251127 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 21 Sep 81 pp 1-3

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 20 September speech at L'UNITA national festival in Turin]

[Excerpts] Turin -- With regard to the topics of peace, the struggle against the arms race and for detente, Berlinguer recalled the most serious and dangerous events of August:

-- The Italian Government's decision to give the go-ahead to the construction of the Euromissiles base at Comiso in Sicily. It is an initiative which could lead to a future risk of nuclear reprisals against the island and the entire country. Moreover, one must consider whether the U.S. decision on this deployment implies pressure and maybe military initiatives directed toward Africa and the Middle East;

-- Reagan's announcement regarding the manufacture of the notorious "N-bomb" -- a further step in the arms race, taken partly with the aim of "accustoming" the public to consider a "limited" nuclear war as being possible;

-- The incident involving military aircraft provoked close to Libyan shores, which Reagan himself extolled as a "show of strength" by the United States, and the consequent Libyan threats.

It has therefore been proved, even to the most incredulous, that in a climate of tensions and exacerbated confrontation between the two major powers and the two blocs, latent conflicts can flare up at any time, thus directly involving our country.

These events have sharpened the awareness of the threats to peace. Berlinguer cited the many demonstrations in August with which our party reacted to the new situation and the other voices which spoke out: that of the pope and the bishops, of Catholic and Christian organizations, of committees and authoritative representatives of the government majority, of intellectuals and scientists.

But they must not hide from us the difficulties now being encountered by action for peace. There are two particularly insidious obstacles: The first consists of the stances of certain politicians apparently determined, Berlinguer said, to administer tranquilizers to the public, supporting the thesis that "world peace is not now endangered" and that the two major powers will definitely reach an agreement eventually. Above all, this thesis conflicts extraordinarily with the repeated and alarmed statements by some of the most authoritative representatives of the European socialist and social democratic parties, such as Willy Brandt and Olof Palme. The second obstacle consists of the belief of the man in the street (an opinion undoubtedly held by a large proportion of people and which some people are trying to encourage) that "in any case we cannot do anything about it." We must respond to this supposed "commonsense" with the strength of reason and with references to experience, pointing out, among other things, that at other decisive moments too the action of people's forces has helped to discourage threats to peace and that there have been movements and struggles (suffice it to recall Vietnam) that have managed to alter governments' stances and the course of events.

Therefore, Berlinguer said, we proceed from the pondered conviction that:

1 -- The threat of a nuclear conflict is real and now more acute than before;

2 -- It can be averted and the involvement of the people's masses can play a fundamental role in the indispensable and urgent action to safeguard peace.

The world economic crisis, which is affecting various systems and almost all countries, is also exacerbating the tensions among the world's various states and regions. But what is most worrying is the change which now characterizes the arms race.

It is now not simply a matter of an absurd and continuous quantitative increase, but a change in the very quality of the instruments of extermination. Whereas hitherto every addition of new weapons to the two powers' arsenals was verifiable and was, in fact, mutually verified, now the sophistication of the new instruments of war and of their utilization is reaching such levels as to render any reasonable verification practically impossible. So it is as if an impenetrable gloom were spreading across the future of this lethal rivalry.

The very "balance of terror," hitherto considered a guarantee against the outbreak of a second [as published] world war, in fact seems destined to break down and make way for a kind of "ungovernability of terror." Berlinguer cited the alarm expressed on this point even by U.S. figures such as George Ball and George Kennan, former special presidential advisers.

Other dangerous factors that tend to escape control stem from the proliferation of nuclear weapons that can be (and are) produced even by belligerent states such as South Africa. Last, one must consider the extremely tense domestic situation of countries in crucial areas of the world -- such as Iran and Poland -- which could rapidly deteriorate in such a way as to disrupt international balances.

With regard to Poland, the positions that we Italian Communists have been adopting over the past year in the presence of the development of a very acute crisis which emerged -- we must not forget this -- as a result of a deep gulf between the Polish United Workers Party and a large proportion of the working class and the people, are well known. Now, the PCI secretary general said, the events of the past weeks and days are extremely worrying.

We are not unaware of the gravity of the disruptive thrusts occurring both inside and outside the process of indispensable renewal being carried out by the Polish workers; nor are we unaware of the threat posed by the temptations of moving toward unacceptable and in any case disastrous solutions based on the use of force. Our belief is that a positive solution of the crisis itself, which would guarantee the renewal, the stability and the security of the socialist approach -- thus avoiding ruptures in the balance between the blocs -- can be sought only through an understanding among the major components of Polish society -- the communists, the trade unions and the Catholic Church. We believe that such an understanding must exclude and isolate the irresponsible and extremist forces, wherever they manifest themselves.

As far as we can, Berlinguer concluded on this point, we will make every effort to encourage this essential understanding for peacefully and autonomously resolving Poland's serious problems, which is also important for the continuation of an experiment of socialist renewal.

I will not repeat at this point, Berlinguer added, our objective analysis -- which we have already clearly expressed several times -- of the causes of and responsibilities for the crisis of detente, pointing out frankly the role played in this by acts of force carried out by the Soviet Union, extending as far as the dangerous intervention in Afghanistan, and the role played by the United States, whose policy, especially following Reagan's advent, has turned down a path that causes great concern, on account of both the new thrust imparted to the rearmament policy and the direct and indirect support that it gives to reactionary regimes such as those of El Salvador and other Central American countries and South Africa. We have also expressed critical assessments of certain aspects of the foreign policy of other countries, including China.

The important thing now is to reassert the fact that the tensions between the major powers is becoming exacerbated and objectively leading to the gloomiest prospects for the world.

It is this very situation that determines our belief concerning the irreplaceable role that can be played in reducing tensions and facilitating a resumption of dialogue by forces such as the Nonaligned Movement, a more autonomous and active West Europe and institutions such as the Catholic and other churches. But we also have in mind the major role of major social and trade union forces and of the European democratic parties, especially the communist and socialist ones. But apart from these forces consisting of governments, institutions and parties, we have in mind the innumerable political, cultural, scientific, youth and womens' associations and organizations that have already made their presence felt and can play a more active role against rearmament and for peace. Peace and development are two objectives that must be shared by all forces, institutions and organizations that have mankind's future at heart.

Berlinguer pointed out that precisely to facilitate the attainment of these two aims the PCI Central Committee will draw up and approve at a forthcoming meeting a "peace and development charter," whose proposals will subsequently be illustrated to the parties, government and movements of a number of European and other countries. Nevertheless, the PCI secretary general said, we are not being presumptuous, because we are a force that even outside Italy is known and is taken into account, that has its own influence and prestige. And since we have very broad and varied international relations -- more so than any other Italian political party -- we feel a duty to use all our energies in making an increasingly specific and incisive contribution to the victory of the cause of peace, cooperation and development.

The PCI secretary then turned to a fairly topical and complex subject: The individual characteristics of the PCI and its policy; its relations with the Western social democracies (and also with the Catholic movements); the "third path."

Some people, he said, wondered whether the difference between us and the major social democratic parties lies entirely in the fact that we put forward the idea of an alliance between the working class and the great masses of people on the fringes of or excluded from society. Of course, the difference does not lie in this alone. However, Berlinguer stressed, this difference is not at all slight. It is substantial. Indeed, our definition transcends the concept and practice which have led the social democracies (in the best cases) to be the political projection of a working class seen as all categories of workers organized into trade unions and concerned almost exclusively with improving their working and living conditions. This limitation prevents autonomy from the capitalist system of your own country and the world capitalist system, which has prospered by plundering and exploiting the huge masses in the colonized countries.

We communists, however, think that the working class acquires its full ideological and political autonomy and carries out its transforming and leadership role, its role as a force bringing in a new society, when -- not confining itself solely to the trade union dimension -- it adopts, at world and at national levels, the aspirations to freedom, justice and progress of all the masses who are oppressed and excluded from the capitalist system.

The need to transcend and go beyond the second path adopted and tried out by the working class and its revolutionary party in Czarist Russia in October 1917 is also valid.

The time is right and we need a third path which might bring a new type of economic development and social order adapted to the West's conditions and capable of overcoming its crisis -- a development which guarantees and expands all freedoms, unlike what has happened -- although to varying extents -- in the various countries in which socialism has hitherto been realized.

Change is necessary, Berlinguer said, and Italy is precisely one of those countries in which the need for change is most obvious and pressing.

The PCI secretary turned to the final part of his speech, to the third of the decisive current issues which he mentioned at the beginning: the increasingly acute problem of the reform and regeneration of society and the Italian state -- the "moral question."

Italy is a country in which the damage and dangers which face us if change is not achieved are glaringly obvious. These are the reasons behind the communists' proposal and struggle for a democratic alternative to the system of power centered on the DC and backed by the parties with which it is governing the country. It is a system which is now in crisis but nobody wants to undermine its political foundation -- excluding the PCI -- and nobody wants to change the methods of administering power which characterize it. The consequence of this is that the crisis is spreading throughout the country, prompting deterioration in every sphere. The moral question has arisen and become increasingly acute because this deterioration has polluted the state, the institutions and the government parties so deeply and in so many different ways that it has not only given rise to a series of increasingly serious scandals, culminating in the P2 scandal, but has produced a distortion of principles and rules laid down by the constitution to goven the functions which fall respectively to the parties, the institutions and the state, thus causing confusion, decadence and inefficiency which are now reaching their peak.

This is the heart of the moral question, which is different from moralism, Berlinguer said. Ours is a political struggle which, while combating corruption, cronyism, the unprecedented waste of funds in corrupt practices and audacity in the private use of public power and money, aims to reinstate the correct relations and delimination of roles laid down by the Constitution for the parties, the state and the institutions.

This is the only way of making a clear, practical break with the system of power centered on the DC and with its methods. If we do not move in this direction and simply aim at adjusting the balance within this system and these methods, it will be impossible to solve the problems of an adequate leadership of the country and instability will be perpetuated and people may even think of overcoming it by dealing low blows which will prepare the way for new early elections which would be another blow to the prestige of the republican institutions and which, for this reason, we strongly oppose.

But this is not everything. Some people, following this line, eventually arrive at ideas and proposals which ultimately run counter to the dictates of the Constitution. It must be clearly understood, Berlinguer explained, that we do not consider in this light measures (which, moreover, we consider urgent and necessary for the efficient functioning of the institutions) which, for instance, alter the rules of the parliamentary chambers and make their work more productive and quicker. We will be prepared to promote these and other similarly motivated measures together with all the democratic forces, independent of the various parliamentary lineups and of the fact that we are at present in opposition.

But some "major reforms," Berlinguer added, which DC and PSI leaders are discussing, are opposed by us because they aim to erode some of the linchpins of the constitutional order. Let us remember that we communists include among these linchpins the principle of the people's sovereignty of which democratic proportional representation is a fundamental element in Italy; the centrality of the elected assemblies; the separation of powers -- legislative, executive and judicial -- and hence also the defense of the magistrature's independence; and the exercise by the government bodies and the parties of the separate functions allotted to them by the constitutional charter.

PARTY PAPER SURVEYS SITUATION IN POLAND

[Unattributed commentary: "Solidarity Congress -- What Aims?"]

[Text] Solidarity's congress in Poland, whose proceedings resume in Gdansk this Saturday, constitutes -- judging by the statements made and the decisions approved in the meantime -- clear proof that Solidarity serves the aim not of the proclaimed defense of the Polish workers' interests and not of the democratic freedoms and principles inherent in socialism, but very clearly and objectively that of the destruction of socialism, elimination of the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] as socialist Poland's leading force, and the attainment of power -- contrary to the workers' and the Polish people's real interests and to socialism in Poland.

If it is true that mistakes made at the level of the government, the party and the trade unions which, by creating popular dissatisfaction, paved the way for the setting up and activity of a movement such as Solidarity, if it is true that under the specific and extremely difficult and complex circumstances experienced in Poland, many workers joined Solidarity believing that that organization could be an instrument for surmounting those mistakes, it is equally true that Solidarity's basic structures, the principles it upholds as well as its practice, and the very initiative of its formation are indissolubly linked with the activity of counterrevolutionary forces in Poland, which have always been encouraged by imperialism (counterrevolution did not originate in August 1980).

"We are convinced that a revolution is developing in Poland and that Solidarity is its driving force," the report presented in Gdansk by the national consultative commission presidium secretary, Andrzej Celinski asserts, and it adds: "Let us resolve to take into our hands the responsibility for the country's renewal and for extricating our country from the crisis."

Walesa, in advocating a centralized leadership of Solidarity, leaves no doubts with respect to the movement's intentions: "We are marching in a tough battle and we need good generals." And at another point: "We must have a strong leadership at moments of struggle, when the other side is still too strong, has the police and the army, and is in no way defeated." Other statements are to the same effect: the Solidarity leader in the city of Wroclaw stated: "We are in a state of war with the state -- a war of maneuver."

So it was already clearly demonstrated in the first part of the congress in Gdansk that Solidarity is conducting a war against the Polish socialist state, and in fact against the socialist community as a whole, too.

What is the aim of that war? Above all, the seizure of power. Jacek Kuron, one of the principal leaders of the antisocialist Workers Self-Defense Committee [KOR], openly advocated setting up a "committee of national salvation" to replace the current authorities -- a committee which would comprise Solidarity, the church and the PZPR (for the present...). During the congress sessions it was asserted that the Polish people were waiting for Solidarity to seize political and economic control of the country.

What are its aims? We could say that this is formally (only formally) the most nebulous matter, since Solidarity's leaders excel in not putting forward specific plans. Its activity is that of sabotaging the government's various attempts to surmount the situation of crisis experienced in the country. But if we go beyond the formal statements, we will see that the movement is imbued with anticommunism and anti-Sovietism, that the PZPR and the Soviet Union are the preferred targets and that statements in support come principally from the Reagan administration, or, more specifically, the tribute which his message to Congress pays to antisocialist movements such as KOR.

The methods intended to be used to win this "war" -- since this is the aim -- are obvious. A new electoral law and "free" elections are being demanded. It is intended to boycott the government's self-management plans, which are to be approved in parliament 24-25 September, by counterposing to it a referendum -- in fact bypassing the institutions and the state structure and funcioning as another power center, which itself is going so far as to threaten to hold that referendum on its own account. The provocation is not confined to Poland -- it is aimed further: The message of support for the setting up of other "free trade unions" in the socialist community confirms the aim of extending the counterrevolutionary movement to the socialist countries as a whole -- a long-standing and constant aim of imperialism.

In an interview with the U.S. ABC television network, U.S. Secretary of State Haig asserted that the latest Soviet message to the Polish Government -- warning of the extreme gravity of the situation which has been created, where it is clearly aimed to "wrest Poland" from the socialist community and eliminate socialism in Poland, and which is developing at the same time as a virulent anti-Soviet campaign -- "contains interventionist implications which cannot be accepted by the Reagan administration on any pretext." (Does the Reagan administration have anything to do with Poland?...) Moreover, he states that the vital contacts with the Soviet Government are dependent on the Soviet stance with respect to the grave situation in Poland. And that is not all. Haig asserts: "The Kremlin must demonstrate its will with deeds and not mere words, because the dialogue will depend on Soviet international conduct and the corresponding reciprocity."

Above all, this is a further act of interference in the internal problems of Poland, with which the Soviet Union has mutual agreements and relations which Washington is not only seeking to disregard but whose very right to be in force it is seeking to deny. What the White House is seeking -- in vain -- is to isolate Poland from its friends.

But that is not all. These statements were made on the eve of the first high-level meeting between Americans and Soviets since Reagan because U.S. President, on the eve of the meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. This is a meeting regarded as particularly important -- aimed at promoting bilateral negotiations on the limitation and reduction of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe -- and which international opinion, particularly European opinion, and even several governments of NATO countries have been demanding of the White House.

In short, imperialism, which supports antisocialist forces in every way (including those within the socialist community and particularly in Poland, is now seeking to use the pretext of the Soviet message to the Polish Government in order once more to torpedo peace and detente. The close connection between supporting counterrevolution and the arms race policy stands out clearly here once again.

FRG PRESIDENT CARSTENS ENDS OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] The president of the FRG, Karl Carstens, set off for Granada, this afternoon thus bringing to an end his official 3-day visit to Spain. In Granada President Carstens will begin a private visit to our country during which he will also visit Almeria and Santiago de Compostela, after which he will return to Bonn. Before setting off for Granada, Carstens was seen off by the king and queen and their children at Barajas Airport.

Perez on Carstens Visit

[Interview with Foreign Minister Perez at end of farewell ceremony at Barajas Airport for FRG President Carstens 30 September -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Did you speak about possible new German investment in Spanish industry during the federal president's visit?

[Answer] No. These subjects were not broached during the visit. They are the object of another kind of contact.

[Question] Is there a positive climate toward this?

[Answer] (?It is positive) and what the president is (?going to see) certainly [words indistinct].

[Question] Mr Minister, one last question: In the past few hours the U.S. Government issued a statement recommending that the European countries install nuclear weapons on their territory. How do you view this request, given that Spain may be on the verge of joining NATO?

[Answer] What I understand to have been said by a U.S. official is that there should not be a zone in which there is an agreement in the face of third countries -- basically this means the Soviet Union -- on the nonexistence of arms, or certain arms, unless this agreement carries with it an important reciprocity. This has nothing to do with the fact that both inside and outside the alliance the decision to install any kind of arms, including nuclear arms, is, and will continue to be, Spain's sovereign decision. Moreover, the government has a clear policy of not installing or storing nuclear arms in Spain either now or in the future.

CARRILLO: PCE OPPOSES 'INTERFERENCE' IN POLAND

PM251313 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 18-24 Sep 81 pp 9-12

[Report on 12 September speech by PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo at PCE Central Committee Meeting]

[Excerpt] Carrillo referred to the Polish problem, stating that the PCE's stance on the issue of Polish renewal has been clear and resolute from the outset. We have seen -- he said -- in that process the possibility of an instance of democratization of the system existing in the socialist countries and have declared ourselves opposed to any interference and even more so to any possible military intervention. Some nuances must be added to that stance. It emerges very clearly that, as opposed to the stance of the Polish United Workers Party, with its congress, which according to all witnesses was profoundly democratic, there is an intensification of extreme stances at the Solidarity congress which objectively could be a danger to Poland's process of renewal.

JORGENSEN, KREISKY DISCUSS ECONOMICS, DETENTE

[Ritzaus bureau report: "United States Also Carries Responsbility for Crisis"]

[Text] "With its policy on interest rates and its overall economic policy, the United States is just as responsible for the present economic crisis as the oil-producing nations with their price shock in the 1970's," Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said in Svendorg on Wednesday [23 September]. He was speaking at a conference organized by the union of semiskilled workers on the topic "International Detente and Peace."

"The economic problems must be solved to avoid further tension in world politics. One way of doing this is to make the developing nations into an economic partner. If this is not successful, we must look forward to global tensions never seen before," Kreisky said. He expressed the hope that next month's summit in Mexico between the rich and poor nations could revitalize the North-South dialogue.

Of the crisis in Poland, Kreisky said: "If the developments there end in military intervention, it will mean the end of the politics of detente for many years to come."

Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said at the press conference that the small nations also have a role to play in assuring detente. "A nuclear-free zone in a large part of both East and West Europe--and not only in the Nordic countries -- could make a contribution to detente. It would be a signal to the superpowers that there is a desire in many countries to say no to nuclear arms," Anker Jorgensen said.

OLESEN ADVOCATES MODERATE LINE FOR SOLIDARITY

PM251011 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Sep 81 p 8

According to Olesen, it is in the West's interests to prevent the Solidarity free trade union organization from going so far that a Soviet intervention becomes unavoidable. "Such a confrontation in the situation in Poland is more critical than ever and recent events have put increased pressure on the government in Warsaw." In Olesen's view, it would be most unfortunate if the Polish Government allowed Solidarity to develop into a political movement. However, Olesen stressed that he in no way wants to make himself into a spokesman for the Polish leadership.

Leaders' Comments

["CB" report: "Foreign Minister Attacked for Interference in Poland's Affairs"]

[Text] Former Foreign Minister Henning Christophersen and Conservative Chairman Poul Schlueter yesterday accused Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen of interfering in Poland's internal affairs.

On Tuesday [22 September] in New York, Kjeld Olesen said that it is important not to encourage the Solidarity free trade union movement to sow further dissension in Poland.

Liberal Party Chairman Henning Christophersen said yesterday on the Radioavisen program that Kjeld Olesen's words mean that the government is interfering in Poland's internal affairs although it has up to now been Danish policy not to get involved. Henning Christophersen also said it is unreasonable to put all the responsibility for a possible future crisis on Solidarity.

Poul Schlueter said that Kjeld Olesen's statement is "very badly timed at the present moment."

Communist Party Chairman Jorgen Jensen also said yesterday that there is no need for people in the West to tell Solidarity to hold back. He dismissed the suggestion of a threat of military intervention by the Soviet Union, but there is perhaps a possibility of economic measures. However, Jorgen Jensen is satisfied with Kjeld Olesen's statements that the West should not interfere in Poland's internal affairs.

Danish Trade Union Federation Secretary Bent Nielsen, who attended the first part of Solidarity's congress, like Henning Christophersen and Poul Schlueter, says that it is regrettable that Kjeld Olesen attempted to influence Solidarity's leadership in the present situation.

Finance Minister Svend Jakobsen said after a cabinet meeting yesterday that Kjeld Olesen has the government's full backing for the views he put forward.

PRICE REDUCTIONS ON F-16 PURCHASES SOUGHT

["CB" report]

[Text] Together with the Netherlands, Belgium and Norway, Denmark is interested in buying new military materiel in the United States if the United States is willing to reduce the price of the F-16 aircraft the four countries have bought.

The price reduction should correspond to the share of development costs of the F-16 which the four countries will pay. The development costs imposed on the four countries will amount to a maximum of $175 million, but a figure of $50 million has also been mentioned.

Defense Minister Poul Sogaard said the Netherlands Government has taken the initiative for the proposal which is now being discussed by the U.S. Government. The inspiration comes from a U.S.-Canadian agreement with similar conditions, when Canada bought its F-18 aircraft.

"In the light of this, the former Netherlands defense minister asked if the four European nations could have a similar agreement with the United States. We were granted a meeting on the subject with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger at the NATO ministers meeting in Brussels in the spring. For our part, I told Weinberger that we were primarily interested in reserve equipment and other materiel connected with the F-16's, if we were not asked for the money."

Sogaard added that it is a U.S. decision if any concession is to be made on the development costs of the F-16. He did not want to say what the size of the concession might be, but it would involve relatively small sums. He added that the Americans would not, of course, be willing to concede the amount if any of the governments did not use the money for military materiel, but merely wanted to add it to state funds.

AKTUELT URGES CP TO PRESSURE USSR ON ARMS

[Editorial: "Two Hundred and Fifty SS-20's"]

[Text] So many other people have played the Soviet Union's game in the question of "the Nordic nuclear-free zone." Why shouldn't the Danish Communist Party join in?

The Danish CP has done this in the form of a letter to Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen about the dangers in the superpowers' nuclear arms race.

Everyone can agree with this. It is pure lunacy to continue the nuclear arms buildup. It is made, unworthy and everything else which can be said in condemnation. And it is also hypocrisy on the part of the communists to tell the West what it should or must do.

Kjeld Olesen has replied to the communists and not left them in any doubt. He asks them to make an attempt to put pressure on the Danish CP's sister party in the Soviet Union -- just as European governments have made it clear to the United States how necessary it is to begin negotiations on nuclear arms.

Perhaps European communists and noncommunists could jointly achieve some results -- in the Kremlin and the White House. But the communists must be involved. Every 5 days, the Soviet Union deploys a new SS-20 missile and it now has 250 pointing at Europe -- each with an explosive effect 7 or 8 times greater than that of the Hiroshima bomb. It is this Soviet lunacy which must be brought into the picture -- but it is ignored by the Danish CP.

NEWSPAPER HAILS U.S.-SOVIET ARMS TALKS DECISION

[Editorial: "Clarification in New York"]

No result is also a result. The Nordic governments have been casting around for several months now in an attempt to find out the meaning of President Brezhnev's murky statements this spring and now they will have to satisfy themselves with the knowledge that they contained nothing more than a little psychological warfare. The matter can be dropped and there should be no more cause for worries that wild plans for Nordic zones will complicate the East-West negotiations on the possibilities of a nuclear arms agreement in Europe.

On this point, progress was made at the meetings in New York this week. Gromyko's first talks with Secretary of State Haig were not really a turning point in U.S.-Soviet relations, but they did mark the resumption of objective discussions on arms control 8 months after the change of U.S. presidents.

The verbal broadsides from Gromyko and Haig during the UN general debate bore the stamp of the last 6 months' overheated rhetoric, but behind the closed doors they were able to go to work with much more professional diplomacy in the exchange of their government's incompatible positions.

The agreement to resume negotiations in Geneva at the end of November is no less welcome for that. This amounts to the implementation of one half of the alliance's dual decision of December 1979 for the necessary countermoves to the Soviet Union's accelerated missile program with West Europe as their target.

The negotiation decision was intended to investigate the possibility of reaching an agreement with the Soviet Union on the reciprocal limitation of nuclear arms so as to leave a balance of strength at the lowest possible level.

If this is successful, it will have significance for the parallel decision to produce modern U.S. missiles with an eye to deploying them in West Europe.

As the mood in West Europe has developed, negotiations have almost become a precondition for a final decision on the extent of the missile deployment. And this is another reason why it is a good thing that they are starting so that they can make a contribution to clarification.

OFFICIALS TALK WITH ZIMBABWE PRIME MINISTER

[Mathias Luther report]

[Excerpts] On Wednesday [23 September], [Zimbabwe Prime Minister] Robert Mugabe paid a brief visit to Finland as part of a Nordic round trip. Mugabe and his delegation are in Finland and the other Nordic countries to develop contacts in trade, economics, technology, science and culture between these countries and Zimbabwe.

On Wednesday, Prime Minister Mugabe held talks with government representatives and with Mauno Koivisto who is handling the president's business. Mugabe also visited Outukumpu OY, which is interested in taking part in mining minerals in Zimbabwe and also in modernizing the country's ferrochrome factories.

Zimbabwe presently is making a major effort to develop its mining industry which is the country's most important industry after agriculture.

During the day's talks with the Finnish Government, it was possible to note that Finland and Zimbabwe take a similar view of many international questions, Mugabe said at a press conference Wednesday evening. Even though Finland is not a member of the League of Nonaligned Nations as Zimbabwe is, Finland shares the organization's endeavors, Mugabe said.

"It is also important for Zimbabwe that we were able to put forward our view of the situation in southern Africa and of how the conflicts there should be solved," Mugabe said.

On this point too, Mugabe found that the Finnish position is in agreement with Zimbabwean views, when later in the evening, he heard acting Prime Minister Uusitalo's dinner speech. Uusitalo demanded that South Africa "desist from its illegal occupation of Namibia" and that the UN plan for Namibia's independence be implemented immediately.

At this stage, no agreements were sealed between Finland and Zimbabwe. "There was not time to go into the details," Mugabe said. "That will be a job for future delegations."

The next contact will take place when a 25-man delegation led by Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola travels to Zimbabwe in October. Concrete agreements perhaps can be expected from this visit, Mugabe said.

SOCIAL DEMOCRAT PROPOSES NONNUCLEAR CONFERENCE

[Text] Finnish Social Democratic Party Chairman Kalevi Sorsa porposes that the nonnuclear states in Europe be called to a conference. He made his proposal to the Socialist International's meeting in Paris on Thursday [24 September]. Sorsa is chairman of the Socialist International's disarmament council.

Sorba's proposal was made in connection with the Euromissile negotiations, discussed by Foreign Ministers Gromyko and Haig in New York. The negotiations will be conducted by the superpowers and in the framework of the military alliances. However, Sorsa said that the final outcome of the negotiations will have a decisive influence on the security of all European states.

"For this reason, the nonnuclear states are justly worried about their security and they should all be able to make an active contribution to removing the danger of a nuclear war," Sorsa said.

At the meeting envisaged by Sorsa, it would be possible for those countries which have committed themselves to not acquiring nuclear arms and which want to work toward a reduction in nuclear arms in our part of the world to take part. In this connection, Sorsa makes no distinction between those countries which are members of a military pact and those which are not. The task of the conference would be to make public the non-nuclear states' efforts and proposals for increasing security and promoting disarmament.

"If the contacts turned out to be fruitful, the conference states -- or some of them -- could consider going even further to strengthen their nuclear-free status," Sorsa said. "This could happen for example through the nonnuclear nations' forming cooperation groups or regional zones."

In his presentation of the disarmament council's work, Sorsa also proposed that the United States and the Soviet Union should strive to reach as soon as possible a temporary agreement for a ceiling on the number of medium-range missiles in Europe.

However, Sorsa warned of the dangers of too much complacency now that the Soviet Union and the United States have finally been able to reach agreement on beginning the missile negotiations.

"Without exaggerating, the West European social democrats can count this breakthrough as a credit in their bank balance." Sorsa said. "However, they must not be content merely with this," he continued. "We must be on the alert and follow the situation critically. We must also try to see to it that the negotiations do lead to limitations and reduction in nuclear arms in practice," he said.

In his evaluation of the situation in the Nordic countries, Sorsa said that President Kekkonen's 1963 proposal for a nuclear-free Nordic zone is still alive and realistic. The proposal was given new support at the beginning of the year when the Norwegian Labor Party put its own proposal on the issue.

Sorsa gave the assurance that the Finnish Social Democrats together with their counterparts in Scandinavia are continuing the work to strengthen nuclear-free status in the Nordic countries, despite the difficulties which may result from the Conservative Party's success in the Norwegian election.

NORWAY

ARBEIDERBLADET CITES PROBLEMS FACING WILLOCH

PM251439 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 23 Sep 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Willoch's Basis"]

[Text] In an interview with his party's main organ, the Conservative Party's prime ministerial candidate, Kaare Willoch, said that when in government he hopes to implement as many as possible of the Conservative Party's policies. Even though he understands the limitations which will face a minority government, he made it clear that if a majority in the Storting does not agree to policies going in the direction to which the Conservative Party is committed, then a Conservative government cannot carry on. In other words, Willoch hinted at cabinet questions even before he has been given the task of forming a government.

We have never been in any doubt that a nonsocialist election victory this fall would result in a Conservative government wishing to pursue Conservative policies. We have also done our best to prevent this from becoming a reality.

On the nonsocialist side -- and this is true of the Conservative, Christian People's and Center Parties -- the tone has been different. From them we have heard that the objective was a three-party government. If this should turn out not to be possible, the most important thing would nevertheless be that a Conservative government, with support in the Storting from the Christian People's and Center Parties, should pursue a common nonsocialist policy. The basis for this was the nonsocialist joint document reacting to the government's long-term program, which was presented this spring.

We have never been able to understand how this joint document could be presented as some sort of government program. It bears witness to agreement on a number of points that are self-evident and shows divergent views in relation to important political questions. This latter is true of important aspects of oil policy, taxation policy, aid to developing nations, energy policy and abortion policy.

However, these are conflicts which the nonsocialist parties have promised the voters to solve jointly. They all went to the polls on the promise of giving the country an effective nonsocialist government. Even though the promise to voters of a nonsocialist three-party government has now been broken, none of these parties can run away from their responsibility for a common policy. Despite everything, it is the Conservative, Christian People's and Center Party Storting groups which will form the parliamentary foundation for a Willoch government.

We note that the Center Party's main organ, NATIONEN, promises that the two supporting nonsocialist parties do not intend to meet the new government with magnifying glass and yardstick. But at the same time, the newspaper makes it clear that the Conservative Party must realize and admit that there is a limit to how far loyalty to the government can be stretched. NATIONEN gives a clear warning: "As many as possible" of the Conservative Party's policies could in the eyes of other people simply be too many Conservative policies, for which it would be difficult to accept responsibility. Thus, a hint of no confidence from that quarter.

Given the weak parliamentary foundation that the Willoch government will have, it could soon become apparent that we are moving into a period with major government problems. We would like to stress again that it is the nonsocialist parties who are jointly responsible for the fact that we now have a new government and who have given the voters guarantees regarding the government's policies. These are commitments which must weigh heavy in political life.

The Labor Party as opposition party will naturally enough seek to gain influence where it can. The party's political platform is the party's programs, which give a good indication of what the Labor Party could agree to and of where the line would be drawn. However, it is important that it be clearly understood that the Labor Party attaches importance to the unity of its policies. They are not policies which a Conservative government could pick out one by one in individual areas, thinking that it could win automatic support from the Labor Party for individual parts of the whole.

Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland has used oil policy as an example of the Labor Party's attitude to such questions when in opposition. For example, the Willoch government must not think that it can win the Labor Party's support for increased oil production without the Labor Party simultaneously making demands regarding state direction and control of oil production activities, including the role and position of Statoil.

HAIG-GROMYKO MEETING SEEN SPURRING ARMS TALKS

[Editorial: "Summit"]

[Text] The Haig-Gromyko summit in New York was a demonstration of closed-doors diplomacy. But at least the deadlock in the U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations has been broken. It has now been decided to begin talks in Geneva on 30 November on European medium-range missile limitation.

The terse communique from Haig's and Gromyko's first meeting (they will meet again on Monday) gives no hint of the extent to which the two sides have met each other halfway on difficult practical questions. From the very beginning Moscow has demanded that not only the planned cruise and Pershing II missiles on European soil be discussed but also so-called forward-based U.S. nuclear arms in and around Europe (bombers, submarine missiles, and so forth). Washington in turn has wanted to include the medium-range missiles in the Russian arsenal deployed in Soviet Asia (toward China).

In addition NATO has stated expressly that the future talks on the medium-range nuclear arms in Europe must take place within the framework of the so-called SALT talks on the superpowers' strategic nuclear arms systems. This is completely logical, because from the West European and Soviet viewpoint the medium-range missiles are just as "strategic" as the superpowers' intercontinental missiles.

However, the stumbling block here is that new SALT talks are nowhere in sight for many months yet.

But at least the ball seems to have begun to roll. It was Oesten Unden [former Swedish foreign minister] who said, "as long as negotiations are taking place, the two sides are not fighting."

'No Cause for Jubilation'

PM300911 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 26 Sep 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Two Will Meet"]

[Text] Sparing no effort, the Soviet Union and the United States will try to reach an agreement on nuclear arms limitation in Europe. The negotiations will begin in Geneva 30 November.

This is the gist of a communique U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko issued jointly in New York Thursday.

The announcement is welcome but it should not give rise to jubilation. The negotiations will be very difficult. The mutual distrust is deep and the technical complications are almost endless.

On the same day as the Russian-American communique was published, the respected Institute for Strategic Studies in London presented its annual report on the security of the world. The report makes it clear that the international strategic balance is more or less in equilibrium, but as far as nuclear arms in Europe are concerned the Warsaw Pact has gained a rapidly growing advantage over NATO.

The Soviet Union's arsenal of medium-range missiles is responsible for this advantage, and as yet NATO has no counterpart to them. According to the London institute, the Soviet Union could fire 3.3 times as many nuclear warheads in Europe as NATO could. It was to remedy this growing imbalance that NATO in December 1979 adopted its much-reported "double decision," first to station new medium-range nuclear missiles in West Europe beginning in 1983 and second to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on European nuclear arms limitation.

From the very beginning the decision was controversial, and in the last year in particular several of the NATO nations' governments have been under increasing pressure from ever stronger peace movements.

It is possible that the communique from New York will dampen this agitation. But it is by no means certain. Pacifist opinion could take the beginning of negotiations as an excuse for demands that the preparations for NATO's planned rearmament be broken off until the negotiations produce results.

However, all indications are that it is necessary that these preparations be fulfilled. Only if the Soviet Union is under pressure is it likely that Russian concessions are possible at the negotiating table.

Since 1979 Moscow has issued several propagandistic invitations to negotiations on the European nuclear arms question. It is only too clear from these that the Soviet Union's objective is to preserve its advantage, something NATO naturally rejects. Only a solution that creates a strategic balance in Europe too can be accepted.

The Haig-Gromyko communique is vaguely worded, which is thought to indicate that there is disagreement on what the negotiations should involve. It has been clear in the past that the Russians also want to discuss the so-called forward-based U.S. weapons systems -- that is, nuclear-armed submarines and bombers in the European region -- while the United States wants to limit the negotiations strictly to land-based medium-range weapons.

This is only one of the difficult complications which will gradually come into focus. However, a first step has been taken, but at this stage it is impossible to say more than that the imminent negotiations will be of decisive importance for the international climate in the coming years, for the possibilities of halting the arms race, for peace.

AUSTRIA'S KREISKY NOTES TALKS WITH FALLDIN

[Text] "I am one of the more optimistic. I believe the Soviet Union and the United States have the opportunity to reach a partially positive result." Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said this after talks lasting more than an hour with Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin on Friday.

Both saw a certain amount of hope in the Haig-Gromyko talks, but otherwise devoted their talks mostly to discussing preparations for the North-South meeting in Cancun on 22-23 October. Austria is among those countries which took the initiative for the meeting and now it wants to discuss arrangements with countries like Sweden.

"We also discussed economic issues," Kreisky said in good Swedish. "To a large extent the problems in Sweden and Austria are the same. Money is expensive. It is difficult to get investment going."

[Question] Did you discuss a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries?

[Answer] We live in central Europe. But when I was in Denmark (Kreisky has just come from there) I understood that the Nordic countries are free of nuclear arms and intend to remain so.

LABOR PARTY REJECTS CALL FOR NATO WITHDRAWAL

LD301138 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1102 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] The Labour Party conference today decisively rejected a call for the next Labour government to pull Britain out of NATO. At first, on a show of hands, delegates appeared to have heavily backed the demand, but, amid rowdy scenes, conference chairman Mr Alex Kitson insisted on a card vote. This led to the motion's defeat by 5,206,000 to 1,619,000.

However, delegates re-asserted existing Labour policy when they voted by 4.6 million to 2.3 million for an "unambiguous commitment" by Labour at the next general election to work towards unilateral nuclear disarmament.

The big defence debate had been noisy and acrimonious at times, with loud heckling of anti-unilateralists.

Labour's shadow defence secretary, Mr Brynmor John, furious that he had not even been called to speak, stormed out of the hall without waiting to hear the end of the debate.

NOTT COMMENTS ON U.S. 'SOVIET THREAT' DOCUMENT

Mr Nott said of the document: "The publication of hitherto secret facts on the size, scope and increase in the Soviet nuclear and conventional strength, much of its specifically designed for offensive warfare, makes it clear that the UK must maintain her military strength including her nuclear capability. Any talk of unilateral disarmament is dangerous nonsense."

Mr Peter Blaker, minister of state for the armed forces, said it was not the intention to "alarm" people by making the document public.

"We don't want to give the impression that we believe the Soviets are 10 feet tall.

"The facts in this document show how important it is to maintain our own military capability in NATO," he said.

KIPRIANOU, WALDHEIM TO DISCUSS TALKS 12-13 OCT

NC301050 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] President Kiprianou, who is currently in Melbourne for the Commonwealth conference, has stated that there is absolutely no commitment on our part on UN Secretary General Waldheim's intention to play a more active role in the inter-Cypriot talks. Mr Kiprianou, who made this statement in view of reports in the press, reiterated that -- as already scheduled -- the whole question will be the subject of deliberations with Mr Waldheim during their meetings in New York on 12 and 13 October. The president added that during these meetings he will have the opportunity to hear these ideas from Mr Waldheim himself and to explain our views to him in detail. Mr Kiprianou also said that on conclusion of his deliberations with the UN secretary general he will return to Cyprus and give a full briefing to the National Council and the Council of Ministers and that only after the necessary studies and discussions have been conducted all pertinent decisions will be made.

O FILELEVTHEROS DOUBTS MERIT OF WALDHEIM'S IDEAS

[From the "Liberal" column: "On Plans They Are Preparing"]

[Text] This country has suffered through fire and steel but it did not bend. This is the reason why it will not bend under the plans now being prepared, which some consider beforehand as unacceptable.

Recently, there has been a strong feeling that any action by the UN secretary general will not be made public until after he finishes sounding out the entire international field -- both the West and the East as well as the nonaligned. It is understandable that in this instance Waldheim will make use of all the experience gathered from the fate of past initiatives, including those of the United Nations.

If there is any basis to reports that the Greek side (Athens and Nicosia) will be pressured to accept the "new ideas" or "proposals", then this will be totally unacceptable. Why should our side be pressured? There is no logic in this. We are not the ones who are unjust to the other side. It is the other side which is unjust to us. We do not hold territory which does not belong to us. It is the other side. Why, therefore, should there be pressure against us?

Who will be expected to undertake initiatives? It will not be NATO Secretary Luns, or U.S. President Reagan, or Soviet President Brezhnev. It is expected that the new initiatives will be put forth by the UN secretary general, who (let us not forget this) is going through his own preelection period. He is going through the stage in which he seeks reelection to the top position in the international organization and it is not understandable or conceivable that he should act unilaterally. At the same time -- as repeatedly pointed out to him by us -- it is his duty to work for the implementation of the UN resolutions. He has no right to act in any way that contravenes the United Nations.

We have clarified our own position toward these developments. This has been done both in statements by the president of the republic and in positions taken in the National Council. We have made it clear that we have all the good will and we are prepared to support every effort for an honorable solution to the Cyprus problem.

In contrast, it is the other side which maintains immovable positions -- asking us to submit new proposals in order to further its own, at the very time when that side does not take one single step to approach our proposals. Can Waldheim ignore these facts? Can he close his eyes when he comes face-to-face with the positions of the two sides, and can he make any proposals avoiding compromise which, in any case, must be mutually acceptable?

If this is happening and we certainly do not expect it, then we shall have every right to reply with a decisive "No!"

ANATOLIA ESTABLISHES CYPRUS REGIONAL OFFICE

NC301225 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 26 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Following a decision taken by the administrative council of the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY, it has been announced that the Cyprus bureau of the agency has been converted into a regional directorate and that Mehmet Ali Akpinar has been appointed the regional director of the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY.

Mehmet Ali Akpinar, who was employed at the office of the press attache of the Turkish Embassy from 1960 to 1974, served as honorary Cyprus correspondent of ANATOLIA from 1971-1974.

The Lefkosa [Nicosia] bureau of ANATOLIA was founded soon after the happy peace operation in 1974 and Mehmet Ali Akpinar was appointed Cyprus representative of the agency.

The conversion of the Cyprus bureau into a regional directorate has expanded the agency's field of service. This decision was taken at a meeting held yesterday by the administrative council of the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY.

REAGAN, BREZHNEV SEND NATIONAL DAY CABLES

[Excerpts] U.S. President Reagan and Soviet Chairman Brezhnev have sent congratulatory messages on the occasion of tomorrow's 21st anniversary of Cyprus' independence.

In his message, Chairman Brezhnev expressed the wish for success in the consolidation of Cyprus' independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonaligned policy. He also expresses the certainty that existing traditional relations of friendship and cooperation between Cyprus and the Soviet Union will be strengthened and developed in the future to the benefit of the peoples of the two countries and to the interest of international peace and security.

DIKO ISSUES INDEPENDENCE ANNIVERSARY MESSAGE

[Text] On the occasion of tomorrow's anniversary of Cyprus independence, the Democratic Party [DIKO] has issued a declaration in which it stresses its firm decision to struggle with all its power for the regaining of Cyprus' complete independence and freedom and for the strengthening of our entity as a state.

It also stresses the need that all Cypriot people intensify their efforts toward the regaining of independence and the complete safeguarding of their rights, and mentions that the struggle's goal is still the achievement of a solution that will safeguard the independence and unitary form of the Cypriot state.

In its declaration, DIKO notes the United Nations' inability to act effectively in Cyprus' case and mentioned that this inability naturally disappoints us but cannot make us yield.

CAGATAY ANNOUNCES NEW ECONOMIC STABILITY PROGRAM

TA291002 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 29 Sep 81

[Excerpts] In a news conference today, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay disclosed the government's new economic stability program as well as measures taken to alleviate the economic difficulties of state employees. Recalling that the economic program was prepared with the approval of all members of the Council of Ministers, Cagatay said that the program would be finalized by the Social and Economic Council which would meet on 5 and 6 October.

During the news conference held at the Office of the Prime Ministry, Cagatay disclosed that the new economic measures would add a burden of TL1.2 billion to the budget. He added that it was decided to adjust the prices of certain commodities including wheat, barley fodder and tobacco and that black bread would now cost TL20 a loaf and white bread TL25. According to adjusted oil prices, a gallon of gasoline would now cost TL350, a gallon of fuel oil TL150.

Cagatay said that the government decided to alleviate the difficulties caused by the high cost of living on state employees.

Taking into consideration that salaries haven't been raised since December 1980, Cagatay said, basic salaries of these employees would be doubled.

KONUK SAYS KIPRIANOU CANNOT REPRESENT NORTH

TA301605 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] Acting President and Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk has said that Kiprianou can under no circumstances represent the Turkish Cypriot community. Konuk sent a telegram to the head of the British Commonwealth conference that began in Melbourne and said that Kiprianou, who was invited to the conference as though he were the legal president of the bicommunal Cyprus Republic, is not legally authorized to represent the whole of Cyprus. Noting that under no circumstances can Kiprianou represent the Turkish Cypriot community, Konuk added: Statements to be made by Kiprianou -- in the absence of an authorized Turkish Cypriot representative -- and decisions to be made at the conference are not binding on the Turkish Cypriot community. The unilateral discussion of the problem in the absence of the Turkish Cypriots at a time when intense activities are continuing in search of a peaceful, lasting and just solution to the Cyprus problem is not only a futile effort but is also an obstacle to a conciliation acceptable to both sides which is being sought through the intercommunal talks.

Konuk requested that his telegram be brought to the attention of the heads of state and government attending the conference.

MITSOTAKIS ENDS NEW YORK STAY, RETURNS HOME

Comments on Meetings

NC301250 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 1200 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Text] Before his departure from New York, Greek Foreigh Minister Mitsotakis had separate talks with his counterparts from the United States, the Soviet Union and West Germany, which covered among other things the Cyprus problem and Greco-Turkish relations.

Answering questions put to him by the CBC [Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation] correspondent in New York, Mr Mitsotakis said his meeting with Mr Haig took place in a friendly and cordial atmosphere and was useful. He had, he said, a substantial analytical discussion on the Cyprus issue. I believe, he added, that the position of Mr Haig on the Cyprus problem is positive and that the American secretary of state is willing to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations for a just solution to the problem.

Mr Mitsotakis said his discussions with Mr Gromyko also were held in a warm and friendly atmosphere and Mr Gromyko accepted an invitation to visit Greece next year.

Speaking earlier at a press conference, Mr Mitsotakis referred to the new initiative by Mr Waldheim on the Cyprus problem and said this is expected to be announced after the elections in Greece.

Further Statement

NC301515 Athens NEWS in English 30 Sep 81 p 4

[Excerpt] Speaking to foreign correspondents at the United Nations in New York, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said that with the return of Greece to NATO's military wing and the progress recorded in the negotiations over American bases in Greece, relations between Greece and the USA had improved. Commenting on his Turkish colleague Turkmen's claims that Turkey's stance was positive in regard to finding a solution to the Cyprus problem, Mr Mitsotakis said that this still remained to be seen in practice. He also said that Greece's accession to the EEC had not caused any problems to relations with nonaligned and islamic countries.

He replied to concern over a possible PASOK victory by saying that he was confident New Democracy would be reelected, but it was not correct to comment on the internal policies of PASOK.

TURKMEN MEETS GROMYKO, YUGOSLAV FOREIGN SECRETARY

TA010552 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 1 Oct 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in New York to attend the UN General Assembly meetings, is continuing his bilateral contacts. He met with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. It was reported that the two ministers exchanged views on international and bilateral issues. Turkmen and Gromyko also stressed the importance they attach to good neighborly relations.

Yesterday, Turkmen also met the Yugoslav secretary for foreign affairs. Turkmen later presented UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim with the Ataturk gift -- a placard signed by Gen Kenan Evren -- at a ceremony held atthe UN headquarters. An exhibition of contemporary Turkish painters opened at UN headquarters. The exhibition will last 1 month. Turkmen is expected to meet with the secretary general of the Arab League today.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU ADDRESSES PEOPLE OF MARDIN

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that circles uneasy about Turkey's transit transportation to neighboring countries are carrying out negative acts, but that security will certainly be ensured regarding this issue.

Prime Minister Ulusu, who is continuing his visit of southerstern Anatolia, left Diyarbakir for Mardin this morning. He was received in Mardin with a military ceremony by Governor Ibrahim Sahin and by the commander of the mobile Gendarme brigade, Brig Gen Fazil Bayraktar. The prime minister then attended a meeting at the governor's office where he was briefed on the province's problems. After that meeting, Ulusu addressed the public at the Mardin Republic Square. He recalled that Mardin had also lived through dark days in the past, like the rest of the country, but that those times were now behind us thanks to the help of the citizens. He said that in the provinces he toured he saw that citizens were carrying out their duties as responsible persons, with feelings of patriotism, national unity and brotherhood, and respecting each other's rights. He said that he cautioned all civil servants at every opportunity to act impartially and justly.

Ulusu then said that there would always be efforts to divide Turkey and to break it away from the civilized world. He said: Such circles might try to do that today under the guise of the Armenian problem and tomorrow under another guise. However, these poor fools who have not understood what it means to be a Turk will always receive the slap they deserve.

The prime minister stated that the Turkish nation would continue to march with unshaken determination on the path drawn by the great leader Ataturk. He said that the unifying and not dividing nationalism of Ataturk would be implemented forever as Turkish nationalism. He stressed that an effective state authority in all corners of the country was a main factor for ensuring economic stability. He pointed out that there were no shortages of goods in the country and that exports were rising rapidly as a result of a series of government measures, and that export revenues were significantly higher than last year.

Ulusu then said: As you know, the armed confrontation between Iran and Iraq, two neighbors, friends and brotherly nations, has been going on, unfortunately, for more than 1 year. We have assumed duties in the Islamic Peace Committee established by the Islamic Conference in order to put an end to this confrontation and to resolve the problem peacefully. We will continue to carry out our duties so long as the concerned sides want us to.

Recalling that the necessary basic goods needed by friendly and brotherly Iraq and Iran were supplied by transit transportation from Turkey, Ulusu said that 1.18 million tons of transit goods had arrived in Turkish ports in 1980 and that they were then carried to Iran, Iraq and other southern countries by Turkish vehicles. Ulusu pointed out that this transit transportation to these countries was continuing with great speed this year. He said: Certain circles who were uneasy about the benefits supplied by this transportation to the recipients resorted to certain negative acts, and a short while ago a regrettable intervention was carried out against Turkish TIR [International Highway Transport] trucks. We asked the friendly and brotherly Iraq Government to find and punish the culprits of this incident quickly, to compensate for the damages caused, and to prevent the recurrence of such incidents in the future. We fully believe that the Iraqi Government, with whom we plan to improve and expand relatio ns, will take all the necessary measures. In fact, the drivers of the Turkish TIR trucks were found speedily and returned to Turkey. Undoubtedly, we will continue to meet with Iraqi officials regarding this issue and the security of this transportation will soon be ensured.

In his speech, Ulusu talked about the problems of Mardin Province. He stressed that necessary measures would be taken for a rapid solution of the problems of drinking water, highways, electricity and health services in and around Mardin. On narcotics and arms smuggling, Ulusu said:

You know what the narcotics and arms smuggling did to our country before 12 September 1980. You must prevent both those who resort to illegal activities for easy money and those who engage in smuggling. We can receive the full value of the goods produced in our beautiful country only if we sell them legally to foreign countries through the state or private enterprise by going through customs. Otherwise, these goods are sold at very low prices and dangerous items are smuggled into the country, the worst of which are weapons. Furthermore, those who engage in such activities endanger their lives. In short, it is very bad for our economy. Let me repeat, we must all struggle against smuggling. We must never encourage it.

The prime minister pointed out that smuggling was now contained to a large extent because public security and the security of life and property were ensured in the country and because social and economic measures were being implemented constantly and fully. He added that the government was determined to continue to implement these measures and to take more effective ones.

After his speech, the prime minister went to the headquarters of the mobile Gendarme brigade command and attended a briefing session there. He then went to inspect the Ceylanpinar state farm.

YUGOSLAV TRANSPORT DELEGATION SIGNS PROTOCOL

[Text] The Turkish-Yugoslav joint transportation committee meetings, which began in Ankara the other day, have ended and a protocol aimed at developing cooperation between the two countries in the field of transportation has been signed. The protocol was signed on behalf of Turkey by the deputy undersecretary of the Transportation Ministry, Orhan Bugdac, and on behalf of Yugoslavia by the head of the Yugoslav delegation, (Slavko Simonovic). Speaking at the protocol signing ceremony, Bugdac said that various difficulties are felt in transportation due to the increase in exports, and that the joint committee activities are aimed at surmounting these difficulties. According to the information given by Bugdac, the two countries will have a right to 10,000 highway transit passes during the next year. The protocol also envisages a more stable and healthy passenger transport system between the two systems.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT DELEGATION BEGINS TALKS

[Text] The delegation from the European Parliament which arrived in Ankara last night began its contacts this morning. The delegation members first called on Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun and conferred with him for some time. In a statement before the meeting, FRG parliamentarian Otto von (Habsburg), a member of the Christian Democratic group, said that all the delegation members had friendly feelings toward Turkey. Pointing out that certain misleading reports had been issued about Turkey during the past year, Von (Habsburg) said that they came to Turkey to see the realities. He noted that the relations between Turkey and the EC were to the benefit of both sides.

Foreign Ministry Secretary General Gurun said in a speech that following this visit, the delegation would be able to assess more correctly the facts about Turkey. He added that the talks they would hold in Ankara would supply clear information to the delegation members as to what Turkey was doing and where it was heading.

The delegation then met with State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak. Speaking before the meeting, Stanley Johnson, a British MP from the Conservative group, said that all the delegation members had been interested in Turkey for a long time and they had positive feelings toward Turkey. He added that during their contacts, they wanted to receive as much information as possible about Turkey.

Oztrak said that during the meeting they would exchange views on the relations and problems between the EC and Turkey. He expressed the belief that the meetings would yield positive and beneficial results for the creation of a solidarity which was necessary for the EC's future. The delegation will continue to hold contacts this afternoon and tomorrow.

GUNAYDIN CRITICIZES HANDLING OF AEGEAN DISPUTE

[Article by Necati Zincirkiran: "The Aegean Allows no Excuses"]

[Excerpt] I particularly wish to refer to the attitude of Turkey's optimist foreign minister, Ilter Turkmen, toward the Aegean dispute. The following was the Turkish Foreign Minister's reaction to the resolution the Greeks obtained from the European Parliament in connection with their territorial waters and other general interests: "This is not a matter that deserves to be dwelt upon."

Securing a resolution from the European Parliament that upholds Greece's interests is an achievement for the Greeks and a defeat for us. As we are not represented in that parliament, the blame for the defeat rests squarely on the foreign minister's shoulders. Nothing happens all that suddenly. Such a development involves some advance preparation. During the summer months, the Greeks entertained the members of the European Parliament all over the Aegean in an effort to prove that this sea is an Hellenic sea.

Good, but what have we done to counter this? Absolutely nothing. At the last minute, when the situation became serious, two ambassadors were dispatched to the Ruropean Parliament to explain the Turkish case....

I repeatedly wrote in this column years ago and I say it again most emphatically: We possess extremely strong evidence that will force international recognition of our rights in the Aegean. What are we asking for? Do we claim, as the Greeks do, that the Aegean should be a Turkish lake? No, never. We say: "Let us share, in a friendly manner, the advantages which the Aegean offers in the air, as well as on its surface and underneath."

It is not at all difficult to defend this before world public opinion, provided that Turkmen and his associates are fully acquainted with the situation and have at least as much faith in our case as we do. The dynamic structure of Turkey's future will never pardon those who make the slightest concession over the Aegean and who fail to handle the matter seriously. We must be cautious.

ARAYIS EDITORIAL CRITICIZES PRESS CENSORSHIP

NC251406 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 19 Sep 81 pp 5, 6

[Editorial of the week: "Advance Permission and the Silence of the Press"]

[Excerpts] Areopagitica is the name of a tract published by the English poet John Milton in 1644. The subtitle of this tract reads: "For the freedom of publishing without first obtaining permission and without being censorsed." And we see that, 150 years ago, John Milton's outcry for freedom took the form of a communal document in the Virginia rights manifesto published on 12 June 1776. The Virginia rights manifesto stated: "The freedom of the press is one of the basic pillars of freedom, and no government that is not despotic can restrict it."

However, a law published in the Official Gazette on 7 September 1981 has amended a section of the martial law, No 1402, and added another. The amended section stipulates the reduction of the detention period from 90 to 45 days. This reduction is a positive move in the numerical sense at least following the domestic and foreign complaints expressed for some time against this practice. As a matter of fact, this amendment has been characterized as a positive development and several articles have been written about it.

But, unfortunately, a subsection added to the third section of the martial law has not been given the same amount of publicity, although it concerns the press itself. The additional subsection empowers the martial law commander "to subject the publication of new newspapers and magazines to the requirements of obtaining permission to publish." Such an important change, which is likely to provoke serious criticism in the West, has been allowed to go by almost unnoticed.

The presence of such a provision in a law which gives extensive powers to the martial law commanders during periods when democratic rights and freedoms are subjected to restrictions may not, at first glance, be considered very important. But when we take into consideration the historic condition and significance of the practice of subjecting the publication of newspapers and magazines to advance permission, it is not so easy to advance the same argument. The reason is because such a practice, which could be considered natural under martial law conditions, possesses a symbolic significance in the eyes of those working in the press profession.

Giving such powers to the martial law commanders at a time when preparations are being made to launch the consultative assembly and to introduce new legal arrangements that will set the wheels turning toward a new political life has created a situation difficult to comprehend. Conditions being what they are, it will undoubtedly be difficult to explain to the coming generations a practice that amounts to returning to times before John Milton's Areopagitica when communications technology has developed to the extent that satellites are used.

OUR RADIO BLAMES AIR FORCE LEADERS FOR ACCIDENTS

TA250755 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 25 Sep 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] A day after an Air Force F-5 aircraft crashed during maneuvers in the Thrace region, killing more than 50 NCO's and soldiers and injuring more than 100 others, an F-4 Phantom aircraft also crashed in the same region.

Two pilots were killed and a soldier was wounded during this last accident.

Dear listeners, it is not enough only to share in the sorrow of the families of the killed officers, NCO's and soldiers in these two incidents. What must be done is to ask who is to account for these irresponsible acts. Were these accidents caused by civilian aircraft, the director of the airlines or the transportation minister would have to account for what happened and they would even be asked by the press to resign their posts. Since Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya is the Air Force commander, he is the main person responsible for these accidents.

Dear listeners, because proper security measures were not taken by those responsible, and due to the irresponsible stand of senior officers, a great number of officers, NCO's and soldiers lost their lives during military exercises. Such irresponsibility should not be quietly accepted. In fact, currently, the country at large is deeply in grief as a result of not speaking up when such incidents happened in the past, and of making the armed forces a subject which is taboo. Those responsible for the death of soldiers frozen during watch duty which lasts 5 to 6 hours in cold weather, for the crashing of aircraft ordered to fly despite bad weather conditions, and for many other incidents, must be brought to account for their irresponsibility no matter what their rank.

The fact that the maneuvers continued despite the accident in which 40 persons were killed and 100 others were injured is a doubly irresponsible act. Undoubtedly, the chief responsibility for what happened lies with General Sahinkaya as well as others.

Dear listeners, it might be argued that this decision was made to protect the air force's prestige and honor. However, people should never be sent to their death for such reasons -- not even in wartime. The prestige of the armed forces would not suffer if the maneuvers were suspended in due time as a result of these two irresponsible incidents. What hurts the armed force's prestige and casts a shadow on its honor are efforts to drag the army after the adventurous and aggressive aims of U.S. imperialism and NATO in our region, efforts to use the armed forces as a means of provocation against our neighboring countries, and efforts to take sides against the progressive and patriotic forces that defend the people's national interests for the sake of a handful of collaborationist and monopolist bosses.

OUR RADIO COMMENTS ON PARIS CONSULATE ATTACK

[Station commentary: "One More Time on Armenian Terrorist Groups and Forces Behind Them"]

[Text] At certain periods, the problems of a country emerge one after the other. At such times the gravity of the problems are felt more strongly than ever. Recently, the blows induced upon the owners of small savings pointed to the process of making the monopolists even richer. Then the problems between Turkey and Greece emerged once again after Karamanlis' reactionary party tried to extend the Greek territorial waters to 12 miles in the Aegean. Later, two U.S. planes, an F-4 and F-5, crashed in Thrace during military maneuvers and close to 50 soldiers, NCO's and pilots were martyred. This brought to light the fact that the United States gives Turkey old and wornout weapons and aircraft and it also brought to light the irresponsible attitudes within the army. After that the Armenian terrorists' bloody incident caused the Armenian problem to emerge once again. All these things happened one after the other.

The wrong or indecisive and inconsistent policies being pursued may cause these problems and others to emerge in much greater and more dangerous dimensions in the future. Consequently, every person and establishment which wants to solve the country's problems, or to see them resolved, must diagnose the problems correctly.

Following the bloody occupation of the Turkish Consulate General in Paris by a group of Armenian terrorists, it is necessary for us to think once again about what force is behind the Armenian terrorist groups, to make a correct diagnosis and to adopt the relevant determined attitude. To adopt a determined attitude does not mean to answer in kind to the bloody activities of the Armenian terrorist groups. That is what the reactionary circles want us to do. Such an attitude would only exacerbate the problem even further. A really determined attitude is one which must be adopted against the imperialist intelligence organizations and countries which are behind the Armenian terrorist groups.

The previous merciless murders of embassy and consulate officials abroad have clearly shown that the Armenian terrorists have close ties with the imperialist intelligence organizations of the West, mainly with the CIA. Even the Turkish press reported that the United States used Armenian terrorist groups even against its Western European allies with a view to increasing its influence over Ankara, that the Armenian terrorists captured in Vienna met with CIA agents. With no exceptions, the headquarters of all the Armenian terrorist groups are in Western imperialist cities, mainly in the United States. However, despite all these obvious facts, the reactionary circles are trying to deliberately portray the Armenian terrorist groups as having links with the Soviet Union. In this way they are confusing minds and leading the problem deliberately to an impasse. They are concealing the real culprits.

So long as this continues, the CIA agents, the intelligence service men, the old and new nazis in the West German intelligence organization and all the reactionary elements within the French intelligence organization -- in other words all those behind the Armenian terrorist groups -- will continue to easily carry out the bloody games they play against our country.

It would be beneficial to point out once again that the imperialist countries such as England, France and West Germany, and mainly the United States, have always pursued a policy of (?kicking with both hind feet). In this policy, the Armenian problem is a trump card they resort to frequently and in a bloody way. That is why all the relations between the intelligence organizations of the imperialist countries and the National Intelligence Organization must be reviewed completely. A determined stand must be adopted against the administrations of these imperialist countries. Those who try to confuse minds by means of anti-Sovietism and who constitute obstacles before such a correct stand must be opposed.

STATEMENT OF MIDEAST COMMUNIST PARTIES MEETING

TA260941 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Sep 81

[Part one of statement issued at conclusion of September conference of representatives of communist and workers parties of the Eastern Mediterranean, Near East, Middle East and Red Sea regions, including the Egyptian Communist Party, the organizational committee of the Ethiopian Workers' Party, the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the Greek Communist Party, the Jordanian Communist Party, the Iraqi Communist Party, the Israeli Communist party, AKEL, the National Liberation Front of Bahrain, the Communist Party of Saudi Arabia, the Sudanese Communist Party, the Syrian Communist Party and the Turkish Communist Party -- read by announcer]

[Text] 1. At the conference, the representatives discussed the situation in this part of the world in light of international developments. They discussed the duties facing the brotherly parties in their respective countries as well as the issues of cooperation among the progressive and anti-imperialist forces in their struggle for world peace, national independence, the right of sovereignty, and for guaranteeing the democratic development of the countries in the region against the intensified aggressive and neocolonialist policies of imperialism, especially of U.S. imperialism.

The representatives of the communist and workers parties who attended the conference expressed their concern about the exacerbated international relations -- a result of the strategy of imperialism, and especially of U.S. imperialism, to return to the cold war, which creates great dangers for peace and the peoples' freedom and security.

2. Imperialism is stepping up its aggressive policies because it cannot cope with the problems created by the deepening general crisis of the (?capitalist) system which affects all aspects of the capitalist society -- economic, political, social and moral. The new U.S. administration is pursuing its predecessors' reactionary and aggressive policies more intensely. It is trying to reverse the detente process, to establish superiority in the mutual forces relations, especially in nuclear arms, to regain the positions it has lost, to slander the socialist community and to hit the international worker movement as well as the national liberation movement. While pursuing this aggressive and war-provoking policy, U.S. imperialism is seeking the support of the Western European imperialist circles. It is obtaining this support to a great extent.

Meanwhile, the PRC rulers, who support the aggressive policies of the Pentagon and NATO under the banner of anti-Sovietism, who wage war against Vietnam and other neighboring countries, who engage in hostile activities against them and who interfere in the domestic affairs of several countries, are playing an especially sly game in this field. With their aggressive and hegemonist policies, they grossly trample upon the Chinese people's and national interests as well as the Chinese working class' interests. They weaken the worldwide revolutionary struggle and the struggle for peace and social progress. By means of such a tension-creating policy, imperialism not only thinks it can stop the peoples' struggle for national and social liberation, but it believes that it can regain the positions it has lost up to now. Furthermore, imperialism hopes that its war policy and the arms race it has extended to space will help overcome the economic crisis which has engulfed all the capitalist countries. Inflation and unemployment have reached extraordinary dimensions. The social conflicts and the relations among the imperialists are hardening. The struggle to control markets, raw material sources and energy sources is being stepped up.

However, the cold war strategy does not have any (?elan) to improve the situation. On the contrary, the cold war strategy will further exacerbate the situation and the class conflicts will become harsher.

The participants at the conference stressed that at the present stage, imperialism is in no position to impose its demands on mankind because capitalism has lost its historical (?initiative) and because the worldwide force relations have changed against imperialism.

The socialist countries' power creates possibilities for enhancing the worker movement, the national liberation movement and the other peace forces' struggle as well as for foiling the imperialist, aggressive cold war policies. This is proven with imperialism's failures in Asia, Europe and Latin America in the 1970's which significantly limited imperialism's sphere of influence and hegemony in the world.

Imperialism has undertaken to export counterrevolution and to encourage attacks by racist regimes against peoples and their national progressive governments. It has turned terrorism, violence and assassinations into an official state policy. Imperialism, and especially U.S. imperialism, could not adapt itself to the new situation which was created in the world, and it rebelled against behaving in a manner suitable to the spirit of peaceful coexistence. So now it is again moving toward a path of tension, confrontation and war, a path created by its aggressive policies.

However, today more than ever before, the peoples of the world realize that the path of detente and peaceful coexistence is the only alternative for the prevention of a thermonuclear war, which means a great catastrophe for humankind. This means that today, every progressive, democrat and patriot must support detente and peace.

The participants at the conference greeted Comrade Brezhnev's realistic proposals which he submitted to the 26th Congress of the CPSU which call for the defense of peace, for the reduction of weapons, for the halting of the production of new weapons, and which state that the Soviet Union will not use nuclear weapons against countries which do not have such weapons.

The participants at the conference strongly condemned the U.S. imperialists' decision to manufacture the neutron bomb, an enemy of the people, and to deploy cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe.

The participants at the conference stated that they are in favor of putting an end to the nuclear arms race and on the side of a full and general disarmament.

Part Two

[Text] 3. The representatives of the communist and workers parties participating in the conference draw attention to the fact that the creation of this exacerbation has direct repercussions on the volatile area of the Middle East and the Gulf as well as the Mediterranean Sea, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean where the aggressive activities of imperialism and its allies in the area appear more intensely and where the accumulation of old and new contrasts and conflicts make the situation explosive and create an immediate and great danger for war, the dimensions of which it is difficult for one to foresee.

U.S. imperialism has concentrated great air, naval and military forces in the Gulf and has extended, activated and strengthened its bases in Oman, Bahrain, Saudi Arabia and Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean. In addition, imperialism aggravates the situation in the area of the Red Sea and the Horn of Africa in its effort to suppress the popular revolutions of socialist Ethiopia and the People's Republic of Yemen by installing bases and Rapid Deployment Forces [RDF] in Berbera, Kismayu, Mogadishu, in Somalia, Kenya, Egypt, in the Gulf and the Indian Ocean.

The participants in the conference express their solidarity with the peoples of the area and to the progressive anti-imperialist regime of socialist Ethiopia and the People's Republic of Yemn which have repulsed imperialist conspiracies and attacks. The participants also support the principles which have been approved by the United Nations to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace, and they condemn all hostile acts by the imperialist forces to transform this area into a seedbed of tension directly violating these principles.

U.S. imperialism has reinforced the 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean and has established the RDF and cynically has declared the areas of the Middle East, the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf to be a zone of "vital U.S. interests"; threatening that it will not hesitate to use arms, including nuclear ones, when it considers this expedient to protect such interests. The recent attack by planes of the U.S. 6th Fleet against two Libyan planes, which they downed, confirms imperialism's dangerous intentions against peace and national sovereignty, and stresses a new stage in the aggressive policy of U.S. imperialism. The recent agreement between Reagan and Begin for "military cooperation" which allows the United States to use Israeli territory and the Israeli Armed Forces as it sees fit is a further escalation of U.S. preparations for direct military intervention in the area. The true reason behind the U.S. military presence in an area so distant from the American Continent is not only sovereignty over the area, the strike against the national liberation movements in it, the arming of antirevolutionary alliances in the area and the continuation of the robbing of its rich natural resources, especially of oil; but also the more general imperialist plan to encircle the Soviet Union.

The participants in the conference ascertained that in this connection the imperialists, the Zionists and the Arab reaction are conspiring against Syria, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia and Libya, promoting their plans against the heroic Palestinian people, seeking Lebanon's partition and the promotion of the treasonous Camp David policy, and fostering the war between Iran and Iraq. Imperialism continues its activities' and exercises pressure on Greece and Cyprus to place the latter in the orbit of its aggressive system.

In addition, imperialism is exacerbating the situation in the areas of the Red Sea and the Horn of Africa in its effort to destabilize the progressive regimes in this area by establishing bases in Somalia, Kenya and Egypt.

Although it knows well the declared policy of Somalia to annex territories which constitute inseparable parts of its neighboring countries, the United States proceeded to arm a reactionary and expansionist regime the undisguisedly aggressive policy of which has caused so many calamities and hardships to the Horn of Africa. In this connection, the participants in the conference express their solidarity with the peoples of the area and their progressive anti-imperialist regimes for the repulsion of imperialist conspiracies.

By the Arab People's Side

4. Examining the repercussions which the aggressive activity of imperialism, Zionism and Arab reaction had on the Middle East, the participants in the conference ascertained the failure of their efforts to impose the unconditional surrender of the Arab countries despite the signing of the Camp David agreement and the separate agreement between Israel and Egypt.

Through its decisive contribution to the conclusion of the Camp David agreement, the As-Sadat regime opened the way for greater U.S. military presence in the area and is playing an active role in the undermining of the patriotic anti-imperialist regimes and patriotic forces.

The participants in the conference express their solidarity with the patriotic and progressive forces of Egypt in their struggle for the toppling of the proimperialist As-Sadat regime, for the abolition of the Camp David agreements and Egypt's return to the front of the struggle against imperialism, Zionist invasion and Arab reaction, the road of social progress.

The participants in the conference expressed their great apprehension concerning increased aggressiveness in the area by the Israeli ruling circles. Encouraged by U.S. imperialism, the Israeli ruling circles are escalating oppression and terrorism, establishing new settlements in the occupied Palestinian lands, launching barbarian criminal bombings against Beirut's civilian population, more generally continuing the escalation of the war for the elimination of the Arab Palestinian people and the Lebanese patriotic forces in Lebanon, intensifying military operations against Syria and threatening it with war, and strengthening their conspiracies against Lebanon's unity, hoping to achieve their expansionist aspirations and eradicate the national rights of Palestine's Arab people.

The communists and all progressive people of the world stand in support of the peoples of Syria, Palestine and Lebanon and support their just struggle and resistance to these undisguised and continuing attacks by Israel which, allied to the Lebanese fascists, seeks Lebanon's partition and the establishment of a separate proimperialist state linked with Israel, thus trampling upon Lebanon's sovereignty on its own territory.

Syria plays a basic role in the repulsion of the reactionary machinations of U.S. imperialism and Israel in the area.

Syria's stability is a basic link in the resistance of the Arab national liberation movement against the imperialist and Zionist aggressiveness and their colonialist expansionist plans. Despite the strong pressures to which it is subjected, Syria is militantly supporting the Lebanese people and the Palestinian resistance. It is certain that the plans of imperialism, Zionism and Arab reaction against Lebanon, Palestinian resistance and Syria will fail thanks to the struggle of the Arab people and also segments of the Arab national movement among which are the Steadfastness and Confrontation Front and the Congress of the Arab Peoples, which are supported by the Soviet Union and all progressive forces.

The conference condemns all U.S. and Israeli plans to close the Palestinian issue, like the so-called autonomy and the alternative solution of settlement in Jordan, or the alternative solution for the organizing of the PLO [as published] or any other similar plan. The solution of the Middle East problem and the achievement of a just and general peace in the area requires the withdrawal of all Israel forces from Arab lands conquered by Israel in 1967, the recognition of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian Arab people — including the right of return to their fatherland and the establishment of their own independent state -- and the recognition of the sovereignty of all states in the area. No permanent solution can be achieved without the recognition of the PLO and its participation in the pursuit of such a solution in its capacity as the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arab people.

The representatives of the communist and workers parties in the conference believe that the Soviet Union's proposal for the convening of an international conference on the Middle East offers a positive basis for the problem's solution.

The PLO, the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arab people, and other parts of the Arab liberation movement support these proposals.

The conference participants express their solidarity with the democratic and peace-loving forces of Israel which are struggling for a just and permanent solution of the Palestinian problem and for general peace in the area.

5. The seedbed of exacerbation created by the Iraq-Iran war, which was started on 22 September 1980 by the Iraqi side while Iran was waging a tough battle against U.S. imperialism, only serves U.S. strategy, deepens divisions in the Arab world and diverts the peoples' attention from their primary struggle against U.S. imperialism, Zionist aggression and for the solution of the Palestinian problem.

The progressive forces must seek the immediate termination of military hostilities, the withdrawal of Iraqi troops to their original prewar positions and the opening of negotiations for the peaceful solution of the problem on the basis of mutual respect for the principles of national independence and sovereignty. The conference participants condemn the piratical bombing of Iraq's nuclear reactor by Israel, something that was known and had the support of U.S. imperialism, an act through which Israel fulfilled its role as the organ of U.S. imperialism in the area, and the goal of which is to strengthen even more the threat to peace in the area and the world.

6. The representatives of communist and workers parties express their solidarity with the people and revolutionary government of Afghanistan in their struggle against the imperialist intervention, and support their efforts to put an end to the infiltration of armed gangs, through negotiations with their neighbors. The conference condemns the interfention of international imperialism and reaction headed by the U.S. imperialism and the Chinese leadership, the reactionary dictatorial Pakistani regime and the Arab reaction to Afghanistan's internal affairs. The participants in the conference fully support the initiative and proposals of the people's republic of Afghanistan contained in the government declarations of 14 May 1980 and 24 August 1981 for the normalization of the situation in Afghanistan.

KREISKY SPEAKS ON DETENTE, EUROPEAN-U.S. DIALOGUE

[Text] Chancellor Kreisky last night delivered a lecture at the Brugge College d'Europe, in which he primarily dealt with aspects of European-U.S. relations. After paying tribute to the historical role of the U.S. "policy of containment" from World War II to Korea and reviewing the period of detente from the conclusion of the Austrian state treaty to SALT, Kreisky continued:

After the election of President Reagan, it appeared that now a phase of very rigid policy was going to begin and outside observers were apt to gain the impression that the United States, disregarding the opinion of its allies in Europe, would implement its so-called policy of strength. I cannot see very much in this policy because no one can deny that in Vietnam there had been tremendous military efforts, the greatest since World War II. Such a gigantic military effort as was undertaken then simply cannot be repeated. Nor can it be denied that there were tens of thousands of Americans in Iran in various functions and that, in any case, there was no lack of resolute attempts to penetrate. What was the result? The speedier downfall of the shah's system which has now been followed by an even crueler dictatorship.

Undoubtedly, it is to the credit of the statesmen of America's European allies that they were able to very quickly bring about a change in Washington's attitude. A few days ago, we learned that the Soviet-American talks in Geneva are to be opened more or less immediately. Naturally, no one knows at the moment what the outcome of these talks will be. And of course, talks are far from being a guarantee of negotiation results but, in any case, they are a good and highly desirable beginning.

Perhaps both sides will come to realize that they have a lot to offer one another. And, at any rate, the process of detente in Europe will not, as we have always feared, be suddenly interrupted.

After all, it must be understood that this process of detente is viewed differently by citizens living in Vienna or Brussels or Copenhagen, let alone in Berlin, than by people living many thousands of miles away from these friction zones of world policy. We know, and we are daily reminded, what this process of detente has brought us. We know what it means that Europe has not had a war for a quarter of a century. That has not happened very often in European history. And thus we want to preserve this condition -- but not at the price of giving up our freedom, not at the price of a policy of appeasement. Hence, it will be even more necessary in the future for democratic Europe again and again to be ready for a dialogue with the United States, for only this dialogue can be of creative importance for the policy of detente.

There are, indeed, many topics that have to be included in this dialogue -- not only those of European detente but also the very complicated problems of Latin America. We must also include the issues revolving around North-South relations and, finally, the problems of the Middle East. Here the European Community has accomplished a trail-blazing mission by dispatching its President Gaston Thorn to this part of the world and by coming around to the realization, the only correct realization, that without solving the Palestinian problem peace cannot be established in this part of the world.

I have not come here to discuss this in detail but, at the moment, it is undoubtedly democratic Europe's foremost task to seek understanding for this view in the United States. Time is pressing. In this, it must be possible to bring about a change of heart among prominent Americans lest opportunities be lost forever, lest a process start here that would be irreversible. I am firmly convinced that we can succeed if, with due regard for European-American relations, we also tackle this task with patience and perseverance, using judicious arguments. I would like once more to express the hope that it is still not too late.

PAHR, GROMYKO DISCUSS TIES, MADRID CSCE IN NEW YORK

AU011010 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 1 Oct 81

[Text] On the periphery of the UN General Assembly in New York, Foreign Minister Pahr met with his Soviet counterpart Gromyko. Both politicians agreed that the relations between Austria and the USSR are good and capable of being further expanded. Regarding the Madrid CSCE followup meeting, Pahr expressed the hope that concrete results can be achieved. The Austrian foreign minister appealed to his USSR counterpart Gromyko to make possible solutions of the Afghan and Kampuchean problems at the conference table.

KPOE'S MUHRI, SED OFFICIAL VIEW PEACE STRUGGLE

[Text] Vienna -- On Tuesday, Austrian Communist Party [KPOE] Chairman Franz Muhri received SED Central Committee member Manfred Feist for a friendly exchange of opinions about current questions on the struggle against disarmament, against the confrontation course of imperialist circles, for detente and cooperation. The talk also was attended by Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Erwin Scharf.

Comrade Muhri informed his guest that the NATO course of intensified armament has also touched off increased concern among Austrians and that varied activities have developed in the country against this course which constitutes a grave danger to neutral Austria.

The representatives of both parties expressed their joint conviction that the forces of peace will succeed in asserting peaceful coexistence against the fanatic advocates of the policy of confrontation. Franz Muhri also briefed the visitor on the multi-faceted struggle of the KPOE for the social rights of the country's working people. The KPOE chairman declared that the fraternal relations between the KPOE and SED are successfully developing in the spirit of proletarian internationalism.

KREISKY, SENEGAL'S SENGHOR DISCUSS SOCIALIST CONTACTS

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "Smo"]

[Text] The promotion of the multiparty system in the African countries is a primary goal of Interafricaine Socialist, the association of Africa's socialist parties. This was stated by Leopold Senghor, former chief of state of Senegal and president of the Interafricaine Socialist organization, to journalists in Vienna on Tuesday. The Austrian capital was the first leg of a European trip by a delegation headed by Senghor, which is to intensify contacts with the Socialist International (SI). This was also the aim of the talks held yesterday noon between Senghor and Chancellor Kreisky. Senghor, whose organization has observer status within the SI, in the next few days will also have talks with SI Chairman Willy Brandt in Bonn and with French Socialist Party First Secretary Jospin in Paris.

MINISTER CITES FIGURES ON FOREIGNERS, REFUGEES

[Summary] Vienna (SK) -- "At a Vienna press conference of the 'Safe Austria' Committee, Interior Minister Lanc declared on Tuesday evening that there is no reason to alter Austria's policy toward foreigners. Rumors that too many foreigners are in Austria and that anyone who wants to can stay here permanently are devoid of any foundation and are mere conjecture by the media, Lanc said."

According to the minister, the total of foreigners currently in Austria is 380,000, including 310,121 with limited visas or residence permits. Over the past 15 years, unlimited visas were granted only to about 70,000 foreigners. The minister stressed that the crime rate of foreigners living in Austria is not higher than that of Austrians and that there are only very few foreigners in Austria who are conspicuously engaged in political activities.

As far as refugees are concerned, Lanc declared that as of 23 September, 19,053 refugees in Austria requested political asylum, although most of them cannot be recognized as political refugees under the UN convention. As far as Polish refugees are concerned, the minister said, on an average 5 out of 6 are to be regarded as so-called economic refugees.

BUSINESSMAN, ARMY CHIEF ADVOCATE ARMS EXPORTS

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Without Arms Exports 40,000 Jobs Endangered"]

[Excerpts] Credit-Anstalt Bank Director General (former Vice Chancellor) Androsch warned in an APA interview on Tuesday that unless Austrian arms production is maintained, 40,000 industry jobs are threatened. In his capacity as chairman of the Board of Directors of the Steyr Corporation, the former finance minister declared that this company alone in the past few years turned out nearly 8 billion schillings worth of military products, of which 6.8 million schillings' worth were exported. This shows that the Steyr Corporation cannot produce only for the Austrian Army's requirements. However, if the army were to buy all its equipment from abroad, Austria's balance of payments would deteriorate further. For all the understanding one may have for the position of Austria's Young Socialists, it is also necessary to take economic factors into consideration, Androsch declared.

Austrian Army Command Chief General Spannocchi, who is about to retire, also regards the domestic arms industry as an "industry serving the preservation of peace." In a talk with DIE PRESSE, however, Spannocchi expresses misgivings about the entire army reform [conversion of the Austrian Army into a militia army organized by him] should the Austrian Socialist Party lose control of the government to the Austrian People's Party [OEVP] because, he says, "the OEVP -- especially through the statements of its defense spokesman Ermacora -- has called essential parts of the reform into question."

Asked about the neutron weapon, expert Spannocchi depicts it as "a purely defensive combat weapon for use against Eastern tank columns which break through the front" and which the West cannot stop with other means because of its 1:3 numerical inferiority as regards tanks and because the conventional tactical nuclear weapons would destroy the civilian population as well as the soldiers. "The decisive aspect of the neutron weapon is not that it makes nuclear war more possible but that it makes conventional war impossible," he says.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON CRITICISM OF SPD

DW011137 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 30 Sep 81

[Interview by reporter Reinhardt with FRG Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What criticism did you express yesterday to the faction?

[Answer] I did not criticize my Bundestag faction. I pointed out that the Federal Government -- and this pertains particularly to me and a great number of Social Democrats -- that we do not want anyone to question our right to do something for peace and to safeguard our defense, on the one hand, and our detente policy based on security, on the other. If Foreign Minister Gromyko and Secretary of State Haig, the Russian and the American, start arms control negotiations on medium-range missiles on both sides in Europe with the aim of arriving at zero on both sides as the best possible case, this will certainly not be achieved without the political action of the Federal Government. I criticized the fact that some relatively few Social Democrats pretend at public demonstrations that the danger, which is rightly felt by many people, emanates mainly from the West; I criticized the fact that they pretend to serve peace by undermining the peace policy of the Federal Government at public demonstrations.

[Question] You mentioned attacks on the Federal Government. You probably meant just a few Social Democrats, as you just said. Is there any indication that this criticism has had an effect?

[Answer] We must wait and see. This was the first time that I have commented on the matter in public. I will make more frequent public statements in the future. You cannot expect any immediate effects from one day to the next, but there will be an effect.

[Question] Does this represent interference by party Deputy Chairman Helmut Schmidt in the party discussion?

[Answer] It is interference by the federal chancellor who at the same time is the deputy chairman. I will find much agreement.

[Question] In the party?

[Answer] Certainly, and particularly among the voters of the party, which is even more important.

NEWSPAPER VIEWS SCHMIDT POSITION VIS-A-VIS SPD

DW020947 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Editorial signed RM.: "That's How Schmidt Is Faring"]

[Text] When Willy Brandt, the first Social Democratic federal chancellor, got into the whirlpool of the Guillaume affair, his party would have liked to have kept him, but that was impossible -- the affair was too bad -- and therefore it had to drop him from the chancellorship. The party proved its loyalty to him by keeping him as party chairman to this day.

Helmut Schmidt, the second SPD chancellor, is treated differently by the party. He has not been involved in any scandal, but the party is making it difficult for him to survive as chancellor. His fiscal and economic policy is opposed by a large segment of the party. His energy policy is stuck in Social Democratic snares spread all over the Federal Republic.

Increasing numbers of his party -- several regional organizations and the Young Socialists, for instance -- want to make the federal chancellor abandon NATO's counter-armament decision which he has declared the basis of his security and alliance policy. On 10 October, not only SPD members but also officials want to take part in a so-called mass peace demonstration in Bonn, which is aimed at preventing Schmidt from pursuing a security policy based on a balance. But who is helping the federal chancellor? Party Chairman Willy Brandt speaks ambiguously even in the light of the 10 October spectacle, which is hurting and threatening Schmidt. The demand by the SPD leadership that its members choose between the party and the "peace movement" which is fighting the chancellor is not mentioned. The leadership is silent and looks on as Schmidt is being pushed by his own camp into an inability to govern.

Is next weekend's meeting between the party leadership and 500 officials from all over the country supposed to mobilize help for Schmidt? This is probably not the intention and it would hardly be possible to achieve this goal. The meeting will perhaps give the SPD leaders an idea of the mood. It is up to them to decide whether they want to back or bring about the failure of SPD Chancellor Schmidt.

FRG NATO OFFICIAL WARNS OF SOVIET NAVAL THREAT

Already today the Soviet Union is strong enough to disrupt the sealanes -- vital to Europe -- between the United States and Europe with its navy, the admiral said. The international significance of the Atlantic was underlined by the officer with the latest figures, according to which, approximately 2,000 ships use the Atlantic daily, transporting goods with a value of $100 billion per year.

NATO is also observing with great concern the activities of the Soviet Navy in the states of the Third World, especially on the coasts of those states on whose raw materials the Europeans are especially dependent, Luther said. Only the United States is in the position today of being able to meet the global intentions of the Soviet Navy. There is also a danger here that the United States may have to use its fleet in areas of tension which are outside NATO borders. The gaps created thereby in NATO have to be filled by the other NATO states. Luther therefore demanded an increased expansion of the navies of the other NATO states. "More than before, we have to look for solutions which distribute the work," he said.

COLOMBO GIVES 'MAJOR' FOREIGN POLICY STATEMENT

[Text] Rome, 1 Oct (ANSA) -- Italy's contribution to efforts to bring the United States and the Soviet Union to the bargaining table for talks on Euromissiles, for talks slated to open November 30 in Geneva, was outlined today in a major foreign policy statement to the Rome lower house delivered by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

The Italian diplomatic chief opened his sixty minute speech by indicating mutual security guaranteed by the balance of forces at the lowest possible level as the only viable avenue toward peace. He said that the meeting last week, on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly, between American Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and the decision to begin Euromissiles talks testifies to "broader prospects of a general desire to negotiate disarmament, discussion of which should move into a second stage with the resumption of Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT) negotiations" in the spring.

"Though the basic reasons for the East-West crisis remain unchanged," Colombo noted, "the productivity of the method of approach followed by Italy, aimed at opening up channels of communications between those responsible must be acknowledged."

As regards the NATO plan to deploy cruise and Pershing medium range nuclear missiles on European territory in 1983-84 to counter the buildup of Soviet SS-20's targeted on Western Europe, Colombo said that the ideal solution to the problem of Euromissiles would be to "agree on zero level" through a decision to dismantle the SS-20 installations already in existence to eliminate the need for the American missiles.

"Unfortunately," he added, "the position expressed recently by Gromyko is far from the Western stance." The diplomatic chief reaffirmed that any question of deploying neutron weapons on European soil can be answered only through consultations with the country involved.

In the section of his report on relations between Italy and Libya, Colombo once again stated that "threats" aired by the North African country are "totally unacceptable" and that channels to Tripoli must be kept open by Italy and all the nations of the European Community. "Such a policy can attenuate the dangers inherent in Libya's feelings of isolation internationally and safeguard the present forms of cooperation," the foreign minister affirmed.

Moving on to the Middle East, Colombo emphasized "the need to come to grips with the Palestinian question" and recalled that "the Italian Government has always dedicated close attention" to this issue. He described proposals for moving Mideast negotiations off dead center recently formulated by Saudi Arabia as of "great importance."

On one of the key points in Italian foreign policy, development aid for the Third World, Colombo referred to the Italian project for a world conference in Rome to take up the matter of hunger and malnutrition. He added that, the problems of underdevelopment, however, can only be adequately dealt with "through comprehensive negotiations within the United Nations" to follow up with concrete steps and a pragmatic approach. The foreign minister referred to European integration on both the political and economic levels as "indispensable for reviving the process of European unification."

Turning to the situation in Poland, Colombo reaffirmed the desire of the Italian Government, outlined also for the Soviet foreign minister last week, to see the Polish people make their own choices with respect for their own values, culture and sovereignty.

Colombo wound up his statement by reiterating Italy's loyalty to the commitments underwritten in the framework of the Atlantic alliance.

PAPER CHIDES OLESEN OVER REMARKS ON POLAND

[Editorial: "Warnings at the Wrong Time"]

[Text] You should not talk with your mouth full. It is bad manners and it can have the most awful consequences. Something stuck in Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen's throat when at his press lunch in the United States he expressed his deep concern over developments in Poland.

It is his right to be concerned and it is his duty to be watchful of the consequences events could have for Denmark and Danish interests, if his worries turn out to be true. But he has misunderstood something if he thinks that it is his job as Danish foreign minister to call on the Solidarity congress for greater restraint when negotiations are resumed in Gdansk tomorrow.

The foreign minister obviously thinks that he is correct in fearing that a final confrontation between Poland's communist authorities and Solidarity might be imminent. In the light of this, it would be natural for him in his talks with the Polish foreign minister to have expressed the Danish Government's concern over the possibility that the Polish Government would resort to drastic measures, the longer term consequences of which are incalculable. Denmark's security interests, in both the narrowest and widest sense of the word, would be affected if an open conflict were triggered in and around Poland. And it is fully correct to point out to the only authority which could trigger such a conflict that the use of force could also affect Danish-Polish relations.

But it cannot be the Danish foreign minister's job to draw the line as to how far the Polish renewal may go. It is not his task to give the leadership of Solidarity tactical warnings about refraining from further challenges. He has neither the right nor the qualifications for that. The war of nerves being waged in Poland around this first free trade union congress calls for robust participants and it is fortunate that the Polish leaders have had the raw physical and psychological strength to promote the renewal process for a whole year with their courage and moderation still intact and in balance. This has called for a tactical delicacy and a strategic instinct of historic proportions. Poland's is a political process which has often seemed more incredible and dangerous when viewed from outside the country than from inside. It contains elements and movements which can only be understood correctly by those who themselves are parts of the process. And it is lunacy to interfere in a political process which you neither understand nor have the opportunity to influence. The person, who in the present situation should be given a clear warning to consider his words and actions, is Kjeld Olesen himself.

'NO DECISIVE CHANGES' IN KEKKONEN'S CONDITION

[Text] There have been no decisive changes in President Urho Kekkonen's condition. The president's office announced this evening that there has been a slight improvement in the president's mental and physical condition.

According to the statement, the president is, however, suffering from sleeplessness. The statement says further that President Kekkonen has been mostly out of bed during the past few days and that he has even been outside for a short period. His appetite has also slightly improved, the statement says. The next bulletin on the president's condition will be issued on Monday.

The last bulletin, issued 3 days ago, said that the president had had intermittent losses of memory and lucidity. The earlier bulletins stated that the president was suffering from cerebrovascular disturbances. The president's sick leave, which began on 11 September, will end on 10 October.

ARMY REORGANIZATION AIMED AT WARTIME ROLES

[Editorial: "Regimental Deaths"]

[Text] Regimental deaths are an old concept in Sweden, chiefly in connection with the disarmament after World War 1. The disbanding of units in recent times has been part of the restructuring of the armed forces or rationalization measures to make the budget stretch. The closures which the commander in chief -- despite the storms of protest from the units affected -- proposed Friday have, however, a specific objective. Wartime organization is being given priority over peacetime units. For the armed forces to be able to carry out their tasks it is necessary to free resources for the primary objective -- defending peace and freedom.

Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung is right to stick to his original plan, with one minor exception. Any change at a later stage would only contribute to the free-for-all which will erupt in the Riksdag when various members will try to protect their constituency's regiment.

Nevertheless there can be no doubt that the contact between an area and its own regiment has been of the utmost importance for our defenses. The many years of readiness during the last war bear witness to this. It is an advantage when the recruits are able to do their military service in their own part of the country. On the eve of the coming changes it is important therefore to find forms which unite people and defense forces in the places where units are to be disbanded.

As far as the JAS aircraft is concerned, a SVENSKA DAGBLADET editorial pointed out that this system is a special case where military and civilian wishes can be satisfied without doing any damage to the efficiency of the defense forces. As far as the present unit closures are concerned it is, however, clear that the demands of the defense forces must take precedence over employment and regional policy considerations.

The commander in chief's proposals would mean unit closures and unit moves. In this context there is no reason to look at individual cases. Against the background of what the commander in chief has to take into consideration, the proposals seem justified, particularly because they are based on nationwide overall judgment.

Exchanging one proposed unit closure for another breaks the overall picture. What seems attractive locally -- even for politicians who have never been particularly interested in defense but who are spurred on when their home area's unit is threatened -- breaks the structure which is based on the country as a whole.

It now remains to be seen whether the Defense Committee will be able to rise above parochial preoccupations and take a national view when working the armed forces' peacetime organization into its final recommendations.

KIPRIANOU ADDRESSES COMMONWEALTH SUMMIT MEETING

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has asked for the Commonwealth's support in ending the Turkish occupation of Cyprus and declared that we will never agree to the creation of two separate states.

In addressing the Commonwealth summit conference in Melbourne this morning, President Kiprianou also asked the conferees to support us totally in our struggle for freedom, justice, democracy and restoration of human rights in Cyprus.

After thanking all those who sent congratulations on Cyprus' independence anniversary today, President Kiprianou stressed that Cyprus' independence has been violated for a long time. The Cypriots, he added, are not responsible for their present tragedy. He said: There were territorial claims against Cyprus, but it is utterly unacceptable to characterize the Cyprus issue as a problem of disputed territories. Of course, in a federated state the percentage of territory under Greek Cypriot administration is important as is the percentage of territory under the Turkish Cypriot administration. But what is more important, President Kiprianou stressed, is to end the foreign intervention and occupation.

President Kiprianou stressed: The Cyprus problem was not created by accident. It was created by a coup and an invasion. He added: We must be sincere among ourselves and, therefore, I will be sincere. Britain, as a guarantor power, did not perform its duty. It did not stop the invasion, nor did it restore the constitutional order even though it was in a position to do so. We are possessed by good will and we are striving for a peaceful solution. We do not accept partition. The creation of a federation, yes, but a divisional solution, no. All human rights, he stressed, must be restored for all Cypriots with guarantees provided. The foreign troops must withdraw and foreign intervention must end. He added: It would have been possible for us not to accept negotiations as long as foreign troops were on the island. But we agreed to negotiate. Unfortunately, however, the president said, there has been no progress, because the other side is striving to legalize and consolidate the faits accomplis. We will be happy, he said, if there is a change in Turkey's stand. We have no differences with the Turkish Cypriots. There are refugees, missing persons and dead, and an effort is being exerted to change the demographic character of Cyprus.

Mr Kiprianou said: Whatever the historical background may have been, what must be done is create a totally independent Cypriot state, end foreign intervention and fully implement the UN resolutions. He added: There must be a complete demilitarization and disarmament. Our proposal to establish an international police force to supervise issues of internal security for as long it is necessary still stands.

President Kiprianou said that we have already made many and constructive recommendations to the other side. However, the reply is always the same -- the creation of two separate states. He concluded: To this we will never agree.

In his address, President Kiprianou also referred to the main international issues which constitute a source of danger to the world, and he put forth Cyprus' position on them.

Regarding the Middle East issue, Mr Kiprianou said that our position is firm; that the UN resolutions must be implemented and an independent and sovereign Palestinian state must be created.

Regarding the Namibia issue, he said that Cyprus welcomes the latest UN resolutions and believes that efforts must be intensified until a just solution is achieved, namely, the creation of an independent and united Namibia. He also stressed that he does not agree with the British prime minister that the Namibia problem, as of course the Cyprus problem, is a problem of disputed territories.

PRIME MINISTER RALLIS INTERVIEWED ON ELECTIONS

NC011708 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Washington, (UP/APE) -- In an exclusive interview with the UNITED PRESS NEWS AGENCY Greek Prime Minister G. Rallis yesterday stated that his pro-Western policy will tilt the balance in the impending elections, guaranteeing a clear-cut victory for New Democracy. Rallis said that the extreme royalists of the right, who voted against New Democracy in 1977, now will support his party like many voters of the center who have been deserted by their leader Mavros, who has joined the opposition party PASOK.

My opinion that foreign policy issues will constitute the principal issues of the electoral confrontation has been proven correct, as one can ascertain from the development of the election campaign, Rallis said, adding:

"Greeks understand that upsetting our traditional foreign policy, specifically withdrawing from the EEC, will be dangerous for our country's interests and future. Currently, less than 3 weeks from the upcoming elections," Rallis observed, "public opinion, which until recently seemed to favor PASOK, has drastically changed."

The prime minister said that the percentage of votes PASOK will receive will depend on how many voters it can attract from the KKE. "The wind is blowing in New Democracy's favor," Rallis stated. Rallis also said that Spiros Theotokis, leader of the rightist royalists, has withdrawn from the elections and recommended to his followers that they vote for New Democracy, "so that the chaos which PASOK will create can be avoided."

"I have received letters from people who had been displeased with our party but who now say they will vote for us because of the seriousness of the current situation," the Greek prime minister stressed. He then added that he is worried by PASOK's anti-Turkish stance, given the fact that Turkey is Greece's ally in NATO. Concluding he said: "The PASOK chairman's daily inspirations depend on what he heard the previous day and from whom."

RALLIS' REPLY TO PASOK ON WALDHEIM INITIATIVE

[Text] The issue of whether to accept or reject UN Secretary General Waldheim's new initiative to promote the intercommunal dialogue is an issue that exclusively concerns the Cyprus Government and not the Greek Government.

Rallis said this is a statement made last night in reply to statements made by Mr Papandreou and the Party of Democratic Socialism [KODISO]. They advised the Greek and Cyprus governments not to commit themselves in any form before the 18 October elections.

Specifically, Mr Rallis stated the following: "It is known that Mr Waldheim intends to put forth a certain initiative to promote the dialogue in Cyprus. If the Cyprus Government agrees with the UN secretary general's initiative, it is impossible for the Greek Government to have a different view."

Mr Papandreou's statement that provoked the ministerial reply is as follows: "There are persistent press reports that covert moves are being made to formulate a solution to the Cyprus issue before the 18 October elections. We inform the Greek Government that its caretaker character does not allow it to commit the country in such a serious problem. It must await the Greek people's judgement."

In a statement, KODISO says also that according to information, a new Waldheim initiative is imminent which, in essence, will envisage the imposition of the unacceptable Turkish proposals of 5 August. KODISO appealed to Mr Kiprianou to refrain from making any commitments before the elections in Greece.

EVREN SENDS MESSAGE TO MITTERRAND ON ARMENIANS

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has sent a message to French President Francois Mitterrand saying that there should be no further delay in the taking of effective measures against terrorism on an international level. In his message, General Evren recalled that five criminal acts had been perpetrated against Turkish diplomats in France in less than 1 year. He pointed out that, in the face of these incidents, especially the French radio and television administration was pursuing a policy which was contradictory to that of the French Government which clearly declared its opposition to all kinds of terrorism. General Evren stressed that this establishment was making broadcasts which protrayed the Armenian demands as justified, which encouraged terrorist attacks and which could create hostile feelings against the Turks among the French public.

General Evren pointed out that the freedom of the French radio and television could not justify the instigation of hatred against another country. He expressed the belief that the French president would not allow these broadcasts to damage their traditional friendship, which was to the national interests of both countries.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT DELEGATION MEETS ULUSU

[Text] A delegation from the European Parliament which is in Ankara to gather information about the latest developments in Turkey called on Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu this afternoon. In a statement before the meeting, the prime minister said that peace and stability was established in Turkey after 12 September 1980 and that efforts were being made to improve the economy. He pointed out that Turkey was an integral part of Europe and would soon take its place within the EEC. He added: Unfortunately, the political instability prior to 12 September and the failure to attach the necessary importance to these problems caused a delay in our taking our place within the EEC.

Recalling that the Turkish people chose the parliamentary system, the prime minister stated that the system would be reestablished. However, he added, the necessary measures would be taken against elements that could damage democracy and the parliamentary system would be placed on stable foundations.

Ulusu noted that Turkey would need economic aid from its European friends for a while longer. He added: Maybe we would not have needed this aid now, had the economic policy pursued before 12 September not wasted resources.

Ulrich Ilmer, and FRG parliamentarian from the European Parliament's liberal group, said that there were strong ties between Turkey and the EEC and that the EEC considered Turkey a part of Europe. He added that they were following with interest the efforts to reestablish the parliamentary system in Turkey and that they were happy to see Turkey's determination about the issue during their talks.

OFFICIALS TO AVOID COMMENT ON GREEK ELECTIONS

[Text] Ankara, (CUMHURIYET bureau) -- Ankara will refrain from commenting on the polemics between the government and the opposition in Greece concerning Turkey or on statements issued about Turkey before the general elections due to be held in October.

A high-ranking official of the Foreign Ministry has stated that Turkey will maintain this attitude until the results of the elections become known.

The same official has said: "Turkey will seriously refrain from replying to statements made by this or that spokesman in Greece. We do not wish to create the impression that Turkey too is going through an election campaign. Once the elections in Greece are over, we shall certainly disclose our views."

STATEMENT OF MIDEAST COMMUNIST PARTIES MEETING

Part Three

TA270753 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 27 Sep 81

[Third and final part of statement issued at conclusion of September conference of representatives of communist and workers parties of the eastern Mediterranean, Near East, Middle East and Red Sea regions -- read by announcer]

[Text] 7. The participants at the conference pointed out that the imperialists, mainly the U.S. imperialists, were trying to damage stability in eastern Mediterranean and spreading their bases in this region. The imperialists are expanding their existing bases in Turkey and Greece. They have increased their pressures on the military regime in Turkey so that they can turn Turkey into an advanced NATO base and a camp site for the amphibious forces. Special importance must be attached to the efforts of the U.S. imperialists and of the most aggressive circles of NATO to expand the sphere of influence of the Atlantic alliance toward the eastern Mediterranean and outside NATO borders.

The participants at the conference consider it a vital and urgent duty to foil imperialism's plots. In regard to this, they actively support the Soviet proposals for the signing of international agreements to ensure peace and security. Such agreements will lead to activities that encourage military security, because they will cause the lifting of the (?maritime) nuclear weapons in the Mediterranean, they will lead to the purge of the Mediterranean countries from nuclear weapons and they will prevent the use of nuclear weapons against every country in the Mediterranean having no nuclear weapons.

The brotherly parties which attended the conference state that one of their main urgent duties is to wage a constant, active and determined struggle in their countries in order to turn the region into a region of lasting peace and security and purged of nuclear weapons.

In this regard, the parties which attended the conference condemn Israel's goal of developing nuclear weapons, and they call on it to sign the UN agreement of not (?giving) nuclear weapons.

In connection with the Cyprus problem, the representatives of the communist parties express their serious concern about the failure of the concerned parties to implement the UN resolutions and about the endangering of the Cyprus cause by imperialist activities. The solution lies with the implementation of the UN General Assembly and Security Council resolutions which guarantee an independent, soveriegn, territorially integral and non-aligned Cyprus purged of all foreign troops. The internal aspect of the Cyprus problem must be resolved on the basis of the UN resolutions and high-level agreements and through the intercommunal talks to be held under the auspices of the United Nations. Such a conference will ensure the implementation of the UN resolutions and guarantee the strong and trustworthy guarantees [as heard] of the UN Security Council for Cyprus' independence.

The representatives of the communist parties wholly support the Cypriot people's struggle to eliminate all the military bases and installations and to bring about a complete demilitarization of the island. The representatives at the conference expressed their solidarity with all the communists and all progressive forces in Turkey which struggle for human rights and democratic freedoms under the difficult conditions of the reactionary military dictatorship and against imperialist demands.

The representatives at the conference discussed the Aegean problem and expressed the view that this hotbed of tension must be resolved more speedily by means of peaceful negotiations based on the Helsinki Final Declaration, on international law, respect for the two sides' national independence and sovereignty rights and on the two peoples' mutual interests. Such negotiations must be conducted without imperialist demands and interference and outside all imperialist organizations.

8. The participants at the conference pointed out the positive and active contribution of the Iranian revolution to the regional peoples' struggle against imperialism. They underscored the fact that Iran's progress along an anti-imperialist path is in harmony with the Iranian people's national interests, and that it strengthens the Iranian revolution's respectability in the region and in the world. The conference expresses its full solidarity with the Iranian people's revolutionary struggle to protect and expand its revolutionary gains.

9. The representatives of the communist and worker parties who attended the conference stressed the importance of an active opposition to be carried out by all anti-imperialist patriotic forces against the threats to democratic freedoms of imperialism, Zionism and Arab reactionaryism. The countries which respect democratic freedoms, political and syndical and other democratic patriotic organizations and which meet the people's demands are in a much stronger position to oppose and foil imperialist intrigues. The participants at the conference state that heeding the masses' living conditions and opposing the monopolies' and multinational companies' invasion of the economy is a basic link in the attitude against imperialism and in the opposition to imperialism's intrigues both inside and outside the countries.

The conference condemns and expresses its anger against the terrorist actions being perpetrated against the communists and against other democratic patriots in the region, in Egypt, Iraq, Sudan, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, Jordan, Turkey, Somalia and in the Israeli occupied territories; and it expresses its solidarity with their mass struggle. The conference also condemns the massacres, military campaigns and all types of oppression and terror against the patriots and democrats of the Yemen Arab Republic. The conference expresses its solidarity with this country's people's struggle led by the National Democratic Front and it demands the release of the political prisoners, the reestablishment of democratic freedoms and the stopping of the military campaigns.

10. The representatives of the communist parties pointed out, with serious concern, the efforts of U.S. imperialism to force its Western European allies and other countries to set up giant arsenals in their countries, to hit the patriotic forces, to help the aggressive imperialist plans in order to plunder these countries' natural resources, and to set up reactionary alliances such as "the Gulf Cooperation Council" in order to threaten peace and security in the region and in the world. The participants expressed their solidarity with the peoples of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and with the democratic and patriotic forces in the Gulf and Arab Peninsula. The parties represented at the conference greet all efforts to eliminate the dangers threatening the region. They especially support the Soviet Union's 5-point proposals for the reestablishment of peace and the guarantee of the countries' security and nonalignment in the Gulf region. These parties realize that the proposals are a realistic and stable path for emerging out of the almost explosive situation in the region. The participants at the conference greet and support the appeal of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to the countries in the Arab Peninsula, the Gulf and the African [word indistinct] and concerned sides to hold a summit meeting where they would discuss proposals for solving the problem of eliminating the imperialist bases in the region which seriously threaten peace and security in the region and in the world.

The participants at the conference greet and support as a forward step in the strengthening of the unity of the regional progressive and anti-imperialist forces such moves as the summit conference held in Aden by socialist Ethiopia, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah -- at the end of which the three countries signed a tripartite friendship agreement.

The participants at the conference condemn the criminal attack of the South African Republic against the People's Republic of Angola and demand this attack be stopped. They express their solidarity with the Angolan people who, led by the MPLA-Labor Party, wage a struggle for their sovereignty rights, national independence and territorial integrity. Also, they express their solidarity with the Namibian people who, led by SWAPO. wage a struggle against the occupation of their lands by the Pretoria racists and to regain their national independence.

11. Imperialist attacks are found to fail if they are opposed by the united power of all patriotic and progressive forces. That is why, as in the past, the communists will be in solidarity with all the peoples who wage a struggle for their democratic rights and freedoms; or where such peoples' rights do not exist, they will wage a struggle to regain them. The communists expressed their conviction that the imperialist attacks, especially U.S. imperialist attacks, in the region supported by the war-obsessed Israeli leaders and Arab reactionaryism can be turned back successfully. The main precondition for this is the widest cooperation of the anti-imperialist and democratic forces in the region. In order to achieve this, these forces must set aside the secondary problems among themselves and establish a wide anti-imperialist front which will combat the imperialist attacks, in order to liberate the region from dependence on imperialism, to pave the way for national independence and progress of all the countries in the region, and to strengthen world peace.

The communists and workers parties' representatives who attended the conference stressed that much more determined efforts must be exerted o prevent the war threat, to stop U.S. imperialism's efforts to impose a policy of confrontation and to use force in internatioal relations, and to guarantee the policy of resolving disagreements and conflicts through peaceful negotiations.

The conference reiterates that through the united and coordinated struggle of all peace-loving forces, plus all those who are determined to prevent the calamity of a war, the imperialist aggressions can be stopped and the imperialist forces can be induced once more to pursue the path of detente and reason. The representatives of the communist and workers parties participating in the conference appeal on all the communists in the region, the progressive peoples as well as all the democratic and peace-loving forces, to mobilize all their energies for the undertaking of such a struggle for the sake of regional peace, of the independence and progress of the regional peoples and for the sake of global peace.

12. The conference denounces all anti-Soviet and anticommunist activities aimed at the enslaving and the exploitation of the peoples and at the undermining of international solidarity, as well as of the struggle being waged by the peoples against imperialism.

13. The participants at the conference stress that they consider the unity of communists based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and international proletariat a basic factor in ensuring the unity of all anti-imperialist and antiwar forces.

The participants also express their belief in the vital necessity of convening as soon as possible a worldwide conference of all communist and workers parties, and of further strengthening the unity of the international communist movement in its struggle for the sake of peace, democracy, national independence and socialism.

LE SOIR: ELECTIONS TO BE HELD 8 NOVEMBER

[Excerpt] It has now all been said. It is on 8 November that Belgian citizens aged 18 years and over will settle the fierce battle started many months ago by the leaders of the dozen political parties which vie for strong positions on the country's political chessboard.

Marc Eyskens' outgoing government held its first meeting early Monday evening to deal with current business. It decided to propose that the king convene the electoral colleges on Sunday, 8 November, to relect the two houses of parliament and the provincial councils.

Before the two houses are dissolved, the government has decided to present parliament with a draft declaration revising the Constitution this Tuesday. As was to be expected, this draft will merely take up the articles of the Constitution which the 1978 constituent authority has not yet had the opportunity to amend.

SPAIN

120,000 DEMONSTRATE OVER COOKING OIL SCANDAL

NC011328 Paris AFP in English 1242 GMT 1 Oct 81

[Text] Madrid, 1 Oct (AFP) -- An estimated 120,000 demonstrators filed through the Spanish capital last night protesting Spain's poisoned cooking oil scandal, police said today.

About 140 people have died in Spain since May 1 from toxic pneumonia, caused by adulterated cooking oil. Protesters here included surviving victims of the epidemic, demonstrators dressed in funeral attire and whole families. Leftist politicians and labor union leaders also took part in the demonstration, which organisers said was one of the largest gatherings in Spain's history.

Since the outbreak of toxic pneumonia 26 people have been arrested on charges arising from the distribution of adulterated cooking oils.

PCE'S CARRILLO MEETS WITH VISITING CUBAN

FL020054 Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 2 Oct 81

[Text] Spain's Communist Party Secretary General Santiago Carrillo today met with Rene Rodriguez Cruz, member of Cuba's Communist Party [PCC] Central Committee, who is visiting Madrid. The Spanish leader asked Rodriguez Cruz to convey greetings to Fidel and Raul Castro, first and second secretaries of the PCC Central Committee, and expressed gratitude for Cuba's participation in the annual festivities of his organization.

ROMANIAN CULTURAL COOPERATION -- Representatives from Spain and Romania in Bucharest signed the program to implement in 1981-82 the cultural cooperation agreement the two countries signed in 1979. The program also provides for the development and diversification of cooperation between the Romanian news agency, AGERPRES, and the Spanish news agency, EFE, on the basis of the 1979 agreement. In addition, the agreement covers exchanges in education, sports, journalism and science. [Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 1 Oct 81 LD]

WISCHNEWSKI, USSR'S ZAMYATIN MEET IN COLOGNE

[Text] Bonn, 2 Oct (DPA) -- SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski and the high-ranking Soviet party official Leonid Zamyatin met in Cologne on Friday for a talk which apparently served in particular to prepare the visit by Soviet head of state Leonid Brezhnev to the Federal Republic planned for the end of November. According to SPD Executive Wolfgang Clement, the meeting took place at the request of Zamyatin who heads the International Information Department at the CPSU Central Committee. Clement said simply that the international situation and questions of mutual interest were discussed. The talk took place in Wischnewski's home in Cologne where the SPD politician is convalescing from a serious bout of influenza.

GENSCHER DEPARTS FOR PRC WITH STOPOVER IN QATAR

[Text] Bonn, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, left Bonn by plane on Sunday morning for comprehensive political talks in Beijing. Genscher, who is accompanied by German industrialists and scientists, wants to further strengthen relations with Beijing.

On the way to Beijing, Genscher will make a stopover in the afternoon in the Emirate of Qatar, on the Persian Gulf, for 5-hour-long political talks. German diplomats stressed the important strategic position of the country, with which Genscher wants to establish closer relations.

Speaking before his departure, Genscher attached great importance to meeting the Chinese leadership. China carries weight in international politics. The Federal Republic maintains good and trusting relations with China, which have steadily expanded in the past few years. Genscher said that, apart from the world political situation, an important topic for discussion in Beijing will be the North-South summit meeting in Cancun (Mexico) at the end of October, to be attended by China.

FDP CHAIRMAN ASSURES SCHMIDT ON PEACE POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 3 Oct (DPA) -- FDP Chairman and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher assured Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of the Free Democrats' uncompromising support for the Federal Government's peace policy. Addressing a meeting of the Lower Saxony FDP regional main committee in Bucholz on Saturday, Genscher referred to the start of negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on medium-range missiles as a success of the Federal Government's peace policy. The same was true of the U.S. confirmation of the mutual zero option as a Western negotiating target.

Genscher stressed that the Federal Government will do everything to promote negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union and to ensure a favorable East-West climate. Whether missile counterarming is necessary is entirely up to the Soviet Union. Abolition of the Soviet SS-20 missiles targeted on West Europe, would, in the spirit of the mutual zero option, make the Western counterarmament superfluous.

LEADERS OPPOSE PARTICIPATION IN PEACE MARCH

Genscher Remarks

LD021642 Hamburg DPA in German 1604 GMT 2 Oct 81

[Text] [No dateline received] Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher would oppose FDP members attending the Bonn peace demonstration on 10 October. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk, made public by the FDP, he said today that peace policy is a most important part of FDP and SPD policy. Anyone opposing that policy opposes that path which the two parties believe to be correct. At the same time, he emphasized that he rejects the idea that anybody who attends such a demonstration should be discriminated against. However, the demonstrators should not claim to have a monopoly on peace.

Minister of State Comments

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 2 Oct (DPA) -- Peter Corterier (SPD), minister of state at the Foreign Ministry, sharply criticized the intention of SPD Presidium member Erhard Eppler and other SPD politicians to attend the peace demonstration planned for 10 October in Bonn. In an interview for BILD AM SONNTAG, Corterier said: "This demonstration is a stab in the back" for the chancellor and the government. It is a torpedo against efforts which have so far been successful to carry through German interests in the disarmament negotiations.

Social Democrats who attend this so-called peace demonstration violate the SPD's irreconcilabiltiy resolution which prohibits joint actions with communists. "Anyone who continues to demonstrate with communists against the government must ask himself whether he can remain a member of this party," the SPD politician said.

Should the NATO dual decision be rejected at the next SPD party congress, then Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will carry out his promise and resign. This will at the same time remove the basis for success in the disarmament negotiations. "However, I believe Schmidt will have his way," Corterier said.

FDP EXECUTIVE WELCOMES U.S.-USSR MISSILE TALKS

[Text] Bonn, 2 Oct (DPA) -- The FDP Executive welcomes the Soviet-American agreement concerning the start of negotiations on medium-range missiles in November. FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling said on Friday that the FDP Executive sees this as a significant step toward realizing the peace policy striven for by the FDP. The Executive will ask the Soviet Union, through the abolition of its medium-range missiles advance armament, to enable the Western side to forgo counterarming and thus make possible the zero solution. He also expects a concrete mandate for a European disarmament conference to be given at the Madrid followup conference, to enable agreement on confidence-building measures for the whole of Europe.

POLITICIAN DISCUSSES GAS-PIPELINE DEAL WITH USSR

[Excerpt] Bonn, 3 Oct (DPA) -- The intended German-Soviet gas-pipeline deal will not lead to FRG dependency in the energy and security sectors, FDP Parliamentary Group Chairman Wolfgang Mischnick said in an interview for NORDWESTZEITUNG (Saturday edition), an editorial version of which was prereleashed to DPA. It made sense to achieve greater [words indistinct].

Economic cooperation between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union offers no unilateral advantages, Mischnick said. "Any one deviating from the underlying understanding would also have to accept an impairment of his own interests. However, past experiences give no cause for such concern."

In the view of the FDP group chairman, every opportunity must be taken to safeguard West Berlin's energy supplies. Since the electricity line to West Berlin will not come about in the near future, he says an additional energy supply via the gas-pipeline will be helpful.

SPY SWAP ALLOWS 'ABOUT 3,000' TO LEAVE GDR

[Text] Bonn, 2 Oct (DPA) -- According to Federal Minister for Intra-German Relations Egon Franke, the exchange of chancellory spy Guenther Guillaume and other GDR agents and the related arrangements with East Berlin about family reunifications have made it possible for the greatest number of persons to be released and able to leave the GDR in a single group so far. In an interview with DPA, Franke today confirmed indirectly that in connection with the swapping of agents, about 3,000 GDR citizens will be allowed to leave soon for the Federal Republic. The operation affects "thousands" of people in the GDR, the minister said. The figure of 3,000 mentioned in the press is "not exaggerated."

Among those released in return for the GDR agents expelled from the Federal Republic last night, Franke said, are three men sentenced to life imprisonment. One of them has already served 13 years. The GDR also handed over several persons sentenced to terms ranging from 10 to 15 years. Franke said: "Several very difficult cases that could not be included in negotiations in the past have been solved."

It was also learned in Bonn that the GDR released a total of 30 persons sentenced mainly for espionage and attempted escapes. According to the same source, the Federal Republic released two other GDR agents in addition to Guillaume and the GDR agent Renate Lutze, who were engaged in military espionage.

Franke, whose ministry initiated and handled the swap, criticized and regretted the fact that the exchange of agents had become prematurely known through indiscretions in Bonn. The leakage of the international exchange plans caused annoyance in the countries concerned -- South Africa, France, Denmark. As a result of South Africa's withdrawal from the swap arrangement, the original number of people to be released from the GDR was reduced. Franke commented: "As a result of these indiscretions, of this prattle, some will unfortunately remain in GDR custody for some time yet." However, this problem does not in any way affect the arrangements with East Berlin about family reunifications.

Asked about the payments that Bonn makes for releases from the GDR according to a long-standing practice, Franke said that what had been agreed was "substantially lower than in the past." The minister said the number of persons allowed to leave the GDR for family reunifications noticeably increased during the past few years. "This year, we have been able to solve more individual cases than in any previous year." Franke denied that the Federal Republic failed to make use of its optimum possibilities in the Guillaume swap arrangement. These are "totally unwarranted insinuations." "Anyone capable of imagining the difficulties should be able to see that many people have regained their freedom for this man (Guillaume)." Like previous governments, the Federal Government tried to clear up many humanitarian matters in connection with this case as to make the circumstances resulting from Germany's division more bearable.

With obvious reference to the reduced international participation in the exchange arrangements, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said at a press conference in Bonn today that the Federal Government is not satisfied with the overall extent of the operation. The overall scale hoped for has not been achieved.

Like Franke's statements, Becker's remark may be seen as confirmation that Bonn achieved fewer releases of GDR prisoners than it originally wished. Becker emphasized that the premature publication of the operation had upset still incomplete arrangements and harmed the negotiations. He said that press reports that South Africa some time ago had withdrawn from the arrangements were false.

Becker announced that the exchange operation is still in progress and is to be concluded today. The Federal Government however will not disclose figures or names afterward.

SCIENTISTS REGISTER DETONATION NORTH OF BERLIN

[Text] Berlin, 4 Oct (DPA) -- Berlin scientists presently are concerned with a detonation registered during last Thursday night in the GDR, north of Berlin. Geophysicists at the Free University registered at 0336 that night seismograph readings which, according to West Berlin newspapers, indicate a violent explosion. The TAGES-SPIEGEL and the MORGENPOST reported eyewitnesses who had at the time observed a bright gleam of light and then thundering noises.

Meteorologist Paul Schlaak from the Free University on Sunday confirmed these findings to DPA. The seismograph reading showed the signs typical of a detonation or explosion of a similar kind. But Schlaak also said that in the meantime possibilities other than an explosion are being investigated. Another eyewitness observed a light which moved north of Berlin in an easterly direction. Schlaak explained that in this case the detonation could also derive from satellite debris or a meteorite. Investigations were still continuing on Sunday.

ADN has not yet recorded the incident nor have the GDR's Saturday newspapers.

DIE ZEIT CRITICIZES U.S. FOREIGN POLICY APPROACH

DW020929 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 2 Oct 81 p 1

[Michael Naumann editorial: "Reagan Reduces Speed"]

[Excerpt] In his foreign policy, President Reagan will have to change his approach, bring diverging strategies into line and curb egoistic individualists within the cabinet. The attempt to press the world into an anti-Soviet mold has thus far only encouraged the Third World dictatorships to pursue a repressive policy in the name of anticommunism. There is hardly a tyrant who did not send cordial greetings to Reagan and there is hardly a junta which would not find sympathizers in the White House. Vice President Bush, a pleasant man, acknowledged Philippine dictator Marcos' "admirable loyalty to democracy" and Alexander Haig "understands" the Argentine regime and supplies arms "because we both believe in God."

By considering exclusively South Africa's raw materials and the Cubans in Angola, Jimmy Carter's Africa policy has been totally changed. Several weeks prior to the symbolically important North-South summit in Cancun, the U.S. secretary of state recommended to the Third World countries the blessings of Protestant work ethics. For months, El Salvador was bombastically cited as the test case of the East-West relationship.

In the Middle East, arms sales to all sides -- F-16's and AWACS -- were declared the essence of the strategy of peace, with the responsible people fooling themselves and the world public that a "strategic consensus" could be achieved between Israelis and Arabs, which would simply push aside the unpleasant Palestinian problem. This consensus does not even exist in the White House's sphere of influence: the Republican dominated Senate is threatening to turn down the sale of AWACS radar aircraft to the Saudis.

How capable of learning is Reagan? Many things make us hopeful. El Salvador is no longer considered by Washington to be a potential litmus strip of world politics. Consideration for white South Africa goes far but not to the extent that the Americans are publicly torpedoing the Namibia settlement sought by the Western contact group. The counterarmament negotiations on Eurostrategic weapons have been agreed on without insistence on a linkage with good conduct. Is the conservative ideology gradually changing into conservative pragmatism?

The economic, domestic and foreign-political reduction in speed by Reaganism is by no means bound to be a disadvantage to the President. The frank contradiction by the opposition also entails a learning process for Ronald Reagan. Adapting a phrase by Victorian historian Macauley on the U.S. Constitution to the last few months, his policy thus far has been "all sails, no anchor." Now the President has to find bottom.

GERMAN-U.S. GROUP FORMED TO IMPROVE RELATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 30 Sep (DPA) -- To improve relations between the Bundestag and the U.S. Congress, a German - U.S. parliamentary group consisting so far of 120 Bundestag deputies of all three parties was founded in Bonn today.

Berlin SPD Deputy Peter Maenning, who has worked for the establishment of such a group for a long time, was elected chairman.

According to Maenning, the deputies will work for closer personal relations between the members of the two parliaments and for better mutual understanding on all major political and social questions. There is now an opportunity to underscore continuing friendly U.S. - FRG relations at a time when there is talk of an alleged increase of anti-Americanism in the Federal Republic.

FOREIGN MINISTRY WARNS BANI-SADR, RAJAVI

[Text] Bani-Sadr and Rajavi have been warned to observe a reserved attitude in their activities. Their decision yesterday to form a provisional Iranian government-in-exile has drawn a warning from the Quai d'Orsay which reminds them that those who enjoy the right of asylum in France are under an obligation to observe a reserved attitude in political matters.

COMMUNIST PARTY EXPELS 30 'DISSIDENTS'

[Text] Paris, 2 Oct (AFP) -- Thirty French Communist Party dissidents including former Central Committee member Henri Fiszbin have been thrown out of the 700,000 member party, it was announced here today.

The PCF Central Committee Secretariat said that the 30 had "removed themselves from the party" by refusing to stop publishing a weekly bulletin and holding meetings of a group with ideas different from the strict party line.

Mr Fiszbin, 51, was among party dissidents who split with the central leadership three years ago when the "Leftist Union" between the French Socialist and Communist Parties fell apart during the buildup to parliamentary elections. He nonetheless had remained a party member. Observers here remarked on the irony of Mr Fiszbin's exclusion from the party at a time when his position in favor of union with the Socialists had been vindicated with the inclusion of four Communist ministers in the new government of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand.

PCF leader Georges Marchais had promised in 1978 that no heads would roll despite conflict within the party on the union issue, but many leading party intellectuals and journalists dropped out after the election fiasco that year.

Mr Fiszbin, who has criticized Mr Marchais for "the immense gap between stated principles and their application," had called for a switch to democratic functioning of the hierarchical party and broad discussions in preparation for the party's 24th congress to be held early next year.

Fiszbin Comments

[Text] Doors are being slammed at the Communist Party. A communique of the PCF Central Committee said yesterday that Henri Fiszbin and 29 other members of the party have left the party. Fiszbin and his friends wanted more dialogue within the PCF and, to achieve this, formed a club, Communist Encounters. On 18 September, the PCF leadership warned them to fall back into line. Henri Fiszbin refused to exercise self-criticism and today he finds himself outside the party, with 29 of his comrades. This is the most significant PCF exclusion action since World War II. Henri Fiszbin spoke to correspondent Michel Lemerle. [Begin recording] [Fiszbin] This is absolutely unacceptable. It is entirely illegal regarding the statutes that rule the party's life. It is the statement of a measure that has no existence and is as a consequence unacceptable. It is nobody's business and not that of the Central Committee to decide for 30 communists who have decided to set up Communist Encounters what their choice should be. Our choice, and we reaffirm it categorically, is our intention to remain members of the Communist Party and to act as Communist militants to face the problems that exist today.

[Lemerle] Didn't you violate the party statutes; didn't you obviously form a faction?

[Fiszbin] Our activity has strictly nothing to do with a faction; I would even affirm the opposite. Our activity does not intend to champion this or that analysis, this or that group interest, but on the contrary to contribute our full share to make debate within the party real and profound. PCF'S GREMETZ MEETS WITH FOREIGN VISITORS

Algerian Delegation Head

[Text] An Algerian National Liberation Front [FLN] delegation headed by Slimane Hoffmann, member of the Central Committee and chief of the foreign relations section, met at PCF headquarters with Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz.

This meeting took place within the framework of the traditional relations existing between the PCF and FLN. The two parties reaffirmed their desire to strengthen their cooperation on all questions of mutual interest.

Nicaraguan Leader

PM021359 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Sep 81 p 8

[Text] Commander of the Revolution Bayardo Arce, Nicaraguan Sandinist National Liberation Front political coordinator, had a meeting with PCF Secretary Maxime Gremetz.

The meeting between the two leaders provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on the situation in Nicaragua and in France. The need to strengthen cooperation between the two countries in all spheres was stressed.

Maxime Gremetz reaffirmed to Bayardo Arce the PCF's solidarity with the Nicaraguan people and the Sandinist National Liberation Front at a time when the Reagan administration is adopting a more aggressive policy toward that country and toward Central America as a whole. The two sides decided to strengthen their ties of friendship and cooperation.

L'HUMANITE COMMENTS ON U.S.-SOVIET ARMS TALKS

PM021043 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Max Leon article: "Following the Gromyko-Haig Talks"]

[Text] The two Soviet-American meetings which have just taken place in New York during the UN assembly probably do not mark a turning point in world policy. But the fact is that they took place and they resulted in an expected decision -- to resume negotiations on nuclear armaments (Eurostrategic missiles) at the end of November. The two countries' foreign ministers had not met even once since the Reagan administration came to power and the new U.S. President and his government had proclaimed that there could be no discussion unless the Soviet Union "made amends."

Since General Haig announced that any negotiations with Moscow would have to be "all-embracing" -- according to the linkage methods, which consists in linking all problems together -- he was obviously loath to accept the start of bilateral discussion in the limited sphere of the nuclear arms race. Indeed, it was impossible to claim for long to seek a deescalation and, at the same time, demand simultaneous settlement of all USSR-U.S. disputes.

By agreeing to hold negotiations in Geneva on 30 November and to resume discussion between the two countries' diplomacy chiefs at the beginning of next year, the American leaders implicitly admitted that the cold war strategy is encountering many problems.

Washington could not fail to be aware of the opposition being encountered in West Europe on the subject of the excessive armament plans, particularly the Atlantic program to deploy 572 new nuclear weapons systems on the continent.

In the United States itself, the policy of increasing defense spending has met with considerable reservations even in Congress and the consequences it entails for the social budgets has led hundreds of thousands of Americans to demonstrate on the streets.

Reagan and his ministers whose avowed ambition it was to restore America's total "leadership" over the Western world and to regain the military superiority of the 1950's and 1960's, challenging the existing parity between the two great alliances, have noticed that there is many a slip twixt cup and lip.

However, they are not abandoning the desire for hegemony. They still plan to win approval for $1.6 trillion worth of military spending between now and 1986; the decision to mass-produce the neutron bomb will build up thousands of additional nuclear weapons of a new type in arsenals which already have 60,000 nuclear weapons! This unprecedented military effort, which will soon be extended by new measures concerning the MX ICBM, the new giant bombers which will replace the B-1's [as published] and so forth, is being explained in Washington by means of a scare campaign based on a so-called Soviet threat and a so-called USSR military superiority which the Pentagon is demonstrating by twisting figures. Parity has virtually not changed since it was accepted and officially recognized by the U.S. Government at the Vienna summit and spelled out clearly in the SALT II documents.

The U.S. President is obviously aware of this. Andrey Gromyko made himself quite clear during his talks with General Haig by stressing that, at the present time, it is illusory for anybody to try to gain supremacy.

But the Geneva negotiations must not become bogged down; they must lead to a limitation of the nuclear forces deployed on the European Continent and then to a reduction in the arsenals. This demand is not only legitimate but realistic: A nuclear conflict would not spare any power; agreement is possible with respect for the security of each.

In Europe, whatever opinion each may have on the figures and on the origins of the arms race, millions of men and women are now committed to the idea that the strategy of confrontation is crazy and dangerous and that, to survive, it is vital to negotiate. In Paris, Bonn, Brussels and Rome on 25 October this will be the demand made by an entire continent to avert the threat of destruction.

LE MONDE LAUDS MITTERRAND MIDEAST VISIT

[Editorial: "Mitterrand and the Near East"]

[Text] Mitterrand has every reason to be satisfied with the results of his visit to Saudi Arabia. Of course no "miracle" took place, but he was not hoping for one. On the other hand, he succeeded in starting a positive process without abandoning any of his convictions -- quite the reverse, in fact.

The aim of the president's visit was to strengthen Saudi Arabia's authority in the region and to give his backing to the spirit of the plan put forward last August by Prince Fahd as the basis for a settlement to the Israeli-Arab conflict.

The press conference given by Mitterrand and the Saudi deputy prime minister in at-Ta'if on 28 September tended to show that that aim has been attained. After Mitterrand had clearly indicated that he could not approve all the points of the Fahd plan, the prince in fact recognized that later alterations were possible and that it was not a take-it-or-leave-it proposal. The prince added that Saudi Arabia is now going to try to "win over the other Arab countries" with a view to the next Islamic summit which is to be held in Morocco at the beginning of November.

As expected, the main difference of opinion between Paris and Riyadh concerns Jerusalem, which the prince would like to make the capital of a future Palestinian state. Such a demand is clearly unacceptable to Israel. Mitterrand is well aware of that and that is why he refused to have his hands tied. To make things quite clear, he did not hesitate, although he was not far from Mecca, to publicly declare his friendship for Israel, explaining that "since the last world war" he had been unable "to remain indifferent to the fate of a martyred people."

Standing by what he has always said on this subject, he did not conceal the fact that the Israeli Government is violating international law by denying the Palestinian people's right to a homeland and to give that homeland the "structures of their choice."

Only weeks or even months from now will we know whether Mitterrand's initiative has real chances of success. It is encouraging that no excessively decisive reaction has yet been observed. This caution from all sides in the Israeli-Arab conflict at least suggests that a time for thought may have arrived. A categorical rejection of Mitterrand's positions by the PLO -- an organization which the president merely regards as "very representative" -- would in fact end the French-Saudi approach. So would the Islamic conference's refusal to back the Fahd plan.

The most difficult task facing Mitterrand now is to persuade Israel to enter the negotiation process. This will not be easy, but the head of state now has an advantage which his predecessor never enjoyed -- credibility. No sincere person can suspect him of accepting the disappearance of a Jewish state. This is a fear which Begin has not hesitated to use in persuading his compatriots to support his diehard policy. The second part of Mitterrand's courageous gamble will probably be played out next January when the president visits Israel.

PRESIDENT SET TO VISIT ISRAEL ON 8 FEBRUARY

MITTERRAND RECEIVES MALTA'S MINTOFF 29 SEP

[Text] Maltese Prime Minister Mintoff talked more than 1 hour with Mitterrand on Tuesday, 29 September.

After the meeting, he simply said that he had discussed bilateral relations with the president. However, Malta ardently hopes that the European countries will guarantee the neutral status which the island has adopted and will give it economic aid. So far, only Italy has signed an agreement guaranteeing Malta's neutrality and that was signed in 1980. There is no doubt that this question was discussed at the Elysee. Mintoff will go on to London this Wednesday.

SENIOR DIPLOMAT COMMENTS ON U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

[Text] Rome, 3 Oct (ANSA) -- The exaggerated tone of challenge and the crusade-like mannerisms of the Reagan administration in its response toward the recent Soviet Union arms build-up is not aiding the process of detente, according to Italian senior diplomatic official, Renato Bova Scoppa.

Reporting on American-Soviet Union relations in a recently released memorandum from the Italian "Center of Diplomatic Studies", the former long-time ambassador to Moscow wrote that "an agreement would be difficult to implement with the Russians and would not contain any real guarantee of control. But if we at least hope to effect a period of cease-fire or possibly detente, it would behoove Reagan to emphasize to (Soviet Union President) Brezhnev the urgency of proposals for negotiations, rather than continually proclaim his intention of making the United States the strongest nation in the world."

A former ambassador to Venezuela and Indonesia, and considered among diplomatic circles as a major expert on Soviet Union affairs, Bova Scoppa offered his own opinion in the report of what course would be the best to follow.

"It would be opportune to avoid the illusion," he wrote, "that Moscow would agree to withdraw any time soon from Afghanistan or would discontinue its defense of socialism policy. These ideas are in contrast with the political philosophy of their regime, which in any case is not disposed to modifying itself according to advise and threats from Washington."

According to Bova Scoppa, the course which the United States must follow if it wants to achieve military superiority over the Soviet Union is to cease "the exaggerated tones of challenge attached to American rearmament policies."

"This attitude can never be accepted by the Russians who do not wish to feel that they are under American tutelage in matter of political behavior, and who are also unwilling to lose face before the other Soviet bloc countries," the ambassador wrote.

"The Soviet Union has become the strongest military power in the world in a short period of time, without however proclaiming to the four winds that it wished to do so."

"It has been able to do this also as a consequence of the errors, contradictions and weaknesses of its adversaries."

After outlining what he views as a "political and psychological problem of extreme importance," the diplomatic expert went on to reassure his readers that "Reagan, as a realist, will surely keep two essential factors in mind. The first is that the Russians, (and no one else for that matter) wants a nuclear war, especially with millions of Chinese on their borders. The second is that Soviet diplomacy has given considerable evidence, not only of its efficiency, but also of its prudence."

PARLIAMENT HOLDS DEBATE ON FOREIGN POLICY

Colombo Report

[Excerpts] Rome, 2 Oct (ANSA) -- The house is due today to wind up a debate on foreign policy begun yesterday with a report from Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

One of the most important things to come out of the discussion so far was the agreement of all parties, including the opposition, to work for disarmament and peace. The parties making up the five-day government coalition -- Christian Democrats (DC), Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats (PSDI), Republicans (PRI) and Liberals (PLI) -- also decided to put a joint document to the vote.

In his speech, Colombo dealt with all the foreign policy matters of the moment.

With regard to Euromissiles, he voiced confidence that the negotiations between the U.S. and the USSR would be frutiful. With regard to the neutron bomb, he said that America's decision to produce it did not commit Europe in any way.

Touching on the situation in Poland, Colombo said that the people must be allowed to make their own independent choices without outside interference.

On the Mideast, he noted the careful consideration Italy is giving to the Palestinian question.

Turning to Italian-Libyan ties, he stressed the need to repulse Tripoli's threats but added that the dialogue with Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi should not be broken off. The current debate is an important one and all of the top party leaders will participate [word indistinct] the discussions will wind up with votes on the various motions presented.

PSI Deputy Secretary Claudio Martelli voiced his party's concern for growing Soviet military strength. However he said that peace muat be guaranteed by a substantial balance of forces and not by a regained American military supremacy. He also reiterated PSI opposition to the installation in Europe of the neutron bomb. He also voiced satisfaction over the fact that the Italian Communist Party (PCI) had taken the road of pacifist iniatives. "Our country needs all of its democratic forces," he said.

Communist Gian Carlo Pajetta said Italy must make it clear now that it never wants the "N" bomb on its territory. He said that Colombo's speech was marked by optimism. Pajetta stressed that a policy of peace did not mean only refusing the "N" bomb, but also promoting peace initiatives invarious parts of the globe, like Afghanistan, Angola and El Salvador.

Assembly Approval

[Excerpts] The government's foreign policy has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies. Gian Battista Fenu reports from Montecitoria:

The foreign policy line that our government must continue to follow is that of equilibrium and peace; an active line in favor of detente and dialogue between the military blocs which will raise the prospect of a reduction of nuclear weapons if possible to zero level, both on the NATO and on the Warsaw Pact side. This is the gist of the conclusions of the debate held yesterday and today at Montecitorio -- ratified by the five-party vote with all opposition parties being against -- which passed a motion and at the same time, approved the foreign minister's report.

The motion submitted by the majority received 244 votes in favor and 225 against, out of 469 voters.

Colombo, in his reply speech, reiterated his concept of a restoration of the balance of forces -- a balance which now leans to the advantage of the Warsaw Pact -- in order to open the way for serios negotiations on (?disarmament). He confirmed the Italian objection, in present conditions, to the installation on its soil of the neutron bomb, but he also stressed Italy's total loyalty to the Atlantic alliance and [words indistinct].

Finally, our diplomacy will exert itself in all international venues to ensure that the East-West dialogue produces positive results in the shortest possible time. The government's position, as we said before, was approved by all the majority parties.

We must also mention a statement made by the secretary of the Italian Communist Party [PCI] immediately after the vote in the Chamber of Deputies. There has been a certain convergence between the views of the Italian Socialist Party [PSI] and the PCI in matters of foreign policy, Berlinguer said, in particular in regard to the rejection of the neturon bomb and the joint Socialist-Communist support of the Franco-Mexican declaration on El Salvador. Berlinguer, however, considers the Socialist positions to be in contrast wih (?the support given) to Colombo in the final vote.

COLOMBO, FRG'S GENSCHER HOLD TALKS IN ROME

LD032222 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 3 Oct 81

SPADOLINI, COLOMBO MEET WITH NATO'S LUNS IN ROME

[Text] Rome, 3 Oct (ANSA) -- Secretary general of NATO, Joseph Luns, presently on a visit to Italy, was received by Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini at government headquarters here and successively by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, at the "Farnesina' ministry.

During the course of conversations between Luns and Spadolini on Friday, the two men exchanged opinions on the principal international themes. Particular attention was paid to problems concerning military equilibrium and disarmament, in the light of the upcoming re-opening of negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States.

LIBYA PROTESTS DEFENSE MINISTER'S REMARKS

[Text] Tripoli, 5 Oct (ANSA) -- Libyan news agency JANA announced in a press release here Sunday that the Libyan undersecretary of the People's Office for Foreign Affairs summoned the Italian ambassador to the Libyan Jamahiriyah in order to present a protest concerning recent declarations formulated by Italian defense minister, Lelio Lagorio. The press release denounced the declarations as "hostile" to Tripoli, and containing false accusations against the foreign policies of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah.

According to JANA, the Libyan undersecretary asked the Italian ambassador to clarify his government's position on the declarations and other pertinent statements. He also underlined to the Italian ambassador that these type of declarations do not serve the interests of collaboration relations between the two countries.

The press release also included a mention of the incident which occurred last week, in which an Italian Air Force fighter tailed a Libyan passenger plane, escorting it out of Italian air space. The agency note recalled that the same Libyan foreign office presented a protest note to the Italian ambassador at that time. JANA reiterated that the episode represented a violation of the existing international civil aviation laws, and that their foreign office has asked the Italian Government to submit an expalantion of its actions.

LIBERAL INTERNATIONAL HOLDS ANNUAL CONGRESS

[Ben van der Velden dispatch: "People's Party for Freedom and Democracy Scores Defense Success in Rome"]

[Text] Rome, 26 Sep -- At the annual congress of the Liberal International, the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] has been successful in its opposition to what are being called "misplaced neutralist noises." According to VVD first chamber member F. Korthals Altes, this neutralism can be found in the draft manifesto drawn up by representatives of liberal parties and movements. The definitive text of this manifesto, which is a declaration of principle for liberalism in the eighties, includes an amendment from the Netherlands liberals recognizing the importance of effective defenses for many countries.

According to Korthals Altes there is no question of a growing neutralism in the international liberal movement. "We Dutch have become more sensitive to this since the increase of neutralism in our country and we are now reacting to this. In the past we generally dismissed such matters in the international context by saying: "The Finns or the Swedes are at it again," he said yesterday. The draft text of the liberal manifesto condemns the arms race and states that a world in which peace is preserved through military measures is a world in danger. Nothing is said about the necessity of de ense. Elsewhere in the draft, arms spending is called "a scandal." The VVD representatives at the Liberal International have succeeded in replacing this with a text which states that the level of spending on arms is an enormous danger.

The VVC delegation also noted a tendency toward neutralism in the preparation of a warning directed at the Soviet Union not to intervene in Poland. The Finnish liberals attempted in vain to make this into a warning against intervention in Poland by any country, so that the Soviet Union would not be mentioned by name.

At the congress, which ended today, the VVD representatives also received a proposal by liberal international and EEC Commission President Gaston Thorn with enthusiasm. According to this proposal, the European countries would pool their aid to developing countries and entrust its allocation to the European commission, because the growing tendency toward tied aid is leading to ever-greater problems. "This is grist to our mill, for the Netherlands has always said that aid should not be tied," Korthals Altes said.

AVANTI REPORTS LAGORIO INTERVIEW IN GENTE

[Text] The Libyan "threat," the Egyptian request for an Italian contingent in Sinai, the pacifist campaign, the NATO "umbrella," and the Italian, French and German foreign and defense policies were the questions tackled by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio in an interview with the weekly GENTE. Lagorio recalled the "recurrent use [presumably of threats] in Libyan policy" and the fact that "Libya spends three times as much on armaments as we do." "The problem is therefore to ask what Italy should do when such a turbulent and unpredictable neighbor shows that it does not fear a profound destabilization of the area in which we are concerned."

The person responsible for defense policy, Lagorio added, "cannot evade his duty, which includes making defense provisions. He must do so without being alarmist but with the aim of guaranteeing the country as much security as possible." In practical terms, Lagorio is hinting at the construction of a radar network in the south "without the gaps from which it now suffers," accompanied by a gradual and limited "dilution" of our forces in the north, moving them toward the south and the islands. Then there is the plan for the "rapid intervention force." "There are no plans," the minister explained, "for forming any 'marines' regiments." However, it is necessary to improve the organization of some existing specialized divisions to increase to the maximum their mobility and intervention capability, even in civil aid operations. It is necessary to be "more vigilant," but the frontline tasks fall to Italian diplomacy.

As regards the Egyptian request, Lagorio thinks it is primarily necessary to "use diplomacy to attain a broader agreement. There would be no difficulties in the techno-military sphere. In any case, it would be a question of establishing a force in Sinai which would be little more than symbolic."

With regard to the pacifist campaign, Lagorio stated: "It is true that they have become more vociferous, and it even seems that a tiger has suddenly been put into the tank of the political debate. But the accusation of warmongering is ridiculous. Quite the reverse is true. The truth is that the idea that the Atlantic pact is acceptable is losing some of its supporters. Years ago, in the midst of detente and while the 'great majority' had been formed by the DC and PCI initially, some people argued that the Atlantic pact constituted an umbrella under whose protection the left, and essentially the PCI, could increase its legitimacy and jointly run the country's government. Later, the growing imbalance between East and West presented the Western countries with the problem of safeguarding peace with a policy of restoring the balance, giving back to NATO some of its lost deterrent capacity. At this point, some people on the left in Italy decided to come out from under the umbrella. These things provide food for thought."

SOCIALIST PARTY THREATENED WITH RESIGNATIONS

Elio Veltri, former mayor of the city of Pavia in Italy's Lombardia region, made the announcement today during a press conference. Besides his own resignation, he announced the withdrawal of nine other Socialist Party members including the economist Paolo Leon and the lower house MP Franco Bassanini. The only official resignation however has come from Veltri, even though both Leon and Bassanini have announced their intentions in interview with the press.

The main point of criticism for the ten Socialists is the recent government decision to place NATO "cruise" missiles near the small Sicilian town of Comiso. Another factor contributing to growing tensions in the party are the revelations concerning financial misdeeds in the form of illegal campaign contributions allegedly provided to the Socialist by financier Roberto Calvi who is presently under indictment for illegal exporting of currency. The "rebels" however are also protesting against the "American" management of their party by Secretary Bettino Craxi.

During the press conference today, Valtri said that "the party is being reduced to an electoral party in which the leader speaks directly to the masses, thereby excluding the presence of any internal dissent." Political observers here note that it is still too early however to speak about an actual schism. Even if all the resignations were to be confirmed, they say, the rank and file of the party must also be consulted, to see how many Socialists are ready to give in their party card.

CUNHAL DISCUSSES PCP TALKS ON BUDAPEST TV

LD042329 Budapest Domestic Television Service in Hungarian 1800 GMT 4 Oct 81

[Text] Alvaro Cunhal, secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party, is in Budapest for a few days. Earlier, on Monday, he chaired a session of the Portuguese Communist Party Central Committee at which the internal political situation and the shift to the right in the country's leadership were discussed. The communists demanded the resignation of the government and the holding of elections ahead of schedule. Gyorgy Bernat asked the communist party leader about this while he was in Budapest the day before yesterday.

[Begin recording] [Bernat] Comrade Cunhal, why should there be a need, in your view, for early elections in Portugal?

[Cunhal in Portuguese, with Hungarian translation superimposed] The internal political situation in Portugal today is characterized by four fundamental issues. I mention, first of all, that our government is made up of reactionary forces who have launched an offensive against the democratic system, are aggravating the economic position of the country, and are opposed to the constitution and the laws. They are striving to eliminate the nationalization measures and agrarian reform to reestablish the monopolies. They are attempting to cut down and abolish human rights and are discrediting national independence.

Then there is the second factor: This government has lost its legal right to govern and these days it does not even have sufficient forces in the assembly to allow it to govern. A democratic system cannot accept and agree to a situation in which prerevolutionary political forces are represented to such a great extent in the country's leading bodies.

The third statement is that the reactionary forces represented in the government and the assembly have lost their political support, their electors. Several signs point in that direction, for instance, the results of the elections held on 7 December, when they nominated General Soares Carneiro for the post of president but it became obvious that the majority of the electorate wanted to preserve the democratic order. This trend also was manifested in midterm elections.

As for the fourth factor, we have democratic basic principles and objectives. The framework is provided by the Constitution and democratic laws and it is the Constitution itself that gives us the opportunity to criticize the government and the assembly for their activities and to demand that elections be held ahead of schedule. This is why it may be expected that once early elections are held and the rightwing forces suffer a defeat, we will be able to settle the crisis and defend democracy.

[Bernat] How does the party appraise its present state and the tasks facing it?

[Cunhal] Our tasks are very complex. However, it is easy to define them. We are fighting for the unity of workers and for the unity of democratic forces to include both the socialists and the communists, even though the leader of the socialists is opposed to all kinds of relations and agreements with the communists. We regard it as our main task to defend and continue democracy in Portugal and to safeguard all its achievements to date, together with the Constitution and the democratic system. These are our main tasks and we are providing strong support for them. The bases for the forces of democracy are made up of the large masses of the people and of the well-organized workers. We workers, communists, the broad strata of the people and the supporters of democracy want to defend the Portugal of the April revolution.

[Bernat] Which political forces can the party regard as its supporters and potential allies?

[Cunhal] We are thinking, first and foremost, in terms of the masses. We expect the support of the groups, classes and strata of society which are opposed to the restoration of monopolies and large estates. In the political sphere, we expect the support of all strata and parties with democratic and patriotic sentiments. That also includes the socialist party and those who want to change the policies of the government.

[Bernat] What are the foreign political objectives of the party in the present tense international situation?

[Cunhal] We Portuguese communists hold that there are two fundamental factors in the struggle waged for peace by every people. One of these is international, namely, the struggle for a reduction in arms and the protest against the neutron bomb and against the new military plans of the United States. The other is made up of a series of tasks to be carried out on a national level. On the one hand, we want to have a say in the general foreign policy of the government. On the other hand, we want to take a concrete stand against the intention of the United States to use the territory of Portugal for the establishment of military bases. At the same time, it is also our task to lead the people of Portugal in accordance with a policy that is based on the friendship and cooperation of peoples. [end recording]

FAEROESE PLEASED WITH USSR FISHING AGREEMENT

[Text] After 2 days of talks in Moscow the Faeroes have reached their best-ever fisheries agreement with the Soviet Union, Faeroese chief executive Pauli Ellefsen said Saturday. The Faeroese will be allowed to catch 3,000 tons of cod in the Baltic, 11,000 tons of cod in the Barents Sea and 2,000 tons of capelin, also in the Barents Sea. In return the Russians will be allowed to fish 95,000 tons of blue whiting in the Faeroese fisheries zone in the North Atlantic. The agreement means a roughly 30-percent increase in the quotas. Even though the negotiations in Moscow dealt exclusively with fishing quotas, Ellefsen also declared his support for negotiations for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

SWEDEN

GENERAL DISCUSSES BALTIC MILITARY SITUATION

PM020937 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 27 Sep 81 Supplement p III

[Erik Liden report]

[Text] The Baltic, or the "sea of peace," as the Russians have christened it, has never before in peacetime contained so many naval vessels, aircraft and other war equipment as it does now. On the continent there are millions of soldiers and tens of thousands of tanks ready to defend peace. The Swedish armed forces follow developments closely in and around Poland to study the changes in the Warsaw Pact's exercises and the possible countermoves from NATO's side.

Recently the largest naval exercise in the Baltic since World War II ended in the southern Baltic with a landing in the immediate vicinity of Poland's eastern border. Around 100 ships led by the aircraft carrier Kiev demonstrated the Soviet navy's constantly increasing strength. At the same time a very large NATO exercise started to the west of us. Why is it so important to follow what hapens in and around the Baltic? The question was put to Southern Military Region Commander Lt Gen Sven-Olof Olson.

[Answer] It is our duty, as an unaligned state with a desire to be neutral in war, to watch our borders. It is also valuable for us to study military changes in the area around us, partly as a basis for our own readiness measures. We also learn a lot from observing tactical behavior. In southern Sweden we are particularly vulnerable when the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, together with their allies engage in sea and air exercises throughout the year in our vicinity.

The armed forces have many instruments for following developments. Everything from open sources which throw light on relative strengths to active surveillance in the form of radar stations, aircraft, ships and radio monitoring, and watchful members of the general public give valuable information to military chiefs, the Defense Ministry, the Foreign Ministry and in sensitive situations directly to the government. Much is routine, but observations are made every day which are important pieces in the larger puzzle. We generally say "no ideas without surveillance." The picture our surveillance Viggens and ships bring home are invaluable in building up our knowledge. Camera equipment today is so sophisticated that the clothing of an individual sailor on deck can be studied without the aircraft's having to go particularly close. We can also take photographs from pursuit aircraft that guard the borders. Every day the readiness pursuit flight, which consists of two Draken aircraft, sets off to identify and sometimes to repulse foreign military aircraft that appear on our borders. Border violations are usually unintentional, but sometimes provocations and attempts to probe our guard cannot be ruled out.

Another important area is radio monitoring, performing from fixed stations on land, at sea and in the air -- activities better known under the name of the Armed Forces Radio Institute. These activities were thrown into relief in 1968, when the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia became known in Sweden through eavesdropping on the radio traffic from the military buildup along the borders.

[Question] Why is the "sea of peace" so highly charged militarily?

[Answer] First because both sides attach great strategic importance to the area. I understand how people are upset by the massive combat forces close to us. At the same time I think it useful that as many people as possible become aware of the real facts as they are. For instance, it is important for us to inform our politicians of the methods being used in the exercises that are taking place. It is particularly interesting to observe the major landing exercises, which show that invasion by sea is by no means a closed chapter. Those who believe a military operation against our country is possible without using the sea are wrong. However, it is not a World War II model that will be used but considerably more sophisticated methods.

[Question] Are our resources sufficient to maintain adequate surveillance now that we are seeing intensive exercises only a few miles off the Swedish coast?

[Answer] Maintaining continuous readiness and carrying out surveillance along our borders requires great material and manpower resources and a great deal of money. Continuous surveillance also impinges on our longer-term readiness. The smaller our total resources are, the more difficult it is to maintain readiness 24 hours a day throughout the year. For this reason we are going to have to reduce our expectations somewhat. This is going to be a real headache for the members of the Riksdag when they come to deal with the 1982 defense bill. It is desirable for us to have sufficient military resources to make our surveillance better than it is today.

[Question] How do military leaders in southern Sweden see the people's attitude to the defense forces today?

[Answer] In contacts with conscripts and civilians I feel a greatly increased understanding of the need for good Swedish defenses. This is a reaction the politicians in all parties should bear in mind before they make any of the coming decisions.

[Question] What is helping peace most in Sweden today?

[Answer] In today's world I believe strong Swedish defenses are the best and most realistic contribution to enabling us to live in both peace and freedom. But that does not alter the fact that one can have a positive attitude to other measures to promote peace. When the people who go on peace marches and the like think they are the only ones supporting the cause of peace, then it is time for caution. If you really want peace you must stop distrusting one another's motives. In this respect we see today from a number of quarters which call themselves champions of peace what, to say the very least, looks like military activity. I myself am convinced that the voluntary efforts within our total defenses are assuming ever greater significance. It is impossible to mistake the positive trend.

He also pointed out that our military capacity in southern Sweden has shortcomings that must be corrected. In this he has the support of his chief of staff, Maj Gen Carl Bjoreman. They both say: "Today our air defenses are all too limited. Fortunately the F10 wing in Aengelholm will remain for the foreseeable future, but large reductions have already taken place. The air force's total numerical strength today is less than that of the squadron in southern Sweden 15 years ago. Our land-based air defenses also need to be improved.

"We must also be able to increase our combat readiness more swiftly, and we must have better armor defenses and greater mobility. The mobile units in the air, at sea and on land must be supported by units that defend bases and important centers on the ground. We must reach a good balance between mobile and fixed units. And we also need greater resources for submarine pursuit and minesweeping on our coasts. Our peacetime organization must be adapted to enable it to function directly on the outbreak of war. For this reason we have fought long to retain P2 in Hassleholm, which is both operationally and economically advantageous. We are glad the commander in chief has come to the same decision and hope the politicians will follow him."

General Olson does not believe for a moment that the role of manned aircraft will be taken over in the future by land-based missiles. "Even today's experiences give us daily reminders of the necessity of making the required efforts with manned aircraft -- for both surveillance and pursuit -- and ships. How would these missions be carried out by missiles? With our neutrality this more subtle capacity is even more important. I do not honestly think those who have put forward these diffuse thoughts know what they are talking about. Perhaps they have something else in their sights.

"On the other hand I believe in a suitable combination of weapons and weapons systems. There are many reasons for taking a positive view of the Swedish JAS aircraft. As a platform for missiles, cameras and sensors it could be a combination adapted to our defense needs, of the three types of activity, pursuit, attack and surveillance, which will be just as important in the future. In the same way I see the introduction of effective sea-launched missiles to our lightweight fleet as one of the most important tasks facing us. In the army the arrivals of the new TOW antitank missile mounted on a new carrier and of the "70" missile mounted on an antiaircraft carrier point to a balance of weapons and weapons systems."

Southern Military Region headquarters in Kristianstad devotes great attention to what is happening out in the Baltic and the surrounding area. There are daily surveys of the current situation. Since Christmas 30 to 35 divisions, chiefly Soviet, have been stationed more or less ready for combat around Poland's borders. This is more than 300,000 soldiers. The intense exercise activity in the area in the last 6 months has probably made a significant contribution to improving command and mission capacity, and NATO has shown considerable interest.

"For those of us who feel the reality of military and political events close to us every day, the need to maintain access to our own resources becomes striking," General Olson said. "Primarily it is important that we allocate as many of our resources as possible to our war organization. Those of us who are regional operations chiefs take a very positive view of the fact that the commander in chief in his most recent proposals has succeeded in limiting the reductions in the number of brigades, pursuit divisions and submarines, if only by a single unit here and there. This could turn out to be extremely important, and I really hope the plan will be economically viable.

"For us in Skaane the tank brigades are of course of particular importance, and material modernization is needed. It is important that we see defense costs as part of the national economy. This applies especially to situations of choice between Swedish and foreign manufactures. Here employment considerations, balance of trade, currency questions and so on must be added to the military and security policy considerations. It is the total costs -- even the indirect ones -- which must be charted. Economic frameworks that are too strict must not be allowed to be obstacles to positive, long-term solutions."

Olson was thinking partly about the JAS when he concluded his interview with SVENSKA DAGBLADET on the situation in the Baltic and considerations of the future defenses of southern Sweden, including aircraft and missile questions.

General Olson, who has been chief of one of Sweden's most strategically important areas for a year, does all he can to get to know his staff and the conscripts throughout the military region. Olson has had a rapid rise to general and will probably have further high command positions offered to him shortly. He is generally tipped to be the new air force chief on 1 October of next year when Dick Stenberg retires. Then it will only be 2 years until commander in chief Lennart Ljung retires in 1984, and Olson is one of his potential successors. With his strong will and his involvement in the civilian defense forces, he would not be a bad choice.

U.S. STUDY AIMED AT SPURRING WEST'S ARMS SPENDING

[Olof Santesson editorial: "The Soviet Union's Arms"]

[Excerpts] The U.S. Government has now published a document with the obvious intention of frightening the West into new military action programs to counter the Soviet Union's massive and growing arsenal. The booklet "Soviet Military Power" is a catalogue of how the Soviet superpower has increased its military capacity in field after field in the last 20 years.

Many observers of course will object to the material contained in "Soviet Military Power" and the dramatic way in which it is presented. The booklet contains virtually no comparisons with the armaments situation and the continual improvements in arms technology on the NATO side. There are few really new facts presented. The majority of the figures in "Soviet Military Power" can also be found in other surveys, for example, in "The Military Balance," the oft-quoted annual report from the Institute of Strategic Studies in London. The London researchers do indeed consider the West to be in an inferior position with regard to the East in almost all areas. But they assert that with relative strengths as they are, the outcome of a war between the blocs is all too uncertain for an attacker really to dare to count on victory in advance.

The reason for the U.S. publication of course is that Washington wants to make its allies put more into defense through increased pressure of public opinion. It is difficult to confirm the reports and guesses of the CIA and other intelligence organizations; one remembers the famous missile gap which never existed. But there is nothing to indicate that leading West European politicians and their experts would question the U.S. material, even in the councils of NATO. What annoys the United States is that once they are home in their own countries they have been unwilling to draw any conclusions about the need for rearmament.

"Soviet Military Power" does not contain any deeper analysis of the intentions behind the Soviet Union's rearmament. With its warnings of possible Soviet blackmail, it supplies a worrying fragment of a fateful question. At best the book could make a contribution to some sort of balance in a period when so much of the discussion concerns itself with worries about U.S. rearmament and so little attention is paid to the Soviet Union's. But it is difficult to believe that it will weld together the Western powers in ever-newer rearmament endeavors; rather, it provides new evidence of differences in the West's views of the Soviet Union.

This Soviet military threat is what the Americans always want to talk about. Others wish they would sometimes talk instead about peaceful possibilities for securing the future across bloc boundaries.

GROMYKO APOLOGIZES FOR NOT MEETING ROLANDHIS

[Text] Mr Troyanovskiy, the Soviet Union's permanent delegate to the United Nations, at his request today met with Mr Sierifis, acting Cypriot permanent delegate to the United Nations, to whom he conveyed a message from Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko for Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

In his message, Mr Gromyko expressed regrets that it was not possible this year to have a meeting with Mr Rolandhis in New York because of his very busy schedule. The Soviet foreign minister asked Mr Troyanovskiy to convey to Mr Rolandhis his warm greetings and to tell him that, under the circumstances, it was physically impossible to hold a meeting and that this was the only reason such a meeting was not held.

I SIMERINI Reaction

NC041012 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 4 Oct 81 p 3

[From the "Independent" column: "Gromyko's Behavior, the Visit to Moscow, the Explanation"]

[Text] Gromyko's Behavior

It appears that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko was too busy to receive his Cypriot counterpart, Rolandhis. He limited himself to sending his greetings through the permanent Soviet UN delegate and then departed for Moscow. There is no use concealing from the people of Cyprus that this behavior by Gromyko raises serious questions about the entire behavior of his country toward the Cyprus issue. The Cyprus Government has a duty to ask for explanations and then to inform the public on the matter. This is because so far it has presented the Soviet Union as the warmest supporter of our cause. If something has changed, then we ought to know about it.

The Visit to Moscow

Another thing we ought to know about is whether, at long last, the continually postponed visit of President Kiprianou to Moscow will ever take place. Nearly 3 years have passed since this visit was first mentioned, but it still has not taken place. The first time it was postponed because Soviet President Brezhnev was due to meet U.S. President Carter over SALT II. At that time we were told that President Kiprianou would be going to Moscow in the fall of 1979.

Suddenly, Astavin, the Soviet ambassador here, unilaterally postponed it without giving any satisfactory explanation. Later, on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the Soviet Revolution, Astavin said that the visit would soon take place. The government spokesman was more specific, informing the Cypriot people that their president would be visiting the Soviet capital early in 1980. Then 1980 passed and we were in the beginning of 1981. President Kiprianou went everywhere except Moscow. However, he never stopped hoping. He was once again informed that the Kremlin's invitation continued to stand. Once again there was mention of the fall and this time there was mention of October as the possible month for the visit. We have now entered into October and nothing definite has been arranged.

The Explanation

Naturally, there is a simple and logical explanation — no matter how unpleasant it may be for us -- of Gromyko's behavior and the continual postponement of the visit to Moscow. Turkey is the only NATO country bordering the Soviet Union. The Kremlin wants to have good relations with Ankara no matter what the Turkish regime may be.

Turkey, however, has set certain conditions for the development and maintenance of good relations with the Soviet Union. One of these is that it should receive equal treatment on the Cyprus issue. Moscow has accepted this condition and it is adjusting its own policy accordingly. It is for this reason that at the present delicate phase of our problem we must not expect any Soviet action that might strengthen the Greek Cypriot side at the expense of the Turkish Cypriot side. Kiprianou will go to Moscow only when developments on the Cyprus issue permit a parallel gesture from the Kremlin toward Turkey.

Kiprianou's Moscow Visit

[Text] Minister of Interior and Defense Mr Veniamin, in his capacity as acting foreign minister, deputising for Mr Rolandhis, currently in New York, yesterday met with Soviet Ambassador Mr S. Astavin in Nicosia. The statement gave no indication of the topic of the meeting. However, the government spokesman had earlier said that there is no indication about deferment of the visit of President Kiprianou to Moscow, tentatively scheduled for autumn.

After the failure to hold a meeting between Mr Gromyko and Mr Rolandhis in New York, there has been speculation that the proposed visit by President Kiprianou to Moscow might be called off, but when asked to comment the government spokesman in Nicosia said there was no such indication. On the contrary, he said, preparations for the visit are continuing.

The Soviet permanent representative to the UN, Mr Troyanovskiy, had earlier this week informed the Cypriot deputy permanent representative, Mr Sierifis, that Mr Gromyko regretted it had not been possible for him to have a meeting in New York with Mr Rolandhis because of a heavy schedule.

TO VIMA REPORTS KIPRIANOU-ROLANDHIS RIFT

NC040950 Nicosia TO VIMA in Greek 4 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] An unbridgeable rift has developed in relations between President Kiprianou and Foreign Minister N. Rolandhis which is expected to cause a severe government crisis. The Kiprianou-Rolandhis rift is the result of their different evaluations of the Waldheim initiative. Specifically, the president appears to be maintaining a reserved attitude and he is disappointed by the context of Waldheim's ideas, which he considers as partitionist, while the foreign minister is unprecedentedly pressuring the president to accept them.

Over and above this, however, Kiprianou has been informed that in New York Rolandhis is undertaking initiatives, without the president's authority, that tend to bind the Cyprus Government in advance of presidential decisions.

President Kiprianou is concerned over reaction in Cyprus against the Waldheim ideas, and has been warned by the chairman of PASOK and other Greek parties not to undertake any obligation prior to the Greek election. Kiprianou is also very indignant over the tactics and initiatives of his minister in New York.

According to certain reports, Kiprianou has pointed out to the foreign minister that he should not undertake initiatives that tend to bind the Greek side, but to await his own visit to New York before proceeding with any further actions.

Rolandhis, on the other hand, has complained to circles close to him that "Spiros has tied my hands" and that he has been turned into "a minister without authority."

It is expected that the crisis in relations between the president and the foreign minister will soon take on new serious dimensions and that it is quite likely to develop into a severe government crisis as well.

ROLANDHIS DISCUSSES EXPECTED WALDHEIM INITIATIVE

[Text] Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that if in the end UN Secretary General Waldheim makes an initiative on the Cyprus issue, it will deal with the essence of the matter and will cover all sides of the domestic aspect, including the territorial, constitutional and other issues.

In an interview with the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY, Rolandhis said the possible Waldheim initiative will not deviate from the mandate for good services with which he has been entrusted by the UN Security Council. The role of the UN secretary general, in accordance with the Security Council resolutions, Rolandhis added, continues to remain the role of good services and not of mediation. Consequently, Rolandhis added, it is not expected that a mediation plan which cannot be amended will be submitted. What is expected is a presentation of ideas and evaluations which the two sides could further elaborate during negotiations. Naturally, Rolandhis emphasized, the initiative must be undertaken only if this is considered desirable by both sides.

Answering a question, Rolandhis mentioned that if in the end such an initiative is to be undertaken, this, according to all indications, will take place toward the end of October or in early November. The minister said that for the Greek Cypriot side, the issue is in an advanced exploratory stage and that he, personally, has sufficient facts available after his intensive consultations and contacts in New York. These facts have already been presented to President of the Republic Kiprianou, who will draw the final conclusions during his coming meeting with Waldheim in New York.

COMMONWEALTH INTEREST IN CYPRUS TERMED 'TEPID'

[Text] On leaving for the Commonwealth conference in Melbourne at the head of an impressive 15-member entourage, President Kiprianou underlined that he attributed great importance to this conference. Perhaps he believed he would be able to rekindle Commonwealth interest in the Cyprus problem, particularly at this moment when it is in its most critical phase. This interest, which in two previous conferences was expressed in a lively way and took on a concrete form through the formation of a special committee to promote the Cyprus issue, was unfortunately allowed to slacken and to be extinguished through our own fault.

As it is known, the special Commonwealth committee on Cyprus was originally made up of ambassadors from a group of member states. Subsequently, the committee was placed at the foreign ministers level, a fact which Rolandhis had announced as our most important success at the Lusaka Conference. Since that time, however, this committee disappeared and nothing has been heard of it.

The conclusion that the Cyprus issue has been degraded in the scale of interest of the Commonwealth is proved by the fact that this time the Cyprus problem was not registered as a special and momentous issue on the conference's agenda in Melbourne. Rather, with a certain condescension, it was grouped in a mass of other international problems such as Namibia, Angola, the Middle East and others. In this way, the Cyprus problem was not discussed in depth and the references of the few representatives who spoke about it were shallow. Most of these references were directed at countering British Prime Minister Thatcher, who, in her own address, unfortunately referred to the Cyprus problem as one of the problems of "disputed territories." This is the first time that a representative of a Commonwealth country, and a guarantor of Cyprus independence and territorial integrity, describes the invasion and violation of Cypriot independence by the Turks as a simple matter of "disputed territories."

This fact alone gives rise to sad thoughts about the way in which those who are not without a role in the staging of the Cyprus tragedy now view it. Naturally, the expected expressions of sympathy and support as well as wishes on the anniversary of Cypriot independence were actually heard at the conference. In the end, however, the Cypriot delegation did not come away from the conference with anything more than a bouquet of hopes for the success of the intercommunal talks which Waldheim is trying to revive.

LISSARIDHIS GIVES VIEWS ON WALDHEIM IDEAS

[Text] Socialist EDEK Party Chairman Lissaridhis has issued a written statement in which he refers to initiatives to bind the course of the Cyprus issue which, as he puts it, aim at the acceptance of faits accomplis and the misleading of a number of refugees that they will return to their homes. In his statement, Mr Lissaridhis calls on the government to ask the UN secretary general to stop bringing forward ideas which, as he says, are imposed on him before he announces them. Lissaridhis also asks the government to turn toward a public debate at the United Nations and to give the people a detailed accounting. At the same time, Mr Lissaridhis calls on the Cypriot people to mobilize themselves in order to rule out any handling of the Cyprus issue which would lead to national destruction and asks the Greek people to offer their support.

CAGATAY REACTION TO KIPRIANOU POSITION

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has said that the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, was continuing to completely disregard the accepted realities which were necessary for the solution of the Cyprus problem. Mr Cagatay made a statement today on the address by Mr Kiprianou at the Commonwealth meeting in Australia. Mr Cagatay said that new horizons and hopes had been created in Cyprus and in circles interested in the solution of the Cyprus problem by the handling of the comprehensive Turkish Cypriot proposals. He recalled that these proposals had been described as comprehensive and acceptable by all the world, but Mr Kiprianou was still disregarding the (?accepted) realities of Cyprus. Mr Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot community believed that only the establishment of a bizonal, bicommunal, independent, nonaligned federal republic based on two equal administrations could prevent the repetition of its past sufferings. He said that while (?autonomy), justice and democracy was called for in Cyprus, and human rights were being mentioned, it was impossible to think of a type of administration where these rights [words indistinct] the Greek Cypriot community. Mr Cagatay stated that the self-sacrifice and determination shown by the Turkish Cypriot community had made possible the continuing independence of Cyprus.

Commenting on the presence of the Turkish peace force in Cyprus, Mr Cagatay said that Turkey used the rights granted to her under international treaties and intervened in the island and that the Turkish peace force would remain in the island until a just solution of the Cyprus problem was achieved. Mr Cagatay concluded by saying that not only the Turkish Cypriot community, which has always supported a solution of the Cyprus problem through intercommunal talks, but all the world expected the Greek Cypriot administration to respond to the Turkish Cypriot proposals in a conciliatory attitude, accepting the realities of the island, and to create a Cyprus which would afford a peaceful future to the coming generations.

PAPANDREOU HITS NEW DEMOCRACY IN KHANIA SPEECH

NC032059 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 3 Oct 81

[Text] PASOK Chairman Papandreou tonight addressed a gathering at Khania. Mr Papandreou referred to national issues faced by the country, the foreign policy and the New Democracy's responsibilities for the problems it abandons.

Mr Papandreou also referred to the well-known interview by NATO Secretary General Luns and to subsequent denials of it which, he said, constitute an excuse and artlessness. He then went on to criticize the New Democracy policy in the NATO issue, describing it as imprudent. He said: It left NATO in 1974 and returned in 1980 without anything having changed.

Mr Papandreou also denounced a section of the press for reporting false and slanderous information against PASOK and held the New Democracy responsible for this. [He said:] Thus, they reached the point of telling lies that PASOK allegedly is intending to levy taxes on the savings and homes of the citizens. These forged slogans and lies, however, will not influence anybody.

In conclusion, Mr Papandreou forecast that not only will a majority government emerge for PASOK from the 18 October election, but also an all-powerful government which will implement its program.

More on Speech

NC041748 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 4 Oct 81 pp 1, 2

[By special correspondent Stavros Psikharis]

[Excerpts] Khania, 3 Oct -- The PASOK government which will emerge from the 18 October elections will not merely be a majority government but an all-powerful one, Mr Andreas Papandreou stressed shortly before opening his speech at Khania from where he has already begun his triumphant tour of Crete. It is already obvious that Mr Papandreou's 3-day tour in Crete will be an unprecedented triumph.

It is impossible to give the full text of the speech, because this telephone dispatch is being given before the PASOK chairman concludes his Khania speech (to catch the printing deadline for the Sunday newspapers). However, the following points can be noted about Mr Papandreou's speech:

--One leg of the speech includes the national issues and foreign policy with the heaviest responsibilities of the New Democracy for the problems it leaves behind.

--The other leg consists of the economic issue where the New Democracy's policy in recent years has almost doubled the country's foreign debts and has forfeited and undermined Greece's future.

Mr Papandreou stressed: "This is the management and ability of New Democracy; increased debts and rash extravagance. They have undermined our economy."

More specifically, the points of Mr Papandreou's speech at Khania today are as follows:

--Concerning foreign policy: The PASOK chairman charges that the well-known interview by NATO Secretary General Luns -- in which he questioned Greece's national sovereignty over the eastern Aegean islands -- might have been denied by Luns himself, but this is an excuse for those who are naive. That well-known Mr Schaufele, who was to come to Athens some time ago as Washington's ambassador, had done about the same thing.

The New Democracy's policy on the NATO issue is inadmissibly contradictory. It left in 1974 and returned in 1980 without anything having changed. "Mr Rallis should tell us, at last, when the New Democracy made a mistake; when they left or when they returned." Mr Papandreou stressed, and described the New Democracy government's policy on the NATO issue as a monument of contradiction.

Mr Papandreou also stressed: New Democracy claims that Greece's participation in NATO's military wing is essential to secure the combat readiness of the armed forces. Were the armed forces combat ready in the summer of 1974 when we were within NATO's military wing?

Today, Mr Papandreou stressed, the country's armed forces are combat ready, and it should be noted that this preparedness has been ensured through economic sacrifices by the country exactly at a time when Greece was not participating in NATO's military wing.

Mr Papandreou further stressed that NATO does not give Greece a defensive cover, and asked the government if NATO also covers the country's northern and eastern borders. At the same time, Papandreou stressed, the return to NATO's military wing was realized within the framework of an agreement which had literally been dictated by Turkey. It is an agreement which will also harass the new government, because it has remained unsettled as to who has responsibility for the Aegean -- a responsibility which Athens had until 1974.

"This is a nationally unacceptable offer by the Rallis government to Turkey which has offended our country's armed forces," Papandreou stressed.

--On the national issue of Cyprus, Papandreou disclosed that there is a new U.S. plan which UN Secretary General Waldheim has undertaken to promote. This plan provides for a condominium -- it is a so-called solution which is nationally unacceptable.

Mr Papandreou said that it is not possible for such a plan to be accepted and stressed that there might be an attempt to secure an agreement on the plan before the elections.

At this point, the PASOK chairman said he has already notified Cypriot President Kiprianou not to accept any solution before the 18 October elections, and Mr Kiprianou replied that he will become informed about the plan but will not commit himself before the new Greek Government is formed.

--Concerning relations with Turkey: The PASOK chairman stressed in his speech that Greece desires peace and good-neighborly relations with Turkey but would not cede even an inch of Greek territory.

"Once the Turks understand this, and I believe they will understand it, there will be no problem in Greek-Turkish relations," Mr Papandreou stressed.

OZAL CITES FINANCIAL TALKS IN WASHINGTON

TA031616 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 3 Oct 81

[Text] Washington, 3 Oct (AA) -- Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, currently in Washington, held talks with IMF and World Bank officials during the annual joint meeting of this organization as well as with financial ministers of various countries and representatives of major banks. Ozal told a press conference today almost everybody was pointing out Turkey as a model for economic development. "Still," he went on to say, "I do not mean that Turkey has resolved all of her difficulties. I just want to express that Turkey is on the right way progressing towards good results."

There had been certain positive changes in the way Federal German Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer had been thinking, OECD Secretary General Emile von Lennep would soon be coming to Turkey for talks, and Ozal himself is going to pay an official visit to Saudi Arabia at the invitation of Saudi finance minister, Ozal noted, in brief.

Talks with IMF officials were of a "courtesy call nature" since Turkey had no problems with the fund, Ozal said, predicting a flurry of activity for the private sector in 1982. Referring to his talks with representatives of banks, Ozal said this time he noted far greater interest in Turkey compared to recent years.

Referring to talks with the World Bank, Ozal said in the new year the credits Turkey would receive from the bank would include 125 million dollars for export promotion projects. Ozal returns home Tuesday.

TURKEY TO PROSECUTE PARIS CONSULATE ATTACKERS

NC021012 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 28 Sep 81 p 8

[Reha Muhtar report from Ankara]

[Text] Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes has stated that the Armenian terrorists who occupied the Turkish Consulate General in Paris will be tried in Turkey in their absence on grounds that "they have attempted to separate a section of the territory under the sovereignty of the state."

In a statement to MILLIYET, Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes said that it is clear from their own words that the Armenian terrorists' aim is to divide Turkey. Mentes added: "Even though these terrorists are not citizens of the Turkish Republic, it is possible under section 125 of the Turkish penal code to institute legal proceedings against them. It will be necessary to cooperate with the French Government in obtaining statements from the Armenian terrorists when investigations begin in the next few days. International agreements stipulate that the two countries should cooperate in these matters. We expect France to show understanding."

Section 125 of the Turkish penal code says: "Any person who commits a crime with the intention of transferring the whole or part of the state territory to the sovereignty of another country or for the purpose of curtailing the independence of the state or of undermining its unity or of separating part of the territory under the state administration will be liable to death punishment."

TCP REPRESENTATIVE ADDRESSES REGIONAL CONFERENCE

[Summary of statement made by Turkish Communist Party representative at the conference of communist and worker parties of the eastern Mediterranean, Near East, Middle East and Red Sea regions -- read by announcer]

[Text] Dear listeners, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] representative, who began his statement by referring to the confusing developments in the international situation and the aggressive and adventurist policy of imperialism, said that securing peace and preventing a nuclear war are the most urgent problems facing humanity. The representative continued: The deployment of new U.S. missiles in West Europe, the U.S. decision to produce the neutron bomb, the bloody attacks launched by Israel against the Lebanese and the Palestinian people, U.S. provocations against the Libyan people, the U.S. increasing its bases in our region and plans to deploy U.S. rapid deployment forces in the region are all parts of the same aggressive strategy.

The TCP representative also drew attention to the political and military cooperation between the Beijing hegemonists and imperialism. He stressed the importance of the unity of the most extensive peace and anti-imperialist forces. He later explained the TCP stand on a solution to the Near and Middle East problem. He also referred to the peace proposal submitted by Secretary General Comrade Leonid Brezhnev to the 26th CPSU Congress. He said that the Soviet proposals directed toward the Mediterranean, the Near and Middle East and the Gulf are in the interests of all peoples in the region.

Continuing his statement by explaining the military dictatorship conditions in Turkey, the representative explained the junta activities within the past year. He said that the generals who came to power with the goal of eradicating terror later increased terror on forces who were opposed to terror. He told about their increasing oppression of the democratic organizations of the masses and the political and union organizations of the working class. He exposed the attack and torture directed against the TCP, the severe oppression of the Kurdish people. The representative said: The TCP has been struggling against the national and social pressure on the Kurdish people for over 60 years. The TCP recognizes the right of the Kurdish people to determine their future and is in favor of the political autonomy of the Kurdish people in Turkey. He noted that imperialism, taking advantage of the oppression of the Kurdish people, employed this problem as a tool against progressive forces in our country and our region. He added that our party believes in taking up this problem in accordance with the conditions in each country and taking into consideration the national and international duties of the working class in each country.

The representative said that the meeting of the TCP Plenum under conditions of extreme terror is the revolutionary response of the working class to the enemy. He later dwelled upon the TCP Plenum and especially on the importance of establishing a single front composed of all antifascist, anti-imperialist, antimonopolist and antichauvinist forces. He said that the joint action of the progressive forces held in Federal Germany on the first anniversary of the military takeover is a significant step in this direction.

Pointing out that various realistic points in the foreign policy of the military administration, such as reducing the level of the relations with Israel and the reluctance in connection with the deployment of the rapid deployment forces, did not agree with the NATO and Pentagon policy. The representative said that the most reactionary pro-American and collaborationist forces have recently increased their activities. He pointed out the dangers posed by the expansionist dreams of certain sectors of the collaborationist monopolist bourgeoisie that cannot cope with the economic crisis. He stressed that the problem concerning the unity of all national democratic forces in Turkey gained singular importance in the face of such dangers.

Stating that the conference document was approved by the TCP, the representative said that this document will further strengthen the unity of the anti-imperialist struggle of the brotherly parties in the region. He added that the conference is a step forward in the anti-imperialist struggle and solidarity and a step toward the forum of all world communist and workers parties. He stressed the urgency of such a forum. He later thanked the brotherly parties in the region, who are waging their struggle under the strenuous conditions, for their solidarity with the TCP and the progressive forces in our country.

LABOR OFFICIAL CRITICAL OF ARBITRATION WORK

[Text] Izmir, 4 Oct (AA) -- Price increases should be prevented by the administration, Turk-Is (Turkish Labour Confederation) Organizational Secretary Orhan Ercelik told a union meeting today. All sections including workers had to make sacrifices during this time of crisis but these sacrificies should be distributed in an equitable way, he added. At a time when the minimum monthly wage 10,000 Turkish liras before taxes, prices of essential goods were still going up. He also called for the expansion and reorganization of the secretariat of the high arbitration council which has been renewing due collective contracts or elaborating new ones for workers in private and public sectors since the 12 September military takeover.

TRUCKS CARRY OIL PRODUCTS FROM MERSIN TO IRAQ

TA041622 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1555 GMT 4 Oct 81

PAHR, GROMYKO DISCUSS KAMPUCHEA, AFGHANISTAN

[Text] (APA) -- Foreign Minister Pahr talked for just under an hour in New York with his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko, on 30 September. Both ministers described bilateral relations as good and capable of being expanded. Their talks on international politics were focused primarily on the Madrid CSCE follow-up conference. Pahr stressed Austria's hope that a substantial result could be achieved there in the near future. He declared that Europe's neutrals and nonaligned states are still ready to make constructive contributions to the negotiations as long as they see the possibility of an agreement by the two big powers.

The Soviet foreign minister paid tribute to the activities of the neutrals and nonaligned countries and declared that the Soviet Union is at present waiting for the reaction of the NATO countries to its proposals regarding the European disarmament conference and a definition of the range of application for confidence- building measures. Pahr also broached the problems of Afghanistan and Kampuchea and appealed to the Soviet Union to use its influence to achieve positive solutions at the conference table. Gromyko and Pahr agreed on further official visits at the foreign ministers level and discussed the date of President Kirchschlaeger's visit to the Soviet Union.

NEW ARMY COMMANDER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

[Special report by "HWS" on Vienna press conference by new army commander Ernest Bernadiner on 1 October]

[Excerpt] As far as the equipment of the Austrian army with missiles, demanded by [his predecessor] Spanocchi, Bernadiner has quite different aims: "The government now in office did not make the Austrian State Treaty. What is involved here is antitank and antiaircraft missiles. No one is thinking of Austrian intercontinental missiles, and it is that type of missile which is actually meant by the treaty ban. But as long as the treaty is interpreted differently, these things are simply unattainable for us. But they are not vital for us, nor decisive for our survival, because developments will soon make hollow-core missiles superfluous. The trend is going to artillery weapons again. And those, gentlemen, we certainly do have..."He adds that even a delay in the purchase of interceptors will not in any way impair the further building up of the militia army.

REVALUATION OF MARK, OTHER CURRENCIES AGREED

[Excerpts] Brussels, 4 Oct (DPA) -- The mark is being revalued by 5.5 percent within the European monetary system. According to conference delegates, this is envisaged in a compromise reached this evening at the EEC monetary conference in Brussels. In addition, the French franc and Italian lira are both being devalued by 3 percent and the Dutch guilder is being revalued by 5.5 percent. Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer confirmed here this evening that the German currency is being revalued by 5.5 percent.

GOVERNMENT WILL GO ALONG WITH DM REVALUATION

[Text] Following the latest decisions of the European Community finance ministers [to revalue the German mark and the Netherlands guilder], Austria will continue its hard currency policy: the schilling will continue to fluctuate on the German mark. The exact extent of the actual revaluation is not yet known but an upward revaluation of the schilling vis-a-vis the U.S. dollar of about 5 percent is expected. This will produce short term effects such as a reduction of import prices, but later on, may affect Austria's competitive ability. Trade Minister Staribacher says he does not expect the change in the monetary conversion rate to affect Austria's tourist trade.

PEOPLES PARTY WINS MAJORITY IN STYRIAN ELECTIONS

[Summary] In yesterday's Styrian Landtag elections, the Austrian Peoples Party [OeVP] obtained 50.8 percent of the valid votes and retained its 30 Landtag seats, while the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOe] won an additional seat from the Austrian Freedom Party [FPOe]. The seat distribution in the new Styrian Landtag will be: OeVP 30 (no change), SPOe 24 (plus 1) and FPOe 2 (minus 1). The OeVP obtained 376,623 votes or 50.5 percent (as against 384,905 votes or 52 percent in the 1978 Landtag elections): the SPOe 317,616 votes or 42.84 percent (1978: 298,560 votes, 40.3 percent); the FPOe 37,270 votes or 5.03 percent (1978: 47,562 votes, 6.4 percent); and the Austrian Communist Party (KPOe] 9,897 votes or 1.33 percent (1978: 9,876 votes, 1.3 percent).

LEADERS TALK WITH HUNGARIAN DEFENSE MINISTER

[Text] Austria -- Hungarian Defense Ministery Army Gen Lajos Czinege, who is paying an official visit to Austria, today will attend a combat exercise of a territorial reserve battalion in Glashuetten, Styria. Lajos Czinege has been in Austria since yesterday. He has had talks with President Kirchschlaeger and Defense Minister Roesch, among others. His visit will end tomorrow.

BRIEFS

ROAD PROJECTS WITH HUNGARY -- Austrian and Hungarian experts recently held talks in Vienna on joint road projects. They reached agreement on a timetable for the construction of the Budapest-Vienna superhighway, of additional lanes for Austrian tourists going to Hungary at several border checkpoints and of a new border checkpoint, Deutschkreutz-Kophaza, which could be completed in 2-3 years. The Budapest-Gyor section of the superhighway is to be completed by 1985. On the Austrian side, work to extend the A-4 East Autobahn to Nickelsdorf is to begin in 1985. FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIALS MEET WITH ROSTOW

[Text] Bonn, 5 Oct (DPA) -- Eugene Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, today began political talks in Bonn on the situation in East-West arms control negotiations. Rostow was welcomed at the Foreign Ministry by his German counterpart, Ambassador Extraordinary Friedrich Ruth. A first round of talks was also attended by leading Defense Ministry representatives. Rostow has already visited a series of West European countries to explain American viewpoints.

REACTIONS TO REAGAN STRATEGIC ARMS PROGRAM

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

DW051137 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 5 Oct 81 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "Reagan Contradicts Himself"]

[Text] President Reagan's plan to modernize the U.S. nuclear force has by no means become an all-encompassing decision which will exert influence on developments even into the next century and about which people have been talking for a long time. Improvization would be too contemptuous a term to use, yet the temporary nature of the program is quite evident. It also caused immediate vehement debates.

During the election campaign, Reagan promised to do something about the vulnerability of the U.S. arsenal of strategic missiles in silos. Now he has even canceled the bold, and above all costly, project of his predecessor Carter, which envisaged a system of several potential launching pads for each missile. Reagan's solution is at odds with the arguments he advanced yesterday: The temporary abandonment of mobility will not reduce the vulnerability of the missiles even if their number is increased. Unless Reagan's decision has been influenced exclusively by financial and domestic considerations, the hitherto essential argument of the vulnerability of the existing system is obviously no longer valid. Another explanation would be that there is simply no agreement at this time on the most expedient way to set up an entirely new missiles system. In that case, Reagan has chosen the smallest denominator to which the controversial views of his experts can be reduced: He wishes to gain time until the second half of the decade.

The question remains whether things will be any clearer by then. It is also highly uncertain whether Reagan will still be President after 1984 when the Russian superiority allegedly will be particularly critical. If not, his successor may well make different decisions again. Right now, Reagan has to deal with the opposition in his own camp. His arms problems are not out of the way, they are just beginning.

Cologne Report

[Excerpts from correspondent Hauptmann dispatch]

[Text] Washington -- What Reagan disclosed as the core of his arms program is a dubious recipe for the enhancement of military striking capability. The MX missiles are simply to be placed into reconditioned launching silos of the obsolete Titan missiles and thus rendered immobile until a satisfactory deployment method -- ground or air -- has been found. The 100 manned B-1 bombers carry the same blemish of being stopgap measure. In a few years, they will be just as obsolete as the B-52's.

It is doubtful that Reagan's wonder weapons will improve the Soviet receptiveness to disarmament talks as the White House expects. Definite, however, is that this ambitious program worth $180 billion will tie the arms program to a course which will determine strategic plans and thus also political maneuverability for a decade.

If deterrence is to be credible, it must certainly be strong enough. Yet a demonstration of military might has never been a substitute for a reasonable foreign policy. Without political commonsense, strength may well degenerate into an arms race.

FRANKFURTHER RUNDSCHAU CRITICIZES U.S. ECONOMICS

DW021325 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 2 Oct 81 p 3

[Rolf Dietrich Schwartz dispatch: "The Right of the Stronger"]

[Text] Washington -- What is good for the United States is good for the world. This is the simple formula to which the course and the results of this year's world currency and development conference, which will be concluded today, can be reduced. For the first time, the "new rightists" -- foremost President Reagan -- who have been ruling in Washington since the beginning of the year, had an opportunity to expound their convictions on the best way toward the economic and social recuperation of all countries to the world gathering, with the exception of the hardcore of the East bloc. They exploited this chance, using no uncertain terms.

With respect to the currency and development course adopted in Washington this week by nearly all countries, the world's weal or woe depends decisively on the continuing economic power of the United States. Granted, this is not a new finding. Yet unlike former times, the United States in the future will stop regarding specific sensitivities of this or that country, be it in the South, East or West.

If Reagan is convinced by his advisers that control of inflation can be achieved only by means of interest rates constantly kept extremely high, this onesidedness entails consequences for each government in the world. If Reagan is convinced that development funds are more effective if they are granted in keeping with the interests of the donor countries rather than with those of the needy recipients, this change in direction also constitutes a signal for the world.

The initial dehydration symptoms of the great international development institutions of the World Bank group as a consequence of U.S. refusal policy already show the destination on this course. Any poorer country indulging in the future in the luxury of a policy which is not in full harmony with that of Washington will have to pay dearly for this extravagance. In any event, other industrial countries cannot fill up the payment gap which is torn open by the U.S. change in course toward bilateral aid restricted to outspokenly friendly partner countries exclusively.

But even the states which are better off will no longer be able to rely economically on rich America for the time being as they did in the past. Gone are the times when the rulers in the White House were above consulting the world economist in the Bonn chancellor's office in private and free of charge. It is instead the German head of government who must pay tuition in installments: in the spring, Helmut Schmidt announced that his then forthcoming enlightenment lecture would soon convince the old beginner of the need for decreasing interest rates in the interest of the partner countries; during the world economic summit in Ottawa 3 months later, he already indulged in anti-Americanism which he otherwise abhors, justifying the Bonn austerity compulsions with the reckless U.S. interest rate policy; and now, over the first weekend this autumn, his Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer unconditionally surrenders on this question and does not indicate any alternative to Reagan's strong medicine.

The slogan "confidence in one's own strength" issued by the federal finance minister in Washington constitutes the consequence of the feeling of vocation on the part of the zealous Reagan advisers. But it definitely is also somewhat a fear of being contaminated by the American disease of Reaganism.

Just the same, not much has been left of the original U.S. conviction that the great experiment of monetarism will be successful. The finance capital on Wall Street, of all groups, refuses to be believingly obedient and reacts with panic sales to the diffuse prompting by self-appointed experts. Granted, this did not yet make any impression on the protagonists of the 4-day currency theater play in Washington, at which they appeared in accordance with a strictly arranged ritual. But once Reagan's failure begins to take shape, visibly by the charts of unemployment, economic slump and foreign deficits, the slogan "confidence in one's own strength" may well turn quite rapidly into the opposite course of action: "Everyone for himself!"

To tell the truth, indications of that can already be found now in Matthoefer's conclusions from Washington. In any event, what else does the slimming down cure ordered at home (in meager times!) for the sake of strengthening the confidence in the home currency mean than the realization of the absence of international cooperation, let alone the oft-conjured solidarity of the pa t? Since nobody knows where we will go from here economically, everybody in Washington this time showed reserve toward the "right of the stronger" which Reagan loudly claimed for himself. To an increasing extent, successes of conferences must no longer be measured by the progress achieved but by what retrogression they at least prevent.

GDR CRITIC LAUNCHES ALL-GERMAN PEACE INITIATIVE

DW051207 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 5 Oct 81 p 14

[Text] GDR regime critic Robert Havemann has launched an all-German peace initiative. During his visit to Bonn in November, Leonid Brezhnev, USSR chief of state and party, is to be called on in an open letter to negotiate, among other things, on the withdrawal of "all occupation troops from both parts of Germany" and to renounce the enhancement of "already existing medium-range weapons against West Europe." The initial 150 signatories to the letter include 27 parsons, skilled workers and housewives from the GDR. The appeal has so far also been signed by SPD Bundestag Deputies Hajo Hoffmann, Ottmar Schreiner, Gert Weisskirchen and Klaus-Dieter Kuehbacher.

PAPERS ASSESS REAGAN STRATEGIC ARMS DECISION

LE MONDE Editorial

[Editorial: "SALT Forgotten?"]

[Text] Nobody will be surprised by the scope of the strategic arms program announced by Reagan. On the one hand, his decision is fully in keeping with his voluntarist philosophy and his determination to oppose Soviet power "on all fronts." And on the other hand, he had to make decisions on the new generation of weapons capable of ensuring deterrence beyond this century.

In this sense, the series of measures expected for several months seemed likely to be as important as the big decisions made by Eisenhower and Kennedy more than 20 years ago, which have guided the arms race until today.

Reagan's options may seem more modest, although the appearance of thousands of cruise missiles in the U.S. arsenal, which had already been decided but has now been confirmed, introduces an element which is probably as important as the construction of more than 1,000 intercontinental missiles in the early 1960's.

The new MX surface missile program has been reduced from 200 to 100 units and the White House has probably made a wise decision in abandoning, at least for the next few years, the "ballet" which these missiles were to stage among thousands of shelters, as Carter had envisaged. The problem of the invulnerability of the silos did not seem to have been permanently settled by that solution.

But there is also reason to wonder why, in these circumstances, a new missile is necessary when the navy is already developing a similar missile with the Trident and when the surface component of the strategic arsenals seems increasingly threatened. Similarly, it seems costly to manufacture 100 B-1 bombers when another more sophisticated, if not "invisible," machine is taking shape for the future and when the proliferation of cruise missiles makes it possible to rejuvenate the B-52 of the 1950's.

Carter probably was wrong to abandon the B-1 program in 1977 when it was already very advanced, without securing anything in return. But Reagan is going to the opposite extreme by launching these new programs without even reestablishing with Moscow the threads of the SALT negotiations which have been broken since the reduction of the agreement signed by Brezhnev and Carter in 1979. These negotiations are to be resumed within 6 months, according to Washington, but, should the Kremlin prove really prepared to stop the race then, it would probably be too late to set aside these new systems.

The conference to review the ABM treaty, scheduled for next year, is already posing a threat to the main result achieved in the arms control sphere. In opting for the deployment of the MX missiles in fixed silos for the time being, Reagan is paving the way for these missiles to be protected by ABM weapons and hence is strengthening the military's strong temptation to annul the 1972 treaty.

Since Washington now also seems to want to demand that monitoring of any overall agreement should include-on-the-spot inspections -- a measure which Moscow has always rejected -- it is difficult to see how the two powers can curb this new phase in their race.

LE FIGARO Editorial

PM050945 Paris LE FIGARO in French 3-4 Oct 81 p 1

[Serge Maffert editorial: "Three Targets"]

[Text] President Reagan's decision to renovate the U.S. strategic arsenal at great expense has three target: the Soviet Union, West Europe and American opinion. The Pentagon's plans have been known for years but their implementation constantly was postponed, even by the Republican administration, for financial (excessive cost) and technical reasons (rapid development of arms systems). The announcement of the plan yesterday is directly linked to the current international and domestic situation.

Haig just met with his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko for the first time. Soviet-American negotiations are going to start in Geneva on 30 November. Reagan is gradually introducing a policy toward Moscow whose long term objectives cannot yet be clearly seen. But it is known that he intends above all to "restore the strategic balance between East and West," which the Americans think now places them at a disadvantage.

Of course, the Soviets maintain that if there is any imbalance, it is in U.S. favor and that, in any case, the deployment of new weapons in West Europe would constitute an intolerable threat. Nobody has the slightest illusion about the chances of the Geneva talks being successful and all the indications are that there will, instead, be a revival of the arms race.

As far as West Europe is concerned, Reagan wanted to give a dazzling demonstration of the U.S. determination to shoulder its responsibilities. In this way, he hopes to strengthen American credibility among the European allies and among the Near East countries which he would like to enroll in the operation to "contain" the Soviet Union. It is also a way of condemning the "unrealistic" attitude of those Europeans, like the FRG, the Netherlands or others, who might be tempted by "pacifism" or "neutralism" and, above all, of their governments who are only showing very moderate enthusiasm about the deployment of new Eurostrategic missiles on their territory.

But the fact that the MX missiles will not, after all, be deployed on mobile vehicles in Nevada will partly destroy the desired psychological effect -- in a way, it is a half measure.

Finally, there is reason to think that Reagan wanted to make the announcement of this military effort coincide more or less with the discussion on a budget which provides for a considerable reduction in social spending and aid to the in military investments, could be presented as an instrument in economic recovery. In any case, this is the constant theory propounded by the military-industrial complex which is both a myth and a reality of American life.

LE MONDE EXAMINES U.S. STUDY ON SOVIET STRENGTH

[Jacques Isnard and Michel Tatu article: "Difficult Comparisons"]

[Text] "Soviet Military Power," the study published by the U.S. Defense Department at the end of September, is not free of the constraints and ambiguities of the genre. It is devoted exclusively to Soviet military potential and only in very few cases gives the corresponding figures for the U.S. Armed Forces. The latter therefore have been added wherever possible in our own report on this page.

At times, it is also less accurate than the studies published annually by two major Western centers which are well-known to experts: the London International Institute for Strategic Studies and the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute [SIPRI]. However, its numerous diagrams and illustrations are addressed to a wider audience. Washington's map with the superimposed area of the Nizhniy-Tagil tank factory in the Urals, the biggest in the world, covering 827,000 square meters, is indicative of the gigantic size of the Soviet war effort. Moreover, this was illustrated 1 month ago by the American DIA -- a revelation for the first time of Soviet military production figures and not just the composition of the arsenals.

Of course, this "declassification" effort is intended to support Reagan's rearmament program by demonstrating the reality of the enemy threat. The opponents of this policy both in the United States and in the USSR or Europe are all the more inclined to denounce this "maneuver" since the United States, in fact, has a monopoly of information on the subject. The Kremlin leaders have said nothing about it since Khrushchev's unprecedented effort in 1960 -- although the former leader merely indicated the total numbers of his armed forces. All world experts must, therefore, work on the American figures, even when they dispute their interpretation as the SIPRI researchers do. The idea of creating a network of observation satellites under UN control, put forward by the previous French Government, is in any event still relevant.

Does this mean that the American estimates are deliberately falsified? The Pentagon frequently errs by omission but it is more difficult for it to cheat over big numbers of big disproportions: some CIA dissident would quickly denounce any excessively crude exaggeration.

Practical experience nonetheless makes it possible to reduce the controversies to more modest proportions: The Vienna negotiations on the reduction of forces are in fact stumbling over the assessment of troop numbers in the Eastern camp, but the contention in fact relates to only 150,000 men out of a total of more than 1 million; in 1972 as in 1979 the Soviet and American teams at the SALT negotiations had little difficulty in agreeing on the numbers of strategic launchers in each camp -- the numbers were essentially those which the United States had made known for several years. Finally, although the missile gap at the beginning of the 1960's (the belief that the Soviets were mass-producing ICBMS, when in fact they were making do with medium-range missiles) was fully exploited by the Pentagon to launch its program [apparent line drop] to forget that this "gap" was primarily a satellite gap, corresponding to the Americans' virtually total ignorance about the Soviet network after the interruption of U2 spyplane flights and before the appearance of the first satellites.

The Pentagon study does admit major areas in which the Soviet partner is inferior: Moscow's lag in microelectronics, computers and jet engines is assessed as between 2 and 7 years, but it was between 10 and 12 years in the mid-1960's. The Soviets are making up ground by modifying their equipment more rapidly and, above all, they are enjoying a "transfusion" of Western technology and equipment thanks to trade programs, toward which the authors do not conceal their hostility. The authors sometimes tend to "lay it on thick" either in the apocalyptic tone used to describe the extremely wide KGB apparatus or in oversimplifying, when they contrast the 900,000 scientists and engineers engaged in research and development in the USSR with their 600,000 U.S. colleagues (it is doubtful that the level is comparable) or when they express the view that Russian advisers abroad "are capable of cultivating pro-Soviet sentiments" among the populations.

Moreover, the estimate of the economic cost of the Soviet war effort is even more random; like many others, the authors put the proportion of Soviet GNP devoted to that effort at between 12 and 14 percent. But they forget that, until 1976, the CIA went no further than a 6 to 8 percent bracket.

The Pentagon study, which is more quantitative than qualitative, sins especially by its lack of judgments or evaluations of the Soviet Armed Forces' operational state and tactical capabilities in the field. It is true that such an analysis is probably more difficult. The easy solution is to list the figures like a commercial catalog which forgets to inform clients of the quality of the products, their durability, the way they operate, the real level of stocks immediately available and the time requires for delivery.

In this sphere, qualitative assessment is important if not decisive. We have seen armies (like the German Army in 1940 or the Israeli Army in 1967 and 1973) launch conflicts with a very marked numerical inferiority compared with the combined forces of their adversaries and we have seen the American Army -- one of the most powerful in the world -- suffer a serious military defeat in 1980 in the Iranian desert, after earlier being forced to abadon the fight in Vietnam.

Several factors combine to establish the operational (or nonoperational) character of an army, like forces' training standards, general staff knowledge and knowhow, logistical support supplying the frontlines, the effect of surprise, fighting units' levels of skill or even the organization of communications. These are all indications which intelligence services analyze and evaluations offices relish and which are measured during maneuvers, simulation tests, general staff exercises and real scale operations performed by foreign armies.

In the present case, the numerous accidents at sea involving Soviet warships, the Red Army's logistical problems in its interventions in Czechoslovakia (1968) and Afghanistan (1979), the mechanical failures noted in Soviet equipment supplied to or exhibited in foreign countries and the technical shortcomings noted during the launching of some experimental vehicles give grounds for weighing the Pentagon's estimates and modifying its conclusions.

LIBYAN AIRSPACE VIOLATION CONTROVERSY CONTINUES

[Text] Rome, 5 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian ambassador to Tripoli today was instructed to inform Libyan authorities that the fact that an Italian Air Force fighter had escorted a Libyan passenger plane out of Italian airspace last week was part of normal identification procedure and in no way discriminatory in nature.

Foreign Ministry circles here today said statements made in a Libyan note with regard to members of the Italian Government were unacceptable, arbitrary and liable only to prejudice the continuity and intensity of relations between the two countries.

Foreign Ministry Responds

[Text] Further Libyan accusations against Italy which were addressed to the Italian ambassador in Tripoli have been released by the official news agency JANA. The Italian Foreign Ministry states in a communique that our diplomatic representative in Tripoli, having been summoned by the under secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison, reaffirmed that the Italian Government wants to maintain and, if possible, improve relations with Libya, as affirmed in the Chamber of Deputies in October by Foreign Minister Colombo. The Italian ambassador also told the Libyan authorities that the interception of a Libyan civilian plane in Italian airspace occurred within the framework of normal aircraft identification procedures and bears no discriminatory character.

Italian Foreign Ministry circles then pointed out that the inferences about and comments on members of the Italian Government contained in the communique issued yesterday by the Libyan agency are unacceptable, arbitrary and apt to be prejudicial to the continuity and quality of the relations between the two countries.

In its communique, Al-Qadhdhafi's government accused Defense Minister Lagorio of interfering in Libya's internal affairs, in particular because he said in an interview that Libya had already extended de facto its territorial waters to 200 miles. This was denied by the Tripoli government, which charged, among other things, that some Italian circles connected with the United States are maneuvering in this manner to induce Italian public opinion to accept the deployment of U.S. missiles and the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in Italian territory.

COLOMBO, FRG FOREIGN MINISTER HOLD TALKS

[Text] Rome, 5 Oct (ANSA) -- Italy and West Germany have come up with a plan for promoting the European Ten's unification process in foreign policy, security and cultural matters, but they failed in talks here over the weekend to agree on ways of expanding economic cooperation between European Economic Community (EEC) member states.

Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his West German counterpart Hans-Dietrich Genscher came to a "very close understanding" on a draft "European Act" for unification during three hours of talks in Rome Saturday.

The key to the Rome government's idea, which was endorsed by Genscher, was to strive at reviving the EEC Ten's political cooperation process and enhance the group's foreign policy role at a time when international relations were going through a critical stage.

The Italian-West German plan calls for making the Ten's political cooperation procedures more mandatory and expanding consultations to encompass the entire realm of foreign policy issues and include security and cultural issues as well.

But the two sides differed in their approaches to economic unification, with Bonn apparently fearful of getting involved in a process which would entail heavier expenses to support the weaker economies of the community.

In a communique, the two European diplomatic chiefs voiced their satisfaction that the United States and the Soviet Union have arranged to start negotiations on their medium-range nuclear missile arsenals in Europe on November 30.

They addressed an appeal to the Soviet Union to pull back SS-20 missiles and thereby pave the way for both sides "to give up their medium-range missiles according to the wishes of European peoples".

CRAXI OUTLINES PSI FOREIGN, DOMESTIC POLICY

PM301443 Rome AVANTI in Italian 27-28 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Report on PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi 26 September speech in Bologna: "For Peace and for Human and People's Rights"]

[Excerpts] In his speech in Bologna, Craxi stressed the Socialist International's role in Europe and the world. "It is a major vehicle for peace and progress in a world made unstable by growing conflicts, violence and authoritarianism, and economic crisis and inequalities. It unites different experiences and traditions, and it expresses a single message of civilization based on the principles of the peoples' solidarity, equality and independence."

Craxi added that it is within "The framework of the Socialist International's responsibilities that the PSI develops in policy and initiative." "Whoever imagined that my visit to Bologna would be an occasion for polemics will be disappointed. We are not interested in polemics, prejudiced splits and futile wrangling. I came to Bologna to elucidate and confirm our foreign and domestic policy proposals and to remind those who seem to have forgotten it that the Socialist Party is and remains a steadfast defender of peace, of national interests and security, and of peoples' rights and human rights throughout the world, wherever they are violated, threatened or damaged."

Restoring Climate of Trust

"Mankind has at its disposal the means for a frightening collective suicide which no rational being can want and which only governments seized by madness could unleash," Craxi said. "Hence stems the need, in a situation of crisis and high tension in international relations, to close the way to an unrestrained resumption of the arms race, to restore an atmosphere of communicativeness and trust and to implement a policy of balance, arms control and disarmament, within the context of new negotiations. Peace and security can never be considered valid in a single direction only, and military balances must be mutually verified and recognized; the opening of a new and more positive chapter in international relations is in everyone's interest. We welcome as something extremely positive the announcement that a start is being made in the direction of opening negotiations."

Craxi said that negotiations "must cover as broad a spectrum as possible"; "must have Europe in a position of involvement and shared responsibility coordinated with its major ally"; and "must proceed speedily so as to produce results by 1983." "Speaking in Paris the other day, the new president of the French Republic, Francois Mitterrand, said: 'France does not confuse pacifism as a principle with peace as a result. It is the latter which concerns me.

"'The debate over arms versus negotiations must be organized around this fundamental notion; only the balance of forces preserves peace. This is why I have alerted the public to the Soviets' excessive arms in Europe.' And Mitterrand speaks on behalf of a government that in France includes the Communists. We announced this same stance 2 years ago in Italy and we have adapted to it our line of conduct, which has been consistent and clear."

Craxi said: "With the deployment of the Soviet SS-20's targeted on Western Europe, a disruption of the balance in Europe has occurred and it must be rectified.

"This must take place through negotiations that will totally eliminate the opposing new missile systems already deployed or being produced -- this would be by far the best thing -- or, if this is impossible, will reduce them to the lowest possible level.

"It is futile to rage against the construction of an infrastructure in Italy which in any case could not become operational until 1984 and whose nuclear utilization depends and will depend on the result of the negotiations."

"We have worked and are still working for peace, which must be anchored to clear and secure foundations, to verified, accepted and recognized balances.

"Nobody must have or prepare for a position of hegemony and military superiority. Excessive imbalances are the real source of fears, uncertainties, tensions and temptations. We defend peace and the interests of national security. Our policy has a purely defensive, strictly defensive and exclusively defensive aim.

"If I used the expression used by Mitterrand, who said that the exclusive aim is the 'sacrosanct defense of our territory,' I would doubtless encounter further polemics. But that is exactly what I believe. We would like to see the country more united on the major issues of peace and national defense. To split the Italians on this subject of fundamental shared interest is the worst thing that one could to for the nation and democracy.

"We urge dialogue and in-depth study of the issues. We do not take for granted a future exacerbation of internal relations and of increased splits. The useful area for a broad convergence could be established in the following fundamental points:

"1 -- The development of solidarity among the 14 Atlantic alliance countries in confirmation of its strictly defensive purpose;

"2 -- Italy's full backing for the policy of negotiation designed to establish nuclear balances at the lowest possible level and to implement a policy of controlling production and deployment of weapons with a view to their substantial reduction and nonproliferation;

"3 -- The request for an active role for Europe and greater responsibility on the world scene and for consultations with the United States over political decisions binding on the Atlantic alliance;

"4 -- A framework of Italian initiatives aimed at supporting political solutions and international mediations in the major points of crisis, to reduce tensions and prevent the exacerbation of current conflicts;

"5 -- A specific Italian initiative in the Mediterranean region for a task of elucidation that is becoming increasingly necessary, to extend the margins of security, cooperation and stability of the region, which are so heavily threatened;

"6 -- A strong Italian thrust to accelerate the coordination and unity processes in the political activity of Europe and its institutions;

"7 -- A confirmation of Italy's interest, not only in developing the closest friendly relations with neighboring and allied states, but also in keeping open the possibilities of dialogue and cooperation between Western and Eastern Europe and between Italy and Eastern Europe, thus facilitating the peace processes with new opportunities for cooperation and the development of healthy economic and trading relations;

"8 -- An international presence for Italy, through which it shows itself to be always steadfast in the principles of the defense of the peoples' rights to independence, sovereignty and self-determination and in defense of human rights;

"9 -- A growing effort to enable Italy to acquire a prominent and responsible role in the major North-South dialogue, constantly making its own contribution to international cooperatin with Third World countries and to the struggle against poverty, famine, death and underdevelopment throughout the world;

"10 -- The confirmation of Italy's refusal to deploy the new neutron bomb produced by the United States on its territory."

Next Craxi discussed the "hotspots" which constitute factors of crisis and danger.

"Every one of them, whether an open or a latent conflict, could become a local war of regional or international proportions and very difficult to control."

Afghanistan -- The Soviet occupation must cease. There must be a solution that fits into framework of stability in the region.

Middle East -- Stasis is the most dangerous condition. There must be a new peace and negotiation initiative, which cannot exclude the PLO.

Poland -- With regard to Poland, Craxi said that Solidarity expresses feelings and aspirations with strong roots among the Polish people. The response to them must not be the use of force or the threat of it. Polish society, which is in a serious state of crisis, needs thorough changes. These in turn demand a certain gradualness and therefore a high sense of responsibility on the part of everyone who does not intend to remain entrenched in splittist or wholly conservative stances. The continuous threatening Soviet interference in Polish internal affairs serves only to inflame people and to create increasingly difficult and dangerous conditions. Poland is part of the USSR's system of alliances but it is still a great and glorious independent nation, not an outlying province of the USSR.

El Salvador -- The massacre in El Salvador must cease. There must be a political solution, an internal pacification and a new democratic government. The U.S. administration would be making a major error if it encouraged the tendencies that have already emerged to reintroduce the "big stick" policy to Latin America.

Next Craxi discussed the problems of the African Continent, of the Horn of Africa, southern Africa and the Western Sahara and the problems of the Far East, of the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea and relations with the PRC.

"We feel that there are causes for great concern regarding the domestic situation. One must not fear the social and political clashes and conflicts that are part of a free democracy. What we fear is their exacerbation with no way out.

"What we fear are conflicts accompanied by muddled ideas, confused outlooks and the absence of rules of constructive conduct.

"When Berlinguer announces and promises an exacerbation of the political struggle, he is once again doing no good to the labor world or the nation.

"Nevertheless, difficulties and problems do exist, and on the social plane there is a danger of justified causes for conflict and tension accumulating."

Craxi said that there are two central topics on which every effort must be concentrated: "Unemployment and housing."

"We do not expect miracles from the government, which is working under very difficult conditions. We expect it to deal with the emergencies of this difficult phase in Italian life which have been taking shape in recent weeks: a policy of greater stringency and control in the public spending field, authoritative action and pressure to stem the factors that are feeding the various sources of inflation, but also a rigorous initiative to raise barriers against the new growth in unemployment; a response to the most acute social needs, starting with housing requirements."

Discussing relations with the DC, Craxi said: "It is still a difficult form of cooperation, but it is a necessary democratic cooperation if we want to guarantee a line of governability. We are following attentively what is going on within the party with the relative majority. Every suggestion of rengeneration prompts interest and encourages a more open dialectic among the political forces. Inasmuch as we have taken on government commitments and reached agreements, we will maintain a consistent stance of loyalty and friendly cooperation. We have already done a great deal in this direction during this legislative period and, as far as possible, we will continue to do so. It would be a mistake for the DC to link the aim of its regeneration to the idea of regaining hegemonic positions, failing to understand the long-term significance of the different balances that have come about in the nation's democratic life!"

Party Regeneration

"We have begun a process of regeneration that has not been without contraditions and that has not yet fulfilled its entire potential." Craxi added that "another source of concern" is the state of the institutions, their decline, their malfunctioning; the absence of reforms, both those that have been planned for a long time and new ones that could be examined and put forward.

Craxi said: "It is a positive factor that the idea of a 'grand reform,' that is, a combination of interventions to deal with the various aspects of the state and institutional crisis, has received committed attention from a relative majority of the party, and prompted an initiative from it. I hope that the PCI -- which, at least via its secretary general, has already issued a resounding vote of rejection even before scrupulously examining the entire issue, which is, however, the subject of analyses and study by communists too -- will decide to acknowledge the importance and benefit to democratic life of specific initiatives aimed at dealing with the subject of institutional crisis and reform."

Craxi stressed the new role and greater responsibility of the secular parties and the Socialist and Social Democratic Parties in the country's new political situation, adding that "the life of a five-party coalition is difficult, by definition. Prudence and moderation are always needed. The PSI avoids the game of petty polemics and hopes that everyone will decide to do the same so as to avert the threats of a degeneration into chaos."

FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH GROMYKO IN NEW YORK

[Text] The present state of bilateral relations was the main topic of the meeting between Portuguese Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira and his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko at the USSR mission at the United Nations. In particular, the two leaders concluded that "despite political divergences," trade and cultural relations will be intensified.

Following the meeting, the Portuguese foreign minister said that matters concerning southern Africa were discussed, adding that there was also a "specific convergence" between the Portuguese and Soviet stances concerning the attacks which Angola has suffered.

Asserting that Gromyko "presented at length" the Soviet positions on the main issues of the present international situation, Goncalves Pereira said that he himself pointed out the "different world views" which guide Portuguese and Soviet society, Portugal's condemnation of the Afghan invasion and the anxiety prompted by the Polish situation.

One positive point stressed by Goncalves Pereira was the talks this week between Haig and Gromyko and he confirmed the great significance Portugal attaches to the initiation of negotiations between the two superpowers on nuclear weapons in Europe.

The Portuguese minister said that the issue of Spain's NATO membership has not yet been broached.

Furthermore, no mention was made of the Madrid conference during the conversations between the foreign minister and his Soviet counterpart.

During the meeting, "no reference was made to how the proceedings of the Madrid CSCE have gone or might end," an official of the Portuguese delegation said.

In his statement, the Portuguese foreign minister also took the opportunity to emphasize the significance of the fact that Gromyko had asked for the meeting, the first one in 6 years between members of the two governments. Goncalves Pereira mentioned that under the Maria Lurdes Pintasilgo government, then Foreign Minister Freitas Cruz requested a meeting with Gromyko which was not granted and that, therefore, Melo Antunes was the last Portuguese leader to meet with high-ranking officials of the Soviet Union when he visited Moscow under the sixth provisional government.

Goncalves Pereira said that in his Washington talks with U.S. Vice President George Bush on Saturday the issue of U.S. economic aid to Portugal was discussed and that he intends to broach with Haig matters concerning the U.S. requests to use military bases in Portugal. With regard to these requests, he forecast that formal negotiations with the Reagan administration would start soon.

Andre Goncalves Pereira also took advantage of his visit to New York to meet with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and with Jose Ramos Horta, representative of the Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor [FRETILIN], who described the contact as "very positive." A major contribution to this result was made by Goncalves Pereira's report "On the Efforts That Portugal Has Been Making Together With Kurt Waldheim With a View To Finding a Solution to the East Timor Problem," Ramos Horta said. The FRETILIN leader also said that he did not believe in the existence of any secret Portuguese Government plan designed to recognize the "fait accompli" of the Indonesian occupation of East Timor.

The meeting between Goncalves Pereira and Alexander Haig was canceled because the U.S. secretary of state had to return suddenly to Washington to discuss matters connected with the AWACS sale to Saudi Arabia.

CALVO-SOTELO COUNTERS RESIGNATION RUMOR

LD051810 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 5 Oct 81

[Text] At a press conference early this afternoon in La Coruna, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo countered a rumor about his possible resignation. He said: I have not thought of resigning and I will continue to be prime minister for the rest of the legislature because I have no intention of calling elections before 1983.

Speaking of the trial stemming from the events of 23 February, he expressed the hope that, once the trial is over, there will be no further need to speak of coups in Spain. I am sure that the trial will be received differently from what is believed in certain sectors, he said.

On the question of joining NATO, he said that the debate in parliament will give an affirmative reply. Spanish entry will provide an excellent occasion to make headway in the dispute over Gibraltar, which is a problem which must be resolved within the framework of NATO.

Discusses Gibraltar Talks

[Text] Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo wants to announce in London in mid-December the official initiation of negotiations between Spain and Britain over Gibraltar and the end of Spanish restrictions on the Rock, according to a report today in the Madrid daily EL PAIS.

The report continues that Calvo-Sotelo expects in return, and as a demonstration of the United Kingdom's political will to negotiate, that Margaret Thatcher's government will not grant British nationality to the Gibraltarians in the House of Commons but, on the contrary, will support the House Foreign Relations Committee report on Gibraltar drawn up this summer, which supports many Spanish demands on the decolonization of the Rock.

MILITARY APPOINTMENT -- The cabinet yesterday appointed Lieutenant General Caruana captain general of the Fifth Military Region. His appointment appears today in the official STATE GAZETTE. The government has thus removed all doubt as to the position of the man who was military governor of Valencia on the night of 23-24 February. The government is convinced that Luis Caruana y Gomez de Barrera was not involved in any way with the coup attempt. [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 3 Oct 81 LD]

JORGENSEN, HUNGARY'S LAZAR DISCUSS DETENTE

[Ritzaus bureau report: "Not a Word About Poland"]

[Text] Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen and Hungarian Prime Minister Gyorgy Lazar, who began a 2-day official visit to Denmark on Tuesday [29 September], held official talks on Tuesday at the prime minister's office, chiefly on international questions.

The two government heads discussed East-West relations and the detente endeavors now underway, but neither touched on the question of the Polish crisis. Nor was Poland mentioned in the official speeches at the dinner given by Anker Jorgensen at Langelinie Pavillonen.

Prior to his talks with Anker Jorgensen, the Hungarian prime minister visited the Folketing. The program of the prime minister's visit does not include a press conference, as is usually the case when a state or government head visits Denmark, but this is due, it has been said, to considerations of time.

In his dinner speech, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said that Denmark, as one of the smaller nations in the Western alliance, always attaches great importance to contacts with the smaller nations in the Warsaw Pact. The prime minister expressed the hope that the imminent negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on the Eurostrategic nuclear weapons will be characterized by a "constructive and flexible approach." "The Danish Government has clearly indicated its stance on nuclear questions. We are hoping for a reduction of these weapons in a broader European context," he said.

In his speech, the Hungarian prime minister also touched on peaceful coexistence. "Today, when everything we achieved in the years of detente is in jeopardy, it is of the utmost importance to stress that there is no alternative to peaceful coexistence for the nations with different social systems," he said.

On Wednesday, the final day of the visit, the Hungarian prime minister will have an audience with Queen Margrethe and will visit N. Foss Electric in Hillerod and Kronborg in Helsingor.

KEKKONEN IMPROVES 'SOMEWHAT'; LEAVE EXTENDED

LD061022 Helsinki International Service in English 0930 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] It was announced in Helsinki today that Finnish President Urho Kekkonen's leave of absence from his duties has been extended by 1 month. The president, who has been on sick leave since 11 September, will continue to be relieved of his duties until 10 November. His current leave was scheduled to end on the 10th of this month. The government also met today and decided that Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto will continue to fulfill the president's duties until 10 November.

Yesterday, the president's office released a bulletin saying that the president's health has improved somewhat in recent days, but that he is still suffering from fatigue and a weakened condition, as well as losses of memory caused by cerebrovascular circulation problems.

FOREIGN MINISTRY AIDE SUMMARIZES MOSCOW TALKS

[FINSKA NOTISBYRAN report: "No Advance Conditions About Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Excerpts] The Soviet Union does not want to make any advance conditions for possible future negotiations on the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

Finnish Foreign Ministry Undersecretary Matti Tuovinen said that this was the answer he was given in the talks held in the last few days in Moscow with Deputy Foreign Minister Igor Zemskov.

Tuovinen was visiting Moscow as part of the regular contacts between the top officials of the Finnish and Soviet Foreign Ministries.

He explained that the Soviet Union is now waiting for the Nordic countries' reply to the proposal for negotiations on the zone issue.

According to Tuovinen, the Soviet Union is prepared to discuss measures on its own territory in connection with the negotiations about the zone but does not want to commit itself to advance conditions or undertakings.

According to Tuovinen, Zemskov declared that, with this attitude, the Soviet Union wants to give the Nordic countries room for negotiation.

The question goes back to an interview which President Leonid Brezhnev granted to the Finnish Party newspaper SUOMEN SOSIALDEMOKRAATTI earlier this summer. In the interview, Brezhnev said that the Soviet Union is prepared to discuss certain measures on Soviet territory during negotiations on the zone.

During his talks with the Soviet deputy foreign minister, Tuovinen also discussed relations between the two superpowers. According to Tuovinen, the Soviet Union now takes a more hopeful view of the situation than before following the talks in New York between Andrey Gromyko and Alexander Haig.

"There is a faint hope that conditions could be improved," said Tuovinen in summarizing the Soviet position.

NORWAY

PAPER WELCOMES U.S. REPORT ON SOVIET STRENGTH

PM051217 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 1 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Brezhnev's Striking Power"]

[Text] Western defense experts who followed the Soviet Union's persistent rearmament in the 1970's returned again and again to a central question: Why is a country with such serious economic problems investing so much in such an expansion of its strength; hasn't it considered using its striking power in some way or other? The question does not necessarily assume that the Soviet Union intends to go to war. They fear instead that this military strength will have an affect by its mere presence, in the same way as it did during, for example, the communist takeover in Czechoslovakia in 1948.

For this reason, it is natural for the West European nations to keep a special eye on the Soviet Union's military measures on land, sea and in the air, especially with regard to missiles.

For the Soviet Army was effective in Czechslovakia in 1948 even though it was never used, quite simply because Czechoslovakia is one of the Soviet Union's neighbors. It had no effect in Portugal in the 1970's, in a situation where it seemed that the country's ambitious communist leaders had forgotten to look at the map of Europe before they set about conquering their country and outmaneuvering politicians from other parties in the well-known way.

Dissimulation and diversionary, even misleading statements are approved in military-strategic contexts. It must be said in praise of the top Soviet officers that they have been unusually candid and honest in their reasons for the military expansion over which they have presided. Navy Commander in Chief Adm Sergey Gorshov has said that, now that his service shows itself on the world's oceans, the Soviet Union has acquired "new and greater opportunities to use the navy in peacetime to support its national interests." In 1974, former Defense Minister Andrey Grechko said that "The Soviet Armed Forces' historical function is not limited to defending our fatherland and other socialist states."

This week, the U.S. Defense Department published a book which gives a detailed account of the expansion of Soviet forces. It is as easy as it is frightening and literally gives more ammunition to Grechko's statement about the absence of limitations on Soviet forces than to Moscow's daily assurances of its desire for peace. Fifty thousand tanks are at the disposal of the Soviet generals, as are an estimated 7,000 nuclear warheads, almost 1,500 ICMBs as well as almost 1,000 nuclear missiles based on submarines, and forces totaling almost 5 million men. It is praiseworthy that the United States is gradually relaxing the outdated rules for classifying such information and similar details as top secret. They are no secret to the Kremlin and it in no way damages the interests of the West for the man in the street on both sides of the Iron Curtain to learn a little about the state of affairs in the military section of the steel industry. One could even imagine that those expressing their fears of the weapons whose deployment is planned as part of NATO's modernization program could transfer some of their reservations to the sophisticated weapons already in place in the western parts of the Soviet Union and whose numbers are continually growing. One could even hope that these people would contemplate the question: What is the intention behind this and what is the best countermove?

AKEL REPORTEDLY TO DEMAND ROLANDHIS DISMISSAL

NC051042 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 5 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] According to reliable information, AKEL will demand Foreign Minister Rolandhis' dismissal from the government and threaten President Kiprianou that it will withdraw its confidence in him in the event he does not accept this demand. According to the same information, AKEL considers Mr Rolandhis to be pro-Western and the creator of such states of affairs that tend to shake Cyprus' good relations with the Soviet Union and other East bloc countries.

As we have reported in the past, AKEL has previously raised the question of Rolandhis' dismissal from the government but in the end, for still unknown reasons, the AKEL demand was withdrawn. Now, however, after the fuss caused by the Soviet foreign minister's refusal to meet with Mr Rolandhis in New York, AKEL is said to be resolute in reviving its demand with the claim that Mr Rolandhis' insistence to meet with Mr Gromyko has given the public the impression that the Soviet Union does not support the Cypriot Government's views on the Cyprus issue.

Kiprianou-Rolandhis Rift Denied

[Excerpt] The government spokesman yesterday said that it is premature to talk about the content of the UN secretary general's "ideas" which, he added, will be formulated and finalized after the meetings between President Kiprianou and the UN secretary general scheduled for 12 and 13 October.

Asked about press reports on the content of Waldheim's "ideas," the spokesman said that "we cannot comment on conjecture." He added, however, that the chairmen of AKEL, DISI [Democratic Rally] and EDEK as well as the leadership of DIKO [Democratic Party] have been informed of Waldheim's intentions and thoughts.

Answering a question, the government spokesman said that "Mr Y. Ioannidhis, the interlocutor, is being kept briefed on what is happening in New York." He added that "it is not known if Mr Ioannidhis will attend the talks between President Kiprianou and the UN secretary general." Indirectly, however, the spokesman denied this likelihood, saying that "it is contacts and not talks that are being held in New York."

In answer to other questions, the government spokesman said that: He does not know of any ultimatum from U.S. Secretary of State Haig which, according to press reports, has set 14 October as the deadline for our answer to Waldheim's "new ideas." He also denied a press report about a "Kiprianou-Rolandhis rift," saying that "they are in touch every day."

ARCHBISHOP VOICES CONCERN OVER 'WALDHEIM IDEAS'

NC051621 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 5 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] In a sermon which he delivered yesterday, Archbishop Khrisostomos said that "we are gravely concerned about what is going on at this moment in New York." With this statement the archbishop implicated Mr Waldheim's "new ideas," which are in the making, along with Foreign Minister Rolandhis' contacts for the promotion of a Cyprus solution.

Addressing a large congregation at the church of Saint Barnabas and Saint Makarios in Dhasouplois quarter, Nicosia, his beatitude referred to the recent Cyprus developments and said it is unacceptable to hold a dialogue with the other side on the basis of the Turkish proposals which do not lead anywhere but to the partitioning of Cyprus.

The archbishop added: "We have an ancient saying that 'to sin twice is not characteristic of a wise man.' Yet we keep on committing sins continuously."

In his sermon, the archbishop also maintained that it is imperative to revise the goals and procedures of the struggle which the Greek Cypriots are waging for freedom and survival. At the same time, he called upon the Greek Cypriots to be ready to react to any Cyprus solution which would not secure the return of all the refugees to their houses and their property. In addition, Archbishop Khrisostomos argued that the way in which the inter-Cypriot dialogue is being held today, on the basis of the Turkish proposals, would only lead to a nationally unacceptable solution. He added that our goal is not to achieve any one solution. He said: Our goal must be to find a solution that would secure the inalienable rights of all the Cypriots, otherwise it would be better not to have a solution.

GOBBI EXPRESSES HOPE FOR INTERCOMMUNAL SOLUTION

[Text] Gobbi, special representative of the UN secretary general in Cyprus, speaking in an interview with the New York newspaper PROINI, [as broadcast] mentioned that for the first time since 1974 there are now certain possibilities for a solution of the Cyprus issue. He said that both communities are demonstrating good will and a desire for a settlement of the problem. Gobbi added that both communities must harmonize their interests and that they must attempt to satisfy each other's needs.

Answering a question on the proposals of the two sides, Gobbi said that all forms of proposals are positive, because they demonstrate that negotiations are continuing. He also mentioned that the United Nations has resolved to draw its own evaluations and estimations on the promotion of a solution. In reference to the time of submission of the UN secretary general's ideas, Gobbi said this question will be resolved during the Kiprianou-Waldheim meeting next week.

NORTH'S DURDURAN, DELEGATION RETURN FROM NEW YORK

[Text] Lefkosa, [Nicosia], 4 Oct (AA) -- The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus parliamentary delegation returned home Saturday night from New York and London. Spokesman for the group, Communal Liberation Party President Alpay Durduran told reporters they had a series of highly useful talks during the U.N. General Assembly sessions and attended in New York the Parliamentary Union meeting. They also had the chance to deal more extensively with representatives of non-aligned countries, he said. Such visits should be made more often since they enabled the Turkish Cypriot side to make its stance better known in the international community, he added.

Contacts Discussed

[Text] Members of the delegation from the legislative assembly who have returned from a visit to New York today held a joint news conference speaking about their contacts at the United Nations. The leader of the Communal Liberation Party, Mr Durduran, told the news conference that this was the first time a Turkish parliamentary delegation representing all political parties had visited the United Nations headquarters in New York, explaining to the representatives of many countries the problems of the Turkish Cypriot community. He said he believed that the delegations' contacts in New York would be beneficial for the Turkish Cypriot community.

The leader of the Republican Turkish Party, Mr Ozgur, said his impression was that all the countries wanted the solution of the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks. He stressed the need for closer contacts with the nonaligned countries so that these countries could understand better the problems of the Turkish Cypriot community.

The general secretary of the Democratic People's Party, Mr Kotak, stressed the importance of these contacts and said that they should be made frequently. Mr Dervis Eroglu of the National Unity Party described the New York contacts as very successful and said they should be maintained.

PAPAIOANNOU MIDEAST COMMUNIST CONFERENCE SPEECH

[Speech by AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou at the conference of communist and workers parties of the east Mediterranean and the Middle East; date and place not given -- passages in all caps denote boldface as published]

[Text] First of all, I would like to stress my party's satisfaction over the holding of this conference which is of vital importance to the peoples of our countries and to world peace. We are meeting at a time when the international climate is fraught with tension created by the policy of imperialism and particularly U.S. imperialism, which attempts to destroy the climate of international detente created by the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference and the SALT II agreement.

It would not be an exaggeration if we stated that the incendiary and warlike policy pursued by the U.S. administration today can only be compared to Hitler's prewar policy. All of us know where that policy led.

The decision to install cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe as well as the recent decision of the Reagan administration to manufacture the neutron bomb create the most serious situation since the end of World War II. These extremely incendiary and inhumane actions by the leaders of the U.S. Pentagon, when added to the many other decisions, such as: the concentration of naval forces at the mouth of the Persian Gulf; the nonratification of the SALT II agreement; the military intervention in El Salvador to bolster the fascist-military clique which is attempting to suppress this country's heroic people; the support for the racist-fascist regime in South Africa in the conduct of its raids against Namibia and the People's Republic of Angola; the assistance to Israel, enabling it to bomb the Palestinians and Lebanon; and the recent shooting down of two Libyan aircraft over Libyan territorial waters -- all add up to a chain of U.S. provocations which aim at a return to the cold war and the climaxing of the armaments race.

The agressive elements in the U.S. Pentagon, led by Reagan and Haig, are particularly provocative in the areas of the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East. This can be seen from their position toward the Palestinians and, in general, the Arab peoples, the Libyan Republic, Iran, Syria, Lebanon and the Persian Gulf states, as well as their position on Cyprus, and Greece and Turkey and, in general, their position on the democratic, progressive movements of these countries.

PROVOCATIVE MANEUVERS

They deliberately staged provocative maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra and deliberately violated the territorial waters of the Libyan Republic by shooting down two aircraft of this country. This aggressive provocation was not enough for them. They also stated they would repeat their maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra in 1982. What else is this behavior -- what else is it if not provocative, incendiary and aggressive?

They are also holding provocative maneuvers in the waters between Kriti and Cyprus, very close to Cyprus territorial waters. They are even coordinating these maneuvers with other NATO countries and using the British bases in Cyprus.

We, therefore, ask the questions: What do U.S. naval ships and aircraft want in the eastern Mediterranean, thousands of miles from U.S. shores? What else do they want except to provoke and to blackmail?

If the Libyan leaders, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, as he warned, replies to new U.S. provocations and aggression in the way he said he would, then what will be the consequences?

The presence of the U.S. Sixth Fleet and, in addition, its use in provocative maneuvers and incendiary warlike activities, create tremendous dangers to peace not only in the Mediterranean but internationally. This is the reason why the peoples of the Mediterranean demand the withdrawal of the U.S. Sixth Fleet and the conversion of this sea into a sea of peace and cooperation between nations.

At the same time the Americans plan to install RDF units in different countries. What do such forces want in other countries, thousands of miles away from the United States? What else do they want except to provoke?

There can be no shadow of a doubt that the creation and prolongation of the Middle East problem is the result of the pro-Zionist policy of the United States and certain other NATO countries which encourages and directs Zionist arrogance and aggression. The Israeli leadership would not behave the way it does toward the Palestinians, Lebanon and, in general, toward the progressive Arab regimes if it did not have vast aid in U.S. funds and arms, if it did not have the U.S. diplomatic support and if, instead of the Camp David conference -- which As-Sadat treasonously joined -- there was a Geneva conference also attended by the Palestinians through the PLO, their sole representative.

The barbaric Israeli attacks against the Palestinians and against Lebanon are fundamentally inspired by U.S. imperialism and supported by it. The U.S., CIA and imperialism worked in a satanic way for As-Sadat's treason.

U.S. provocation as well as its aggressive and raiding activities, however, are not limited to the Mediterranean alone. Large U.S. naval and even military landing forces have long been concentrated in the Persian Gulf where they blackmail and threaten the Gulf states. We all know about the buccaneering military operation on Iranian territory under the pretext of saving the U.S. hostages.

Here, once again, we have some questions: What do U.S. naval units and military landing forces want in the area of the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, thousands of miles from U.S. shores? What would U.S. Pentagon circles and President Reagan personally have to say if naval units and landing forces of another country -- from Europe, Asia, Africa or even from Latin America -- were stationed a few miles from U.S. shores?

It is once again all too evident that U.S. naval and military landing forces at the mouth of the Persian Gulf and in the Indian Ocean are aimed at blackmailing and provocative and generally aggressive actions. For this reason, once again, the demand of the peoples, who are threatened by these forces, is that they should withdraw from their shores and they should return to the United States.

U.S. imperialist policy is conducting an intensive anti-Soviet campaign under the ridiculous argument that the Soviet Union is a threat to peace! We have the example here of the "thief making noises in order to scare the householder."

Not only has the Soviet Union not threatened, and is not threatening, anyone, but it makes concrete proposals for the expansion of international detente in the military sector, for control of strategic weapons, for creation of zones for dispersing the military confrontation, and it goes as far as to propose total disarmament. Why is it that the U.S. imperialists and NATO do not accept the Soviet proposal for a simultaneous dissolution of the two large military coalitions -- that is, NATO and the Warsaw Pact? If the U.S. imperialists and their allies in NATO truly care about international peace and security, then they would have at least agreed from the beginning to talks based on the Soviet proposals.

The aggressive U.S. Pentagon circles, however, applying the outdated policy of "from a position of strength," attempt to gain "supremacy" in military armaments hoping that they will be able to dictate their wishes to the people of the world. They are still living in the distant past when the socialist camp and the almighty Soviet Union did not exist. They are in no position, or they do not want, to understand the revolutionary changes which took place in the world since the Great October Socialist Revolution of 1917. This is why they play an extremely dangerous game involving the fate of humanity.

The Soviet Union has made it clear that it will never allow anyone to speak to it from a position of strength and that it is a midsummer's night dream if the U.S. or any other imperialists think that they can gain military supremacy. The Soviet Union will never permit anything of this sort.

THE CYPRUS PROBLEM

Allow me now to also refer to the Cyprus problem which, together with the Middle East and other problems of the area, is a creation of imperialism, particularly of U.S. imperialism.

For years now imperialist propaganda has been trying to present the Cyprus problem as a difference between the Greek and the Turkish Cypriots. This is where the great deceit exists. This is not because there are no differences between the Greek and the Turkish Cypriots for which, once again, imperialism is to blame, but because, through this propaganda, imperialism is attempting to cover up the truly unbridgeable difference which exists between the Cypriot people -- Greek and Turkish Cypriots -- and imperialism.

The fact that today there is a Cyprus problem which threatens peace in the area and internationally is due to imperialism and particularly to U.S. and British imperialism, which want Cyprus partitioned and a lair for their strategic plans and aspirations.

It was the British imperialists who first spoke about the partition of Cyprus during the period of the colonial occupation of Cyprus. The U.S. imperialists followed with the notorious Acheson plan which provided for the division of Cyprus between Turkey and Greece, after first completely reducing President Madarios and AKEL to nothing, as it is stressed in the preamble to this imperialist partition plan.

The U.S. and generally all the imperialists have always had AKEL as their main target because they considered it the greatest danger to the realization of their goals.

The junta-fascist coup of 15 July 1974 in Cyprus and the Turkish invasion of 20 July 1974 are the work of the U.S. CIA and of U.S. imperialism which aimed at the partition of Cyprus between Turkey and Greece and at the destruction of the independent Cyprus state.

Even today, those who prevent the peaceful, democratic solution to the Cyprus problem are none others than the imperialists who encourage and support the intransigence of the chauvinist, dictatorial military circles of Ankara.

A QUESTION OF OCCUPATION

The Cyprus problem is not and never was a question of differences between the two communities -- Greek and Turkish -- but a question of occupation, a question of ridding Cyprus of all foreign imperialist presence and intervention. The Cyprus problem must be considered solved right from the moment when the Turkish and generally all foreign troops are withdrawn from Cyprus -- from the moment when the British bases are abolished and Cyprus is demilitarized. The liberation struggle of the people of Cyprus is not likely to cease until Cyprus truly becomes independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized.

Basically, the Cyprus problem has two aspects; the domestic and the foreign. The domestic aspect will be solved by the Cypriots, the Greeks and the Turks, through intercommunal talks under UN auspices and on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. The foreign aspect of the Cyprus problem, which has to do with international treaties which Cyprus was forced to sign in 1960 as an imperative condition for its declaration as an independent state, will be solved by us in an international conference within the framework of the United Nations. We want an abrogation of the treaties and their replacement by UN Security Council guarantees or by other credible international guarantees. We want the abolition of the British bases, the withdrawal of all foreign troops, and the full demilitarization of Cyprus.

These days the intercommunal talks have entered a very delicate and critical phase. The fundamental difference, which unfortunately continues to exist between the two communities which are taking part in the intercommunal talks, is that while the Turkish Cypriot side talks of federation, in its proposals in fact it wants a confederation. There is also a great difference in respect to the territorial aspects of the issue.

In its effort for substantive talks, the Greek side submitted improved proposals within the framework of a bizonal federation. If the Turkish Cypriot leaders truly want a bizonal federation based on the summit agreements and the UN resolutions, they can be certain there will be positive response from the Greek side.

AKEL THE FIRST POLITICAL FORCE

AKEL, which as proved by the recent house of representatives election is the first political force in Cyprus, being a party of the working class and the working Cypriot people, guided by the scientific theory of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, is not the exclusive party of the Greek Cypriot workers and working people. It is also the party of the Turkish Cypriots.

AKEL, in its capacity as the pioneering political revolutionary force in Cyprus, fights for a peaceful, democratic, viable solution to the Cyprus issue based upon the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. It fights for the rapprochement of Greek and Turkish Cypriots and their joint handling of all the undermining, satanic plans of imperialism against Cyprus. It fights for the unification and cooperation of all the patriotic democratic forces on the basis of a minimum program which will also incorporate measures for its own implementation in such a way that the anti-imperialist, liberation struggle of the people of Cyrpus will be assisted in order to bear fruit.

We rely upon international solidarity and support and we express our gratitude to the Soviet Union, the other socialist countries and the nonaligned countries as well as to all the liberal and peace-loving forces of the world which support our peoples liberation struggle.

We are conducting a difficult and complicated struggle which is made even more difficult and complicated by tension in the east Mediterranean, the Middle East and in the entire world. We will continue this struggle until such time as Cyprus will become truly independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized; a center of peace, friendship and cooperation between Greek and Turkish Cypriots as well as between all the people in the area.

PAPANDREOU IRAKLION NEWS CONFERENCE AFTER SPEECH

NC051513 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 5 Oct 81 p 16

[Statements by PASOK Chairman Andrea Papandreou to journalists following his campaign speech in Iraklion, Crete, on 4 October]

[By correspondents Yeoryios Votsis and Thodhoris Kaloudhis]

[Excerpts] Question: As regards the bases, will the measures you proposed for their compartmentalization begin immediately?

Answer: I foresee that the procedure for the bases will begin about 3 months after we assume control of the government. I do not see this happening any earlier because there will be more immediate issues we will have to deal with.

Question: What about control over the bases?

Answer: I see the bases issue coinciding with March. I do not see it earlier for many and various reasons. I also see the issue of the Rogers agreement being brought up at the first Chamber session.

Question: What about the issue of nuclear warheads, Mr Chairman?

Answer: On this issue we hall be compelled to proceed immediately. From the time you are government you have all the information that is required. In Greece, we do not have long-range nuclear weapons. We have short-range nuclear weapons, secondary nuclear weapons, but in any case, weapons of important political significance. For us it will be a significant political act, a symbolical act if you wish, to remove them from our soil. And it will be a challenge for the Balkans, for our friends in the Balkans, to do the same. It will be a huge Greek success if within 6 months we succeed in making the Balkans a denuclearized zone. It will be a great offer to the European area. As regards the timetable for the U.S. bases, this is an issue for negotiation. You understand that at this moment I cannot discuss it with you.

KKE'S FLORAKIS GIVES 2 OCT IOANNINA SPEECH

NC031846 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 3 Oct 81 p 9

[Excerpts] Comrade Kharilaos Florakis, secretary general of the KKE Central Committee, stressed at a tumultuous gathering of the party at Ioannina that the Epirus area which is waging national and democratic struggles gives today its share to the battle for the electoral defeat of the rightwing with the KKE entering into the second distribution [of votes].

In another part of his speech he said that the change for which the people yearn is not merely a change of persons in the government. It is not just enough for the people that the rightwing be removed from the government. Behind the rightwing are hidden the great interests of plutocracy, are the great tentacles of U.S. domination and reaction. We must proceed to their uprooting so that the people may breath freely, for the country to progress, for our peace to be secured tomorrow. At last, an end must be put to U.S. domination, Greece must stop being NATO's yard and the bases of death must be removed. The rightwing calls this "national catastrophe."

The rightwing leader maintains that Greece will then remain suspended and Turkey's position in NATO will thus be strengthened. However, who occupied 42 percent of Cyprus territory? Is it not occupied by NATO Turkey? Who wants to partition Cyprus? Is it not NATO that is striving for Cyprus' partition, because it wants to use Cyprus as a military base?

Who fosters the blackmailing of Ankara's chauvinists and arms Evren's junta? Who questioned the Greek sovereignty over the Aegean Islands? Is it not the NATO secretary himself? Who renders Greece a magnet of nuclear catastrophe by permitting bases there? Who threatens to involve us in dangerous adventures in the Middle East and the eastern Mediterranean? Who organized the 21 April coup?

Not only has the prime minister remained silent on all these questions, but he has reached the point of presenting the Americans as innocent as far as the junta dictatorship was concerned, when the Americans themselves confessed their role in it. "We are to blame," says Mr Rallis, and he means all the people. No, you are to be blamed and your party that handed Greece to the Americans. You are to be blamed for breeding junta element in your state and machinery, which you embrace even today.

Greece outside NATO will not remain suspended. What will be suspended is the rightwing which has always depended on the foreigners to confront the leftwing enemy every time it has raised its head and attempted to trace its own path. A Greece that is independent, peace-loving and outside military blocs will be truly strong, will have true friends, will have prestige and national dignity and will be respected by its neighbors.

The KKE, the leftwing, alone has fought irreconcilably U.S. domination for our national independence for whole decades. After 7 years of junta domination, after the tragedy of Cyprus, the time has come for other forces to join their voices with ours. And now when the time has come for our dreams to be realized and our words to become deeds, we must all remain faithful to the inviolable mandate of the people; out of NATO forever. Out with the bases of death. There is no room here for concessions. These great goals of our national independence cannot be postponed indefinitely.

The rightwing leader in vain has tried to present the EEC as Greece's saviour. Our farmers are experiencing the burying of their products in the wastelands, our industries the closure of their enterprises and the workers high prices. The Epirus stockbreeders are also experiencing the entry's negative consequences.

The rightwing leader very misleadingly asks where we will sell our goods if we quit the EEC. He forgets that after our entry into the EEC our exports to it decreased; he forgets that it is not the EEC that buys our wine stock but the socialist countries. The rightwing's dangermongering is a real deceit. It is not just we who are in need of the EEC markets. It too has need of ours. If we leave the EEC it does not mean that we will lose its markets. We must not forget that we import from the EEC goods worth practically three times more than we export to it.

The change will be decided resolutely by the arraying together of the forces of change that will emerge from the people's struggle. Some are maintaining that this is not the time for such a solution -- that the Americans and the establishment will react. But, will the irreconcilable enemies of the change ever give us permission for the change?

It is a dangerous deceit for the strugglers of the change to think that, while they understand the KKE role in the issue of the change, they should postpone their electoral support for the KKE until another, more favorable time. The more favorable times are not created with weak but with strong communist parties. This is derived from international and Greek experience. Our opponents are aware of this and fear the ascent of the KKE and are trying to obstruct our people's way by resorting to the known slanders and terrorisms. Obviously, this is not all that happens. There are others who wear the mask of a "friend" and lay traps and technical dilemmas. We would like to take this opportunity once again to declare that the KKE is not intending to offer even half a vote to anyone. On the contrary, it claims votes from every struggler for the change, because it believes that only by strengthening itself and by entering into the second distribution of votes can it secure the removal of the rightwing and the real change.

IRANIAN STUDENTS OCCUPY CONSULATE IN ANKARA

[Text] Ankara, 6 Oct (AFP) -- A Turkish soldier was wounded by gunfire when 30 Iranian students invaded Iran's consulate here and held 15 to 20 people hostage for about an hour, officials said today.

The students, who according to one diplomat were members of the left-wing People's Mojahedin organization, agreed to leave the consulate after a meeting with the Istanbul police chief.

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN RETURNS FROM NEW YORK

TA051627 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Oct 81

CUMHURIYET REJECTS NATO VIEW ON GULF INTERVENTION

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "How Could It Be?"]

[Excerpts] During the debate on Turkey conducted at the International Strategic Research Institute of Georgetown University in Washington, extremely interesting views were expressed and disputable statements were made. All of these statements were equally interesting. Some dwelt on social matters while others on political issues, reflecting the speakers' views rather than facts. The person who delivered the most interesting speech on military matters and international relations on the first day of the debate was Robert Komer, former U.S. ambassador to Ankara, who played a significant role in the famous pacification projects in Vietnam. In his speech, Mr Komer is quoted as saying that if NATO decided to intervene in the Gulf, Turkey would certainly be part of the intervention force.

Mr Komer's disclosure is indeed very interesting and at first glance it could lead to misunderstanding. First of all, at present it is impossible for NATO to intervene in the Gulf, because NATO's area of responsibility ends before the Gulf. In other words, the Gulf is outside the area of NATO responsibility. Thus, neither can NATO intervene nor can Turkey participate in such an intervention, which has no legal justification.

Naturally, it is not impossible in principle for NATO to expand its area of responsibility. But it is highly improbably that such an act, which would be an irreparable blow to world peace at a very critical time, could enlist the support of the majority of the U.S. partners in NATO.

Even if we supposed for a moment that such a decision materialized and NATO members, excluding Turkey, said "yes" to the expansion of NATO's area of responsibility, what would Ankara stand to gain from upholding such a decision?

In its efforts to rid itself of the current economic crises, Turkey has decided that the Middle East countries and Third World states are potential markets. All future plans are based on this assumption. This is the course open to Turkey. Under these circumstances, why should Turkey block its own route to international markets? Whose interests would Turkey serve by doing this?

It is not necessary to be a soothsayer to perceive that there are certain circles in the West that would like to see Turkey hurled into ever-deepening isolation, and that they are preparing to submit invoices similar to the views of Mr Komer as a repayment for slightly opening this dark curtain of isolation.

These calculations are being made, and those who are watching developments in Turkey are aware of the existence of such calculations. But as a nation that has for years been quite freqeuntly duped in the interests of NATO and Western defense, we have to be more vigilant.

Under these conditions, we can say that Mr Komer's words are merely "wishful thinking" presented as facts.

COMMUNISTS GREET AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST PARTY

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen's message to the Fourth Congress of the Socialist Party of Australia -- read by announcer]

[Text] Dear Comrades: On behalf of all Turkish Communists and the Turkish working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends its revolutionary struggle greetings to the Socialist Party of Australia on its fourth congress. Your congress has convened at a time when imperialist efforts toward a dispute with the socialist countries, for an arms race and to use brute force against national liberation movements have reached dangerous dimensions. The U.S. administration and NATO sovereign circles are exerting extensive efforts to include Australia more actively in this aggressive and adventurist policy. The Soviet peace proposals are the strongest guarantee to prevent such dangers. Your congress has convened at a time when unemployment is soaring in Australia, monopolist exploitation of the toilers has increased, and bankruptcy and destruction have been intensified. The Socialist Party of Australia is exerting extensive efforts to unite all anti-imperialist, antimonopolist forces and all peacelovers in this atmosphere.

Comrades, the reactionary military dictatorship in Turkey is continuing its attacks against the oppression of our working class and its syndical and political organizations. In recent months, these attacks have mainly been directed against the TCP, its members and supporters, as well as the progressive forces. Patriots are being forced, through atrocious tortures, to admit that they are members of the TCP. These methods of terror and oppression are running parallel with the economic crisis which the toiling people are being forced to shoulder. Unemployment, price hikes and poverty are crippling the toiling people. On the other hand, the U.S. administration and NATO sovereign circles are increasing their pressure on Turkey for our country to play a much more active role in the aggressive adventurist policy of imperialism. All this is accompanied by an intense anti-Soviet and anticommunist campaign.

The TCP is waging a struggle toward the unity of all national democratic forces for peace, national independence, democracy and social progress, and against imperialist pressures, dependency on NATO, exploitation of monopolies and oppression by the junta. Comrades, the TCP and the Socialist Party of Australia are linked with ties based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. We wish great success to the Socialist Party of Australia on its fourth congress. Long live the Socialist Party of Australia! Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 2 October, 1981.

OFFICIALS COMMENT ON DEFENSE BUDGET CUTS

[Own correspondent report: "No Growth in Defense Budget Because of Cuts"]

[Excerpts] As a result of this year's budget cuts, the defense budget will not exhibit any growth. Up to now, it had generally been assumed that there would be a real increase of 1.5 percent.

Defense Minister van Mierlo gave this answer to a written question from Democrats '66 parliamentary group leader Brinkhorst, who asked if the cuts amounting to 113.7 million guilders contained in the two budget amendments proposed in the spring had been included in the budget and whether the cuts were of a structural nature.

Van Mierlo replied that the measures are not structural but that the expected percentage growth for 1981 is "at best zero." In the next defense budget amendment, he will give more detailed information about structural changes.

Minister van Mierlo announced that the savings measures consist of a reduction in personnel strength, cuts in materiel and building maintenance and the reduction of ammunition use and flying and sailing hours. Investments projects also will be postponed.

Brinkhorst this morning replied that the answer has in fact shown that the previous cabinet had "indulged in boasting" about defense budget growth. Van Mierlo's statement also shows that growth has in fact fallen below zero percent, Brinkhorst said.

Labor Party defense spokesman H. van den Bergh said this morning that the figures provided show that [former Defense] Minister de Geus had painted matters too rosy and that defense is getting into difficulties.

Christian Democratic Appeal second chamber member Frinking remarked that the achievement of the 3 percent growth norm still seems very uncertain. He said that we have still to see the full implications of the return in 1981 to a zero percent growth.

ARMENIANS CLAIM 2 BOMBINGS IN GENEVA 3 OCT

[Text] Geneva, 3 Oct (AFP) -- Two bombings shook the main court house and central post office here tonight, causing considerable damage, according to police.

There was no immediate information about whether anybody had been injured.

The attacks were claimed by the Armenian "June 9" organization in a phone call to the Agence France-Presse bureau here. Swiss police said later that this group was a branch of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia [ASALA] which over the past five years had already staged 18 attacks in Switzerland and elsewhere.

Last Thursday, a group from ASALA occupied the Turkist cultural center in Paris killing a guard and wounding [words indistinct] before surrendering. Last July, ASALA had mounted four attacks in the Swiss cities of Bern, Zurich, Lausanne and Geneva, and the court house here had already been bombed once by the Armenians in November, 1980.

The June 9 organization is believed named after the date when an Armenian activist, charged with having killed a Turkish consulate employee was arrested here.

The Armenian underground seeks belated punishment of Turks for the Armenian genocide practiced in Turkey under the Ottoman Empire in 1915.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON AS-SADAT ASSASSINATION

AU062055 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1830 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Hans - Georg Heinke interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kriesky at his residence on 6 October -- recorded]

[Text] [Begin recording] [Kriesky] All of us knew that people had been after him for a long time. I also warned him before his visit to Austria and told him that even though we would do everything possible, we naturally could not assume the responsibility in view of all the existing cruel occurrences. And thus this was perhaps one of the reasons for canceling the fall visit. I myself was very pleased with it because I am aware of the problematic nature of protecting oneself against such assassination attempts. Thus it has now happened. I can only say that I am most deeply moved. One of the very greatest men of this century has been brought to grief in such a manner.

[Question] You said that it will be more difficult now. How do you think things will further develop in the Middle East after the death of President as-Sadat?

[Answer] Anyone knowing me is well aware that I regard that part of the world as the most dangerous. Just as at one time before World War I the Balkans was the place from which the next war was bound to originate -- Bismarck never cherished any illusions about this because powers and forces that were much too uncontrolled were operating there -- so the same thing now applies to the Middle East. The greatest danger to peace comes from there. Such an act never has positive consequences, it always results only in an exacerbation of things. [end recording]

LANC WANTS JEWISH IMMIGRATION QUOTA FOR POLES

[Report by "GJ" on interview with Interior Minister Erwin Lanc in Vienna -- date not given]

[Text] Vienna -- The decrease of the influx of refugees from Poland was only temporary. In the second half of September, the number of refugees arriving from Poland again reached new record levels. About 20,000 Polish citizens presently are staying at Austrian refugee camps or hotels rented for them by Austrian authorities. Only about 5,000 Poles were able to obtain visas in Austria this year for the United States, Canada or Australia.

In a talk with DIE PRESSE, Interior Minister Lanc reported on his contacts with the new U.S. ambassador in Austria whom Lanc informed about the current problems. Ambassador Cummings, whose birthplace is in a region that is now Polish territory, reportedly stressed his readiness to cooperate. In negotiations with U.S. immigration authorities, Interior Minister Lanc will try to achieve an internal regroupment between the Polish refugees' quota and the immigration quota for Jewish emigrees. While the U.S. Government has promised to admit 30,000 Soviet Jews annually, at the most one third of this quota will be utilized this year.

Lanc is trying to induce the Americans to "swap" quotas: Considering that there will be fewer Jewish immigrants anyway, the United States could grant entry permits for more Poles. In these endeavors, Lanc is using the arguments that most of these refugees are young and have good vocational training. The interior minister believes that there has been a positive echo also from a U.S. Congress delegation which visited the Traiskirchen refugee camp. The senators are said to have highly praised the Austrian endeavors.

LEADERS' STATEMENTS ON ASSASSINATION OF AS-SADAT

Schmidt Tribute

[Text] Bonn, 6 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today paid tribute to the murdered President Anwar as-Sadat as a "courageous man." Addressing the SDP Bundestag Group this afternoon, Schmidt, in his first statement on the assassination, expressed the "deep sympathy" of the Federal Government. Whatever one may wish to criticize as regards the policy of his state, the courage with which As-Sadat followed his impulse to establish peace between two peoples raised him far above many of his contemporaries.

Genscher Condolence

[Text] Beijing, 7 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher praised the murdered Egyptian president, Anwar as-Sadat, as a "great statesman" who always worked for peace. Genscher, speaking to German journalists in Beijing today, said he learned of As-Sadat's assassination with "great shock and horror." As-Sadat had always worked for political and lasting solutions in the Middle East.

In a telegram of condolences to Egyptian Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali, Genscher said: "The man who, in front of the whole world, made the decision to settle the Middle East conflict without violence through peaceful means has himself become a victim of hatred and blind terror."

GENSCHER: FRG NOT SUPPLYING WEAPONS TO MIDEAST

DW061057 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 6 Oct 81 p 11

[Correspondent's dispatch signed HJS: "No Tanks for the Gulf Area"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Oct -- The Federal Republic will not supply Saudi Arabia or any other Arab country with Leopard tanks or other weapons. This is indicated by a statement by FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in the Shaykhdom of Qatar on the Persian Gulf. Genscher made a stopover there on his way to Beijing.

Following his talks with Amir Khalifah, Genscher stated at a press conference in Doha, the capital of Qatar, that the Federal Republic is not supplying weapons to Israel or any other country in the Middle East. He added: "I anticipate that this will remain so." This is the first time that a leading member of the Federal Government has clearly indicated to Saudi Arabia and other Arab states that the disputed arms deal with Riyadh, which at the same time was supposed to result in comprehensive economic cooperation, will not materialize.

It has been learned that the Federal Government has determined that the domestic and foreign political situation of the Federal Republic will not permit the arms deal with Saudi Arabia. Bonn would face becoming one of the largest arms exporters in the world because any delivery to Saudi Arabia would immediately trigger other purchase requests, not only from the Middle East but also from all parts of the world. A restrictive arms-export policy would then no longer be possible. Thus far, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had held open any decision on the arms delivery regarding the Saudi Arabia issue.

German economic circles in Qatar express regret over Bonn's negative decision. The arms deal with Saudi Arabia, it is said, would open the door to the German economy in the entire Gulf region. In Qatar, for instance, a German consortium led by the Wintershall AG, is making efforts to get into the natural gas business. Natural gas deposits, which experts consider to be the biggest in the world, were discovered in test drillings in this Gulf country. Wintershallparticipated in these drillings. The German consortium now faces tough competition from French and English enterprises.

In his talks wtih the Government of Qatar, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher was accompanied by Heinz Wustefeld, member of the Wintershall AG executive board.

KOHL EXCHANGES VIEWS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR

[Text] Bonn, 6 Oct (DPA) -- CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl and Soviet Ambassador to Bonn Vladimir Semenov met for an exchange of views. According to a statement from the CDU, the meeting took place on Monday evening. It was a followup invitation from the Soviet diplomat to the CDU chairman. Both agreed on the need to remain in contact. The CDU mentioned problems of German-Soviet relations and questions of European security as the topics of conversation.

Last week Kohl had separate talks with the ambassadors of Great Britain and the United States. On Monday, he will begin an important factfinding tour of the United States in the course of which he will be received by U.S. President Reagan.

SURVEY REVEALS OPINIONS ON ECONOMICS, POLITICIANS

DW061324 [Editorial Report] The Mainz ZDF Television Network in German at 2305 GMT on 5 October carries Horst Schaettle's report "Political Barometer" which shows the results of surveys on topical problems and on the popularity of public figures.

According to the Schaettle report, 14 percent of the German people in September 1981 considered the FRG's general economic situation good, 52 percent, partially good-partially bad, and 34 percent, bad. The respective September 1980 figures were 46, 45 and 8 percent. As for the economic outlook, the September 1981 survey shows 45 percent of the people seeing the future economic situation as worse, 42 percent, unchanged; and 13 percent, improved--as against 25, 62 and 13 percent for September 1980.

Schaettle reports that the Germans surveyed gave the following marks to institutions and personalities.

Federal Government	0.2
Opposition:	0.6	-- showing that the opposition has had a better rating than the government since as far back as June.
Chancellor Helmut Schmidt:	2.0	-- or unchanged
Foreign Minister Genscher:	1.7	-- showing slight decline over the past few months
Heimut Kohl:	1.2	-- a slight increase in September after a downward trend up to August
Franz Josef Strauss:	0.1	-- after a rating below zero for several months

Schaettle concludes that "top political personalities, also the institutions of government and opposition, definitely do not score any brilliant marks and this against a background where the citizens increasingly view their economic future pessimistically. This surely means a crucial test for the Bonn parties."

PAPER ASKS SUPPORT FOR REAGAN ECONOMIC POLICY

[Commentary signed SS.: "Reagan Needs Trust"]

[Text] The President of the United States holds up two documents containing the regulations on social security: the old one has 318 pages, the new one 6. By this gesture at the news conference, he probably intended to show what the most decisive element of his policy is -- simplifying the administration, exercising austerity and concentrating aid on those people who need it. Reagan is struggling for confidence in his policy. The citizens are supposed to know that he means it.

Viewed with European eyes, the President is certainly not an impressive personality pulling everybody along. He does not have charisma, which could be dangerous anyway. He puts his stakes on the credibility of his explanations and of his policy. This is no easy job for him. U.S. newspapers are especially critical and are ready to jump whenever they believe that they have discovered weak points in his program. Moreover, it has turned out, that in reality the difficulties are greater than expected. And yet, we should not allow ourselves to be contaminated too quickly by the critics. Discussion and sharp words are part of the political business. Basically, everybody, especially the friendly countries, should hope that the goals which Reagan and his government have set for themselves are attained. Reagan realizes that this will be hard to accomplish and that it probably will take more time than originally anticipated. But then, the program was devised to put an end to decades of a policy of generous neglect of inflation and of increasing state spending and to point developments in the opposite direction.

Actually, the economic policy test period for the Reagan administration began 1 October. It was probably on purpose that the news conference was scheduled for that exact date on which the initial tax rate decrease of 5 percent became effective. It is anticipated that the result will be an upward surge in the economy such as the United States has not seen for a long time. This will be done through increased savings which will provide the economy with "genuine" capital for investments and for the creation of new jobs.

President Reagan is determined to use the power at his disposal. He will use his veto right in the event Congress resists further spending cuts or even demands increased expenditures. He has stated quite clearly that it is the duty of the government to set goals. Soliciting the approval of the people is probably aimed at creating for Reagan a bases for getting along with Congress. Reagan may have a popularity-seeking political style, yet he ultimately conveys the impression of a man who does not throw dust into the citizen's eyes. What is being referred to as "supply oriented policy" is not a patent medicine like the drug of inflation but a program which can be fulfilled only if the citizens go along with it.

PRESIDENT ISSUES STATEMENT ON AS-SADAT DEATH

LD061930 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Statement issued 6 October by French President Francois Mitterrand -- read by announcer]

[Text] I have just learned with consternation of the death of President Anwar as-Sadat. Since the announcement of the attempt perpetrated against him this morning, I have kept myself constantly informed about his condition and this very moment I feel a very profound emotion. I retain from my meeting with President as-Sadat, President Mitterrand continues, the lively recollection of a person of high quality. He is one of those who are able, with exceptional courage and intelligence, to give direction to destiny. The world has lost one of the best it possessed. All those who condemn violence, which is always cowardly and despicable, feel indignation at this action.

Francois Mitterrand.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON DEFFERRE VISIT TO ALGERIA

[Daniel Junqua dispatch]

[Excerpts] Algiers -- The French and Algerian police will coordinate their action to find effective solutions to the human and administrative problems caused by the influx into France of Algerian nationals coming to visit their families, to vacation, to buy goods or to seek work. Joint provisions will be taken to monitor these visits at departure and arrival points and during the stay to pick out the "false" tourists from the real ones and to prevent friction likely to affect relations between the two countries. This announcement was made by Gaston Defferre before returning to Paris on Thursday, 1 October.

During his visit, the interior minister had talks with Benhamouda, his counterpart, while his principal private secretary Grimaud consulted with Police Chief Khediri. The Algerians will be in a better position to intervene since they are preparing to computerize passports. These talks, like the ones which Defferre had with head of state Chadli Bendjedid, Prime Minister Abdelghani and Foreign Minister Ben Yahia were characterized by their frankness and cordiality. "When friendly relations exist," he explained, "it is possible to discuss everything without danger of quarreling."

The interior minister also discussed the thorny problem of the gas supplied by Algeria to France with President Chadli Bendjedid and Abdelghani. The Algerians stressed the importance they attach to recognition of the principle of index linking the price of gas to the crude oil price and the hopes aroused on this subject by the accession to power in France of a Socialist government favorable to restoring a trade balance between the industrialized and Third World countries. They place this matter in the overall framework of French-Algerian relations, of an agreement leading to a readjustment of the trade balance, in which Algeria at present has a deficit, and making it possible to envisage a new boost to economic cooperation. "We hope," Defferre said, "that these problems can be settled before Mitterrand's visit in November, or, at latest, during his visit." The cautious nature of his remark confirmed that agreement is still far from being reached.

However, the minister stressed several times his conviction that relations between the two countries are now on the right track -- a conviction which the Algerian leaders seem to share. Several of them and many top officials attended a reception given Thursday evening by French Ambassador Merillon, who was seeing the confirmation of the efforts he has been making for 2 years together with Sahnoun, his counterpart in Paris, to improve relations between the two countries.

SPADOLINI, COLOMBO MOURN AS-SADAT'S DEATH

[Text] Rome, 6 Oct (ANSA) -- Premier Giovanni Spadolini voiced the Rome government's "profound dismay" and "very intense indignation" today for the assassination of Egyptian Presdient Anwar as-Sadat. The victim of the "horrible and irresponsible" attack, Spadolini said, was "an eminent stateman whose achievements have provided an incomparable contribution to world peace."

As-Sadat has "generously and constantly" strived to bring about the conditions for peace and stability in the Middle East, the Italian Government leader added, "starting with the prominent role he played in the Camp David agreements."

Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo decried the killing of "one of the greatest leaders of our times" in a statement in which he gave as-Sadat the credit for having brought the Israeli-Egyptian conflict well along the way to a settlement.

The Egyptian president's "bold and concrete" efforts, Colombo went on, had also "opened paths for a settlement of the entire Middle East crisis. The anxiety beholding us at this moment," Colombo added, "is heightened by a serious concern for the consequences that as-Sadat's death will have on such a restive area."

Colombo urged "the great Egyptian nation, with which Italy shares deep-rooted ties of friendship, to pursue the efforts undertaken by its grand leader."

Meanwhile, an Egyptian Embassy spokesman in Rome described the situation in Cairo as "calm" this afternoon. He recalled that As-Sadat had made an official visit to Italy in April 1976.

Egyptian Ambassador Ahmed Sidki acknowledged that this was "a tough time for the Middle East and the Egyptian people" in a statement released here later. "As-Sadat boldly gave his life for peace," the diplomat asserted, adding his own "prayer to God" for his country.

Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni, who is honorary president of the Italian-Arab Friendship Association, bemoaned As-Sadat's death as triggering "a heavy charge of instability to a region whose only pursuit, for the sake of world balance, is peace." Whatever people may think of his moves, Rognoni added, As-Sadat was "surely a man of peace and that is why his death is a real tragedy."

SPADOLINI HOLDS TALKS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR

[Text] Rome, 6 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini received the Soviet Union ambassador to Rome, Nikolay Lunkov at government headquarters in Palazzo Chigi, a communique from the prime minister's office confirmed here today. The press release noted that "during the cordial discussions, the two men exchanged points of view on the principal international issues of the day.

"Voicing the concern of the Italian Government toward the problems of peace and international security" the note continued, "Prime Minister Spadolini asked the Soviet ambassador to convey this concern to his government together with the expression of the particular interest with which Italy looks forward to the opening of negotiations on nuclear theater forces in Europe between the United States and the Soviet Union, scheduled to begin in Geneva on November 30."

According to the communique, Spadolini "emphasized the need for the negotiations to lead to prompt and concrete results in order to arrive at a conclusion of balanced and verifiable agreements for an arms balance at the lowest possible level.

"In this manner," the communique noted, "A way can be opened toward adopting the ideal measures for the consignment of a general and complete disarmament, both in the conventional and nuclear arms sector. During the discussions," the press release added, "the two men also examined the state of relations between the two countries."

COLOMBO, FRG FOREIGN MINISTER REACH AGREEMENT

[Excerpts] Bonn, 5 Oct (ANSA) -- The main significance of the meeting which took place on Saturday in Rome between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his West German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, lies in the fact that both countries pledged to work together to bring about the creation of a European unification program, informed sources disclosed here today. According to information from diplomatic circles in the German city, talks between the two foreign ministers were defined as "of an extraordinary significance."

The Italian foreign minister and his West German counterpart came to a "very close understanding" on a draft "European act" for unification during three hours of talks in Rome Saturday.

The Bonn sources disclosed that the first step in opening up broad consultations among the ten European Community (EEC) countries, would be relaying the progress accomplished by Colombo and Genscher in Rome to the duty chairmanship of the EEC.

The next step would be a discussion of these issues between French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and Genscher, scheduled to take place in the near future.

Underlining the close cooperation which took place between the Italian and German representatives, the Bonn sources underlined in particular the analogous position of the two countries on the issue of the "Euromissiles."

Both countries, they pointed out, continue to maintain a close relationship with the United States while at the same time insisting on negotiations between the Soviet Union and the Reagan administration which would point toward the ideal "zero solution."

The sources are referring to the possibility that a Soviet Union dismantling of "SS-20" missiles pointed toward Europe would mean that the NATO nations could renounce installation of "cruise" missiles on their territory.

NATO ADMIRAL WARNS OF GROWING SOVIET STRENGTH

[Text] Naples, 5 Oct (ANSA) -- The Soviet Union has re-inforced its naval forces "both in quality and quantity, not only in the Mediterranean but also in the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea, according to the former commander of Allied Forces for Southern Europe, Italian Admiral Angelo Monassi. The admiral made the warning today at the general quarters of the Atlantic Allied Forces (NATO) of Southern Europe during the nomination ceremonies for the regional commander, Admiral Giuseppe di Giovanni.

The former NATO commander maintained that the Soviet Union "has repeatedly tried to interfere in the delicate relations among the various countries of the Mediterranean."

Commenting on the renewed Greek participation in NATO's military structure, the Italian admiral judged the development as "very positive." His judgement, he said, was based on the fact that NATO members are faced with more and more commitments in the southern region, and also on the extension of the confrontation between the two superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States.

EANES, PINTO BALSEMAO CABLE CONDOLENCES TO EGYPT

LD062258 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] President Ramalho Eanes of Portugal described Anwar as-Sadat as an example of a great statesman.

In a cabled message to the acting president of Egypt, General Eanes conveyed the Portuguese people's and his own most sincere condolences and deepest sorrow over the death of the Egyptian head of state. He said: "The important efforts which he developed toward securing peace in the Middle East and the firm and courageous manner in which he conducted Egypt's destinies made Anwar as-Sadat an example of a great statesman."

In a cable addressed to the Egyptian vice president, Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao said: "On my own behalf and that of the Portuguese Government, I wish to convey to your excellency and the people of Egypt our deepest condolences on the tragic death of President Anwar as-Sadat. His performance for peace in the Middle East and the great courage and political vision displayed by him in that noble task earned him respect and admiration at the international level. At this crucial time when efforts are being made in the search for a lasting and global peace for the Middle East, his disappearance represents a loss for mankind."

The cable was signed by Pinto Balsemao himself.

LD062130 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] The Portuguese Government ordered a 3-day period of national mourning on the death of President Anwar as-Sadat. A note signed by the head of the prime minister's office said the mourning was ordered to give a fitting national expression to our country's sorrow over the death of the president of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

In a press release, the Portuguese Foreign Ministry described the deceased Egyptian president as a statesman with historic vision, who was often capable of giving an ethical dimension to political action which surpassed immediate and material objectives. The ministry went on to say: It is with a feeling of deep emotion that the Portuguese Government sees the disappearance of the head of state of a great friendly country and bows in tribute to his memory.

The Foreign Ministry said the Portuguese Government presented its condolences to the Egyptian ambassador to Lisbon and requested him to convey to the Egyptian Government and to As-Sadat's family the expression of its solidarity.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE BEGINS NATO DEBATE

[Text] Since noon today, NATO has been a subject of open debate in the Congress of Deputies. Martin Garcia Vega reports on the first session of this most important debate in the Foreign Affairs Committee:

The treaty of Washington does not necessarily require member countries to have nuclear weapons. Spain will not have nuclear weapons on its territory. This was told to the Foreign Affairs Committee by Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca during his presentation to parliament concerning the government's application for authorization to initiate negotiations leading to Spain joining the NATO.

This historic debate got underway amid a climate of expectation. Among those present were the ministers of foreign affairs and defense and PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez. However, the climate was also one of some tension between the committee chairman, Ignacio Camunas, and the opposition -- particularly Deputy Peces Barba [PSOE] who called for adjournment until tomorrow. It was his view that the regulations had not been complied with and there had not been proper time to study the amendments. Arguments ensued and then, after accusing the opposition of delaying the debate, the committee chairman allowed Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca to speak.

Perez Llorca began his speech by explaining why this moment had been chosen to bring up the question of joining NATO. This autumn, Spain has had to look squarely at the problem of its security relations with the West. This relationship previously worked through the agreement with the United States under which we were to a certain extent subordinated to the decisions made by the Atlantic alliance. Perez Llorca then went on to analyze the different alternatives which might be pursued for the security of Spain: Neutrality -- this is neither possible nor desirable, he said. Continue a bilateral relationship -- "we would have to obtain a formal alliance and this would never be possible." The alternative of a purely European defense arrangement -- Perez Llorca said that the government would favor such an alternative and would fight for it, but that it is not possible now. Therefore, only NATO membership remains. The minister went on to analyze what would be involved in our joining the Atlantic alliance. He said that NATO is not an aggressive pact. It is an alliance, basically political, for cooperation in defense through deterrence. From that forum, he said, we will be able to collaborate decisively in efforts for peace. The foreign minister dismissed the idea that by joining NATO we would be accepting a supranational authority. Spain will at all times have a veto over any decision affecting our security. That is something it does not presently have. The minister also denied that nuclear weapons would be stationed in Spain. The treaty does not impose such an obligation and Spain would not agree to atomic weapons being stationed on our territory.

The foreign minister also found time for the question of Gibraltar. We will not give up our claim to sovereignty, he said, but it is a mistake to believe that a government could win more in relation to an Atlantic base from outside NATO than it could from inside. He said that NATO wants the rock to be in the hands of an ally. So it is a question, concluded the minister, of taking Spain into an international forum whose decisions affect us and in which we must be present with the right of veto.

Following Perez Llorca's speech, various parliamentary groups expressed the wish to reply to the minister's general discourse on the desirability of joining NATO. However, the committee chairman refused this request, acting firmly in the face of repeated demands by the various groups.

OLESEN URGES RESUMPTION OF SALT PROCESS

PM061553 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 4 Oct 81 p 8

["Struck" report: "SALT Negotiations on Nuclear Arms Must Start Now"]

[Text] The Danish Government is concerned at the major powers' policies of rearmament. In connection with President Reagan's statement on the U.S. strategic nuclear forces, Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said:

"The superpowers' enormous buildup of weapons of nuclear destruction is extremely worrying. For a number of years we have been witnessing massive Soviet rearmament and, with President Reagan's new program for the U.S. intercontinental nuclear arms, the superpowers' nuclear arsenals will be further increased.

"In a situation in which large sections of the world's population live in poverty, everyone should be thinking about how these enormous resources could be used to alleviate this poverty.

"We have already passed the stage at which mankind could be annihilated several times over and nevertheless efforts are made the whole time to reach a balance.

"The glimmer of light at present is that the United States and the Soviet Union have reached agreement that in November this year the two superpowers will commence arms control talks on the medium-range nuclear weapons. And we must make it a commitment that the SALT negotiations on the intercontinental nuclear arms systems, which have been interrupted now for far too long, are resumed."

Kjeld Olesen also said: "I am sure that my views are shared by many other West European governments. If we are going to succeed in pressuring both the Soviet Union and the United States into coming to the negotiating table, we must pool our efforts. This is one of the contexts in which the idea of developing the political cooperation in the EEC must be seen, even though the real military cooperation belongs in NATO."

KIPRIANOU STATEMENT ON AS-SADAT ASSASSINATION

[Statement by Cypriot President Kiprianou -- read by announcer]

[Text] Death is always a sad event and, moreover, when it is a matter of assassination. Certainly, this also applies in the case of President as-Sadat. This position is not related with President as-Sadat's stand toward Cyprus which was by no means friendly, nor with his policy on the Middle East problem with which we have had basic disagreements.

KIPRIANOU HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE IN MELBOURNE

[Excerpts] Speaking at a press conference in Melbourne today, President Kiprianou stressed that we are pursuing the implementation of the UN resolutions which contain all the necessary elements for a just solution of the Cyprus problem. President Kiprianou said: We aim at a fully independent, sovereign republic of Cyprus with its territorial integrity guaranteed and the status of a unitary state and a nonaligned Cyprus as well as the restoration of the inalienable rights of all citizens. He added: We aim at the demilitarization of Cyprus because, if Cyprus is to live in peace and prosperity, foreign intervention and interference must end. Mr Kiprianou remarked: In other words, what Cyprus is seeking and demands is exactly what all independent states and all other people in the world are entitled to, nothing more and nothing less.

President Kiprianou said all efforts toward a Cyprus solution have failed because the Turkish side follows the policy of promoting the faits accomplis created by the invasion.

Answering a relevant question, President Kiprianou said no decision has been made concerning a more active role by the UN secretary general. He added: We are not going to make any decision on this until I meet with Mr Waldheim on 12 October and discuss with him the entire situation in detail. Mr Kiprianou also said that, before we formulate our stand on the possibility of a more active role by the UN secretary general, the matter will be discussed at the National Council. The president of the republic said that many countries are interested in a Cyprus solution but they do not take any positive action toward a just solution. He said: Some countries are merely interested in patching up the state of affairs in Cyprus, but this is not the right approach because Cyprus needs a viable solution based on certain principles and not on the realities caused by the invasion.

President Kiprianou also stressed that when we talk about territorial proposals we do not mean that the Cyprus issue is a territorial dispute, but we have in mind the areas which will be under Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot administration within the framework of a federation. After noting that the population percentage of Turkish Cypriots is only 18 percent and their ownership of land about 16 percent, Mr Kiprianou said that a 20 percent ratio under Turkish Cypriot administration is reasonable as part of a general settlement. He also said that the constitution should safeguard the unity of the state in a true federal system and that the rights of free movement, settlement and ownership of property should be safeguarded. Mr Kiprianou further said that if the Turks desired a constructive dialogue they would have taken the opportunity of our broad proposals.

Answering another question, Mr Kiprianou said that any meeting with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas would not be fruitful at this stage because if such a meeting is held and fails, the consequences would be serious. He also said that we still maintain the view that the question of Famagusta should continue to be given priority.

In answer to another question, Mr Kiprianou said that within the framework of a solution, the majority of refugees should return to their homes under a Greek Cypriot administration, and that the remainder should also have the right to return to their homes under Turkish Cypriot administration.

The press conference was attended by dozens of press radio and television representatives as well as correspondents of international press agencies.

HURRIYET REVEALS WALDHEIM PLAN ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC061042 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 4 Oct 81 pp 1, 11

[Report by Ziya Akcapar and Ozer Hatay]

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] (HURRIYET) -- While the plan prepared by UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for the solution of the Cyrpus dispute is taking shape through "the joint efforts" of the United States and the EEC countries and through the agreement in principle of Turkey and Greece, the Greek Cypriot house of representatives has issued a 6-point resolution indirectly opposing it. The Greek Cypriot house of representatives has stressed the determination of the Greek Cypriot side to continue the struggle until the island's territorial integrity is secured and until the Turkish troops have left the island.

On the other hand, the Western alliance seems to be gradually getting closer to peace in Cyprus, which has become a constant headache on its eastern wing. This is being done despite Greek Cypriot resistance. Waldheim's final "draft solution" reads as follows: This plan leaves out points on which the two sides disagree and which will be taken up in a second plan. It then sums up points to be negotiated now as follows:

1. Maras [Varosha], which contains tourist hotels, will be returned to the Greek Cypriots. The eastern frontiers of the two federated states will follow the former Magusa-Lefkosa [Famagusta-Nicosia] road and will stretch as far as Akdogan [Lysi] village. It will be connected with the Greek Cypriot sector through a straight line drawn in a manner that will not imperil Ercan airport.

2. The twisted borderline in the southern and western parts of Guzelyurt [Morphou] will be eliminated by making frontier adjustments.

3. A third "region" will be created between the two federated states. This region will be used an an area where the two sides can hold contacts. In addition, joint service organs will carry out their duties here.

4. Joint committees will be set up to deal rapidly with such matters as the return of the refugees to their homes, compensating those who will be unable to do so and mutually setting off property claims against each other.

5. A fund will be created under the leadership of the United States and with the support of the EEC countries for the purpose of securing the welfare of the refugees and of materializing plans to raise the standard of prosperity of both communities.

Greek Cypriot sources stress that the draft enjoys the support of the United States and Britain, that Turkey and Greece have approved it "in principle" and that Kiprianou is under pressure "not to act hesitatingly."

Another point that worries the fanatic Greek Cypriots who do not want a compromise settlement is Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko's constant refusal to receive Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis. This is how diplomatic circles in Lefkosa interpret this attitude of the Soviet Union: "The Soviet Union is seriously disturbed by the fact that the lack of a settlement in Cyprus tends to strain relations between Turkey and Greece.

"The decision at the European Council extending Greek territorial waters to 12 miles, the already known reaction of Turkey to this decision and the probable developments that may ensue from Greece's desire to turn the Aegean into a Greek lake are increasing the Soviet Union's concern. Consequently, the Soviet Union, too, is on the side of peace in Cyprus."

It is also persistently argued that soon after the bilateral talks Waldheim will have with Kiprianou on 12 October in New York, efforts will be made to bring the Greek Cypriot leader together with Denktas. Following this meeting, Waldheim is reported to be p nning to bring the two leaders to the negotiating table in Lefkosa and get them to publish a "peace communique."

AKEL DISAGREES WITH REJECTING WALDHEIM IDEAS

NC062323 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] Speaking at a conference in Larnaca to AKEL cadres tonight, AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou stated that AKEL disagrees with the tendency to reject Waldheim's ideas on the Cyprus problem before their contents become known. Mr Papaioannou said that AKEL will await the return of Mr Kiprianou who will have firsthand knowledge of these ideas. After receiving them and studying them, AKEL will express its view. He added: If there are positive elements in these ideas we will accept them, but we will reject the negative elements: at the same time we will make our own counterproposals.

This, Mr Papaioannou said, is a most serious and responsible handling rather than a mere yes or no. He added: The criterion would be whether Waldheim's ideas are based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

In conclusion, Mr Papaioannou said that any dogmatic or prejudicial approach to the question could only cause damage to our cause and would not secure for us any support at the United Nations because Mr Waldheim will brief the United Nations on our attitude.

NORTH'S SOCIAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL MEETS IN NICOSIA

[Text] The Social and Economic Council of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus began its third meeting in Nicosia today. Speaking at the opening ceremony, the minister of the economy, Mr Cosar, said that one of the main subjects to be discussed at the council was the fifth and last part of the 5-year development plan of the federated state and the social and cultural problems facing the community. He pointed out that the number of youths reaching employment age was surpassing the number of vacancies for employment and there were different proposal by different organizations to overcome this problem. He added that the council meeting would be beneficial because all these problems and proposals to overcome them would be discussed and the result would help the government in adopting its future measures.

Mr Cosar stated that many-sided economic measures would be taken within the framework of the government program to make the federated state economy self-sufficient. He cited the measures for this purpose as production (?mobilization), realization of the investment program, continuing the fight against inflation, increasing government incomes and preventing their excessive expenditure, establishment of an investment bank and taking necessary measures to improve the work of the government controlled public companies.

After Mr Cosar, the council was addressed by Mr Ertugrul Guven, the secretary general of the state planning organization who is also the chairman of the Social and Economic Council, who made a general assessment of the economy of the Federated State, and made several proposals for the overcoming of the problems facing the Federated State. The Social and Economic Council meeting is to continue for 2 days.

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

[Text] Ankara, 6 Oct (AA) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said it was not possible to consider as satisfactory the statement issued by the French Government on the recent raid by armed Armenian terrorists on the Turkish Consulate in Paris.

At a press conference in Ankara (?on his contacts in New) York, Turkmen said with reference to the report of Madame Foucart of France, adopted by the European Parliament, which presumed to picture Greek territorial waters as extending to 12 miles within the European Customs Union, had "no practical or legal value" for it was "an expression of opinion by an organ not competent" to decide on the matter. "The Foucart report (?cannot) disturb us," Turkmen said.

Turkmen summed up his talks with officials in London, Brussels and Luxembourg before flying on to New York, where he met with foreign ministers of EEC member countries as well as with other colleagues.

He had stressed the importance of dialog between Turkey and Greece in his talk with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, Turkmen confirmed, and the press release issued after their interview noted disputes between the two countries shoud be settled through negotiations.

With U.S Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Turkmen had discussed Turkish-U.S. military and economic coopertion as well as international affairs. U.S. aid to Turkey this year would include $250 million of military, and $200 million of economic aid, he announced.

He and Secretary Haig had touched upon the Middle East question [word indistinct], Turkmen said, but admitted there was a major difference in the U.S. and Turkish policy toward the Middle East; Turkey considered the Palestinian Liberation Organization as the representative of the Palestinian people whereas the United States did not.

With Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko, he had confirmed goodneighborly relations and exchanged views on certain world issues.

Turkmen said he had joined the New York meeting of Islamic countries' foreign ministers on 3 October, and had met in an interveiw with the Iranian foreign minister for the first time since the establishment of the Islamic republic in Iran.

His interview with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim had centered around the Cyprus issue, and he had given the special shield commemorating the Ataturk centennial to Waldheim at a special ceremony on 30 September.

Asked whether the Council of Europe assembly's concern with Turkey might be interpreted as intervention in Turkey's internal affairs, Turkmen said his govenment had on several occasions announced no such intervention would be allowed, but he did not believe relations with the Council of Europe would come to such a point. "The importance we attach to maintaining our ties with the Council of Europe cannot justify and presumption by the council to interfere in our domestic affairs" Turkmen commented.

Turkmen considered the statememt by the secretary general of the French Socialist Party commenting on Head of State General Evren's message to President Mitterrand as merely the view of a party official, and said he preferred to wait for the "official" French response to Evren's message before taking a position.

The foreign minister admitted his Federal German colleague Hans-Dietrich Genscher had confirmed his country's laws did not allow the extradition of certain criminals to Turkey.

He described relations with EEC as progressing "normally," referring to the $75 million technical and economic aid by the community, and the 4th financial protocol which had already been initialled.

It was not yet totally clear who had kidnapped Turkish truck drivers in Iraq and burned up their vehicles, Turkmen said, but his ministry had been informed that the kidnappers had been killed during the rescue operation by Iraqi forces, and several others had been executed.

IRAN CONSULATE OCCUPIERS SURRENDER TO POLICE

[Text] The Iranian Consulate General in Istanbul Cagaloglu district was raided by a masked group this morning. Two persons, one of them a security official, were wounded in the incident. According to information obtained by Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondents, a masked group of 26 persons arrived at the consulate general at 0945 this morning, occupied the building and hung a poster criticizing the religious leader Khomeyni. The masked group later took persons in the consulate to the basement. The occupiers, meanwhile, threw some office furniture outside and chanted slogans. Later, the security forces arrived at the scene of the incident and asked the demonstrators to evacuate the building.

The occupiers left the building and surrendered to the security forces. A security official and an Iranian official, (Mahmud Gergeri), checking identity cards at the entrance were slightly injured in the incident. The occupiers, who said that they belonged to the people's fighters organization, were detained.

FINANCE MINISTER ERDEM RETURNS FROM WASHINGTON

[Text] Istanbul, 6 Oct (AA) -- Finance Minister Kaya Erdem said that foreign governments appreciated the positive results of Turkey's current economic policy, particularly in fighting inflation and balancing the budget through tax reform.

He made the statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport on his return from attending the IMF and World Bank meetings at Washington together with Deputy Premier Turgut Ozal.

The international conferences provided an opportunity for him to meet separately with the Federal German finance minister, the U.S. secretary of the treasury, the OECD secretary general, and the president of the European Development Bank, as well as the presidents of the fund and the bank.

The IMF and World Bank had decided to channel their credits to countries which were able to straighten out their economies through their own resources, he pointed out.

Turkish officials had also contacted representatives of several large banks for possible credits, Erdem added.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE POSTPONES MEMBERSHIP DECISION

TA051618 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Oct 81

[Text] The consultative assembly of the Council of Europe has adopted the resolution based on the (Steiner) report on Turkey. According to this resolution, the decision on Turkey's membership to the Council of Europe has been postponed to January 1982. Out of 80 deputies present in the assembly, 10 voted against the resolution, 53 voted in favor of it and 17 deputies abstained.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH EGYPT'S MUBARAK

[Text] Duesseldorf, 8 Oct (DPA) -- According to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Israel, in the wake of the death of Egyptian President as-Sadat, must realize that "progress in the negotiations" with Egypt are in the interests of stability in the region. Following his visit to the PRC, Genscher met the proposed successor to As-Sadat, Husni Mubarak, during a stopover in Cairo last night.

Genscher said this morning on West German radio that "specific steps" toward the implementation of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people are "absolutely necessary" to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, for which As-Sadat had always worked.

Genscher said that he has already briefed the Eruopean Community and the United States on his meeting with Mubarak. Genscher said he was impressed by the determination with which Mubarak is approaching his task of safeguarding Egypt's internal stability and of "consistently following" the foreign policy of his murdered predecessor. One can assume that Mubarak, who enjoys great respect and support in the Egyptian Army, will be elected As-Sadat's successor in Tuesday's election.

Genscher said that Egypt's friends now need to make it very plain that Egypt does not stand alone. It must also be clear that "in this difficult and hard situation" Egypt can be sure of its friends.

CABINET VIEWS AS-SADAT DEATH, MIDEAST STABILITY

[Excerpts] Bonn, 7 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Government today expressed its great concern that the stabilization in the Middle East, which it supports, is not endangered following the murder of President as-Sadat. Government Spokesman Becker at a press conference in Bonn today emphasized "the outstanding role" which, according to Bonn's assessment, Egypt under As-Sadat's leadership has played in the efforts for stability.

Developments in Egypt and the consequences of As-Sadat's assassination for the whole of the Middle East were the main topics at today's meeting of the Bonn cabinet. Becker said that in Chancellor Schmidt's view these developments are "amost incalculable."

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt expressed the hope that in the interest of building peace in the Middle East, Egypt would be able to muster political continuity. Speaking at a news conference in Bonn today, Brandt said he is "much affected" by As-Sadat's assassination. The SPD chairman recalled that he was the first federal chancellor to visit As-Sadat after the 1973 October war and later discussed with Austrian Chancellor Kreisky and the leader of the Israeli opposition, Shim'on Peres, the "road to Camp David."

SCHMIDT ON U.S.-SOVIET DIALOGUE, BREZHNEV VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 7 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt considers it "attainable" for the USSR and the United States to reach agreement on arms control regarding nuclear medium-range missiles within the framework of the NATO program for counterarming with 572 American cruise missiles and Pershing missiles in West Europe.

In an interview in today's STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG, Schmidt notes that the deployment of medium-range missiles in the Federal Republic is scheduled to begin at the end of 1983 according to the NATO plans. "That is still over 24 months from today. The deployment will be spread over several years. I consider achieving the result of negotiations before this is attainable," the chancellor said.

Schmidt, who is also being attacked from the Social Democratic Party ranks for his support of the NATO dual decision, does not believe, however, that there will be any initial results from the American-Soviet negotiations by the time of the next SPD congress in April 1982. "That would surprise me very much," he said. "Things like this can't go so quickly; judging from prior experience, arms control negotiations last longer." At this congress, the SPD intends to review, in light of the results of negotiations so far, its agreement to the 1979 NATO dual decision.

The chancellor also said that arms control will be the main topic in his talks with Leonid Brezhnev who will visit Bonn at the end of November. Schmidt also stressed that in recent years his government had "more than any other government in the world" adhered to a policy of detente, military balance and cooperation between East and West, despite the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

"I was afraid at the time," he said with regard to the invasion of Afghanistan, "but I didn't just stand there and publicly emphasize my fear, I acted. Against the ideas of the then U.S. leadership, I did not let the line to Moscow be broken. That's why Genscher and I went to Moscow in the summer of 1980 and brought home -- in contrast to previous Soviet policy -- Moscow's desire for negotiations on medium-range missiles. That's why negotiations are possible now."

PAPER SEES OFFER TO MOSCOW IN REAGAN MX DECISION

[Commentary signed G-N: "An Offer, Too"]

[Text] The debate in Washington will show how President Reagen's decision on the MX missiles made against the advice of the Pentagon will be assessed from the security policy respect. Instead of the requested 200 land-based missiles, only half of them will be built and these, for the time being, will not be hidden in new silos but in hardened silos of the Titan missiles which are to be scrapped. This shows that the President does not take the argument on the "vulnerability" of the land-based missiles at face value. Technically, they are vulnerable, but as long as another major part of America's potential -- nuclear weapons mounted on submarines and on long-range bombers -- remains relatively safe, then this will serve as protection for immobile weapons. Granted, they are less accurate and, as weapons being used against cities, are somewhat less 'credible". But nevertheless they will warn the Soviet leaders against threatening a first strike. To the extent this consideration is true, then the halving of the MX program and the temporary renunciation of mobility constitute an offer to Moscow to consider the possible completion of the program later on as subject matter for negotiations. This may also be a beginning for the third SALT negotiations if Moscow is ready to pay an equal price.

MITTERRAND, SCHMIDT DISCUSS EAST-WEST, SECURITY

[Excerpt] Latche, 7 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Francois Mitterrand initially talked about the East-West situation and security policy at their informal meeting in southwest France on Wednesday evening. They noted "almost complete agreement." This was reported by the German side after the first round of talks and a dinner in Mitterrand's country house at Latche near Soustons on the Atlantic coast.

Both politicians agreed that close German-French cooperation is essential and should be continued. It was further reported that the talks took place in a very friendly atmosphere. German delegation circles were pleased about the close personal relationship which emerged during the talks.

Schmidt is the first foreign politician to be received by Mitterrand in his home since his election in May.

PREMIER MAUROY EXPLAINS DEVALUATION OF FRANC

PM071525 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Oct 81 pp 1, 10

[Excerpts] [Question] Why has your government waited 4 months before readjusting the franc's exchange rate?

[Answer] As you know, the agreements instituting the European Monetary System made provisions for the possibility of periodic exchange rate adjustments to take account of changes in the economic situations in the various European countries. Such changes have been made several times in the past, notably in September 1979, when the Deutsche mark was revalued against the franc. Since then, the French and German economies have not developed in the same way, especially inflation. Prices in France increased twice as much as in Germany during the whole time Barre was head of government. That is why strong pressures, accentuated by the chaotic developments in the dollar, were exerted on the franc from early 1981. Currency losses reached a very large amount between 15 February and 21 May 1981, in the period which preceded the presidential election. When the new government took office, we were fully aware that an adjustment in the exchange rate of our currency against the Deutsche mark was inevitable. We had to discharge past liabilities and turn the meters back to zero. So why did we wait 4 months? For three essential reasons:

The first is that we were very anxious to carry out this operation in a spirit of European solidarity and in close consultation with our EEC partners. At the time, we all thought that the chaos on the exchange market was not favorable to a rapid adjustment.

The second is that, if this operation had been carried out at a time when the dollar was worth more than Fr6, it would have worsened the trade deficit and inflation rate in our country. It was necessary to wait until the dollar fell, the international monetary storm abated somewhat and the French economy was placed back on a more stable course, as is now the case.

The third reason is our desire to maintain complete control over our economic and financial policy. The currency adjustment has come at a time and in conditions chosen by the government in agreement with our European partners.

What effects will the decisions made on Sunday have on the French economy? They should produce an improvement in our competitiveness and in our exports, which have already done well over the past few months. This will help to support our economic recovery, which has already started.

In addition, next Wednesday's cabinet meeting will be presented with a coherent series of measures aimed at substantially reducing the inflation rate wich it still excessive.

The decisions made on Sunday will only have a positive effect. In terms of growth and employment if, at the same time, all our fellow citizens agree to take part in the vital effort to moderate nominal increases in prices and wages. This is the only possible way of winning the battle for economic recovery and employment.

[Question] Do you think that France can follow an independent economic policy in a very difficult international environment and in the context of trade on world dimensions?

[Answer] I believe that the French people have already answered your question in the affirmative, by their votes. They rejected the previous government's free market policy based on passive adaptation to the international division of labor, which would have led to a serious deterioration in our industrial apparatus and a massive increase in unemployment.

The government is aware of the constraints imposed by the international environment. The structural deficit of our trade in relation to the industrialized countries bears witness to the efforts which need to be made. But the government is also aware of the benefits which France can derive from an open policy toward other countries and from harmonious development of international trade.

The aim of our economic policy is to gradually restore greater margins of autonomy to the French economy, particularly for stronger growth. This action involves a vigorous energy savings policy; the development of those areas of demand whose import content is low -- housing and public works for instance; an industrial policy which favors the reconquest of the domestic market; and a major effort in research and techological innovation. The 1982 budget and the 2-year plan will put these major orientations into practice.

The structural reforms which the government has started -- nationalizations, decentralization, introduction of new planning -- will give the community the necessary tools with which to implement this action on a broad scale in the medium term.

I would like to add that the failure of monetarist remedies and their harmful effects on employment will confirm the soundness of France's decision to give priority to combating the social scourge of unemployment.

[Question] In general, you are directing government action according to a method of political conduct which seeks to avoid both radicalism and mere reformism. As a result of this, for the time being, nobody seems to be following you with overwhelming enthusiasm -- not even your allies and friends. Marchais, the CGT and even some members of your party are urging you to speed up the change. If you continue to give the impression that you are seeking compromises, don't you fear a degree of isolation?

[Answer] To be frank, your question surprises me. The action being taken is being taken in close liaison with the president. Look at the opinion polls and other public opinion studies and you will see that the government still has an exceptional level of confidence. All those who hurriedly announced the end of the "period of grace" have been proved wrong. And I have not heard anybody within the majority criticize the government for dragging its feet. Quite the reverse; I seem to notice some deputies finding difficulty in keeping pace with us and wanting to slow down the rate of change.

Moreover, as you well know, those who wish to criticize the government say in particular that it is going too fast and doing too much. Moreover, that surprises me too. Because those who say things like that seem to forget that we were elected to implement the policy which we are now implementing.

Everybody knows very well that the major reforms must be started immediately. If we wait, we run the risk of postponing or even shelving things. In addition, to successfully carry out such a major operation as regionalization takes a good 2 years' work. If we want to be able to have regional councils elected by universal suffrage in 1983, when the French people reelect their municipal councils, there is no time to lose. As for the nationalizations, everybody, from the National Council of French Employers to the trade unions, agreed that the groups concerned could no longer be left in a state of uncertainty and that we had to act quickly. That is what we did.

These two structural reforms alone, not to mention the measures to establish fiscal justice or a new division of labor, constitute a considerable change in a country like France. I do not see in what way there has been a compromise. Unless you think it a compromise to implement decentralization or nationalizations, taking care not to damage our country's administrative or industrial apparatus. It would have been irresponsible to act in any other way. We are working to restore all France's initiative and creative capacities. We are acting to strengthen its production apparatus and to put the whole of France back to work. If there are any sorcerer's apprentices anywhere, you will not find them in the government or in the majority.

MITTERRAND, CHEYSSON TO ATTEND AS-SADAT FUNERAL

NC080956 Paris AFP in English 0948 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 8 Oct (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand will attend the state funeral Saturday for Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, who was gunned down on Tuesday during a military parade, it was announced today. External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson and Justice Minister Robert Badinter will also be in the French delegation.

POLICE INVESTIGATE KGB LINKS OF MURDERED ISRAELI

[Text] Rome, 7 Oct (ANSA) -- An Italian police investigating the death in Rome of an Israeli national of Russian origin are following up on a tip that Michael (Tartakovsky), a 57-year-old physician who died by strangulation, was an operative of the KGB, the Soviet secret police. (Tartakovsky's) body was discovered Saturday in a hotel known as a rendevous for homosexuals in the capital and the search for leads originally centered on the thesis that the murder was connected to a homosexual encounter.

On Tuesday, however, an anonymous telephone caller told the ANSA head in Rome that (Tartakovsky) was [word indistinct] by a KGB agent [word indistinct] in Florence. Also the victim was a KGB agent. The caller also reported [words indistinct] "German" and to where the dead man was active in his alleged role as a KGB agent. Police are now seeking to track down the [words indistinct] accompanied (Tartakovsky) to Florence on September 21 for a medical conference.

One fact which has come to light to lend weight to the allegations advanced by the anonymous tipster is that the victim travelled to Italy regularly to recruit Jewish emigrants from the Soviet Union for work activities in Israel. The manager of the Hannover hotel in Rome, Richard Hern, has reported that (Tartakovsky) usually spent a lot of time in Ostia, on the coast near Rome, among members of the community of Jewish emigrants from the Soviet Union awaiting resettlement. The murdered man was a cardiologist, well-known in Israel.

COMMUNIST MAYOR OF ROME DIES OF HEART ATTACK

[Excerpt] Rome, 7 Oct (ANSA) -- The communist mayor of Rome, Luigi Petroselli, died suddenly from a heart attack, it was announced here this morning. Petroselli, who was 49 years old, was taking part in discussions in his party's Central Committee meeting in Rome when he was struck by the attack. He was immediately brought to hospital but died shortly afterwards.

Petroselli had been elected mayor of Rome for the second time around barely one month ago. Negotiations at that time to form a city council government continued with difficulty for a number of months because of Christian Democrat Partypressure to isolate the Communists and avoid another left Roman coalition combining them with the Socialist, Social Democrat and Republican parties, all government coalition members. Despite a Social Democrat defection at the last moment, a fragile minority coalition was eventually formed with the Socialist and Communist parties and the abstention of the Republicans.

GOVERNMENT EXPRESSES REGRET ON AS-SADAT DEATH

LD061938 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2006 GMT 6 Oct 81

[Text] London, 6 Oct (PA) -- The British Government received the news of President as-Sadat's death with "profound distress and shock," according to a Foreign Office statement tonight. "The Egyptian nation has lost a supreme leader, whose qualities of courage and wisdom were matched by a deep understanding and affection for his fellow countrymen. History will mark his great achievements, most notably his bold and imaginative bid for peace in his visit to Jerusalem in 1977. The world is a more dangerous place without him. The deep and heartfelt sympathy of the British Government and people goes out to Mrs as-Sadat, his family and his people."

Thatcher Praises Mubarak

LD071638 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0925 GMT 7 Oct 81

[Report by editor in chief David Chipp]

[Excerpt] Mrs Margaret Thatcher today described Vice-President Husni Mubarak of Egypt, the man tipped to succeed Anwar as-Sadat, as "very able and experienced." She told British reporters in Melbourne she had met him twice and had been most impressed with him. The British prime minister said the main thing now was for both Egypt and Israel to make a great effort to restore stability so that the next stage of the Camp David agreement could be fulfilled. She was hopeful that the situation in the Middle East could be calmed down and the area of conflict isolated as it had been when the Iran-Iraq war broke out. That isolation of a potentially explosive situation "was a great tribute to the sophistication of the nations of the world." Mrs Thatcher, who leaves tonight for Pakistan at the end of the Commonwealth heads of government conference, said she was very sorry that she could not attend President as-Sadat's funeral. She had been away from London a long time and must get back on Friday.

DAILY TELEGRAPH ON REAGAN REARMAMENT PROGRAM

PM051439 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Oct 81 p 18

[Editorial: "The Tools for Deterrence"]

[Text] President Reagan's nuclear re-armament programme is impressive and -- for the great majority, who realise that adequate deterrence and firmness of purpose are the only safeguards against nuclear war and loss of freedom -- reassuring. It is, however, also a painful reminder that after nearly two decades of neglect and illusions no amount of technological superiority or money can prevent the restoration of the military balance from being slow, laborious and frustrating. What Mr Reagan is offering is a package of "quick fixes" together with some medium and long-term solutions. The next few years will be the age of the cruise missiles as the all-purpose stop-gap. Mr Reagan is also fortunate in having the B1 bomber on hand in thoroughly tested prototype form. Mr Carter cancelled it in 1977 to reduce military expenditure and as a gratuitous goodwill gesture to Russia. The argument that his main reason was that the B1 would be too vulnerable to Russian air defences does not hold water. It was brilliantly designed to cope with such problems until well into the '90s, (1952 vintage) -- but not until 1986 instead of 1980 as originally planned. The main disappointment is the scrapping of the plan for 200 of the forthcoming MX missiles to shuttle around between 4,600 shelters to make them invulnerable to a Russian first-strike, which at present could knock out nearly all America's land-based missiles. Instead, 100 of the missiles have been ordered to begin with for static deployment in silos some years hence, leaving the program of vulnerability unsolved. Mr Reagan was clearly incluenced by environmental protest and political lobbying, as alternative mobile basing systems, on which a decision has been postponed for two years, are more expensive and less effective. Mr Brezhnev, of course, labours under no such handicaps.

ROLANDHIS SPEAKS TO U.S. MEDIA ON TALKS

[Text] Speaking at a news conference in New York yesterday, Foreign Minister Rolandhis stressed that the Cypriot Government is carefully exploring and considering the possibility of an initiative by UN Secretary General Waldheim to intervene in the Cyprus issue, and that a decision will be made on this after the National Council is briefed by the president of the republic and all factors have been weighed.

Mr Rolandhis stressed the unacceptability of recent Turkish Cypriot proposals and referred to the present phase of the Cyprus issue. He also provided a background review and recalled the correct dimensions and substance of the Cyprus issue, stressing that it continues to remain a problem of invasion and occupation. The foreign minister also referred to the continuing consequences of the occupation and of thousands of displaced, enclaved and missing persons. He stressed the fact that no progress has been made in the inter-Cypriot talks, and outlined the government's position on the various aspects of the problem as well as the prospects in sight both for the dialogue and a recourse of the Cyprus issue to the UN General Assembly. Mr Rolandhis said the inter-Cypriot dialogue may be still in progress by the end of the present UN General Assembly session next December. For this reason, he added, the door should stay open for a debate of the Cyprus issue by the assembly at a later stage should this be necessary.

In conclusion, the foreign minister referred to the missing persons issue, stressing that consultations on the matter are being held in New York with the UN General Secretariat toward removing the present difficulties in commencing the actual task of the committee to trace the fate of missing persons.

After his opening speech, Mr Rolandhis answered a lot of questions which covered various aspects of the Cyprus issue. The press conference was organized by Mr Mavrommatis, permanent Cypriot delegate at the United Nations, on the occasion of the 21st Cypriot independence anniversary. The news conference was attended by representatives of radio and television networks, international press agencies and large U.S. and British newspapers.

GREEK CYPRIOT INTERLOCUTOR REPORTEDLY MAY RESIGN

[Excerpts] According to our cross-checked information from well-informed sources, the government's attitude and whole behavior toward Mr Yeoryios Ioannidhis has put him in a big dilemma over whether he should continue offering his services as an interlocutor. If the government does not change its attitude toward the interlocutor, the same reports say, it should not be ruled out that Mr Ioannidhis may raise the question of his resignation with President Kiprianou when the latter returns from New York.

The same reports added that Mr Ioannidhis' only interpretation of the government failure to include him in the Cypriot delegation for consultations with Waldheim in New York is that he has been set aside.

According to our information, Mr Ioannidhis is also of the opinion that not only he himself but also all members of the National Council should be in New York at this time when the future of Cyprus and its people is at stake -- that not only President Kiprianou but also all the political leaders have a say in the future. The government spokesman was asked yesterday to comment on press reports that Mr Ioannidhis has been ignored and he is not being sufficiently briefed since the consultations are being held in New York and Mr Ioannidhis is in Nicosia. The spokesman reiterated that Mr Ioannidhis is kept fully briefed, and, moreover, noted that "we cannot transfer the talks."

Ioannidhis Comments

[Text] Greek Cypriot negotiator in the intercommunal talks Mr Y. Ioannidhis has once again appealed to all to look to the Cyprus problem in an unselfish and patriotic manner, away from party considerations.

"We are at a very critical and delicate phase of the Cyprus problem. Settlement does not depend on us alone. But as far as we are concerned we must make every effort for a considered and planned course of action. Now is the time for sense of responsibility and thoughtfulness, the time for decisions that may determine the future and destiny of our country. Our actions and attitudes at this moment must have patriotic motivation and be guided by love for the country", Mr Ioannidhis said.

He was speaking at a Rotary Club gathering at Larnaca and chose for his subject "The Cyprus Problem -- Developments and Prospects." Mr Ioannidhis said that one year has elapsed since the talks started almost without any progress.

The Turkish proposals of August 5 have been disappointing, he said, because their territorial suggestions reveal that they intend to keep a large extent of land "at the expense of all sense of justice and morality".

"If the Turkish Cypriot side sincerely and honestly desires a peaceful settlement and a fair conclusion of the present suspense which affects both communities, it must abandon the policy of division and accept a federal settlement", he said.

The year that passed has seen nothing concrete emerging, but differences have been pinpointed, and it has become possible to see the difficulties of the prospects ahead and the way the Turkish Cypriot side approaches the Cyprus problem.

AKEL SECRETARY SPEAKS ON WALDHEIM 'IDEAS' 6 OCT

NC071339 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 7 Oct 81 pp 1, 7

[Excerpts] "The correct procedure and way of handling the Waldheim 'ideas' is to receive them officially, study them and express our views on them responsibly. Any dogmatic or prejudicial approach to the question can only cause damage to our cause." This clear and responsible position of AKEL was outlined by Mr E. Papaioannou in a speech he delivered yesterday evening at a meeting of party cadres in Larnaca.

It has been said, for instance, that the Waldheim "ideas" are nothing else but a Western plan for a Cyprus solution in the interest of NATO; that imperialist quarters are in a hurry for their plan to be accepted before the elections in Greece and so forth.

We do not have the slightest doubt that the U.S.-NATO imperialist quarters are in a hurry to solve the Cyprus problem in their interest. The firm imperialist position on the Cyprus issue is to partition Cyprus and convert it into a military springboard and a base for the rapid deployment of the imperialist aggressive troops.

However, what is not known, and we cannot speak with suppositions, is whether in the course of their policy they have also succeeded in using the UN secretary general. And it is a heavy, very heavy accusation against the UN secretary general to say that he has been turned into a puppet of imperialist policy on Cyprus. AKEL, which has always been characterized by its seriousness and responsibility, cannot without facts share such views. How can we draw deliberate conclusions without being officially aware of the content of the Waldheim "ideas" and the entire spirit in which they are expressed?

A tendency has already been manifested to reject the Waldheim "ideas" without even knowing their content. This tendency is at the least dogmatic and wrong; it is not characterized by a spirit of seriousness and responsibility. And I explain myself: The UN secretary general is entrusted by the Security Council to place the intercommunal talks under his auspices by using his good offices.

Therefore, if he decides that in order to accomplish his mission it would be in the interest of the intercommunal talks to express some "ideas" -- which, moreover, cannot and should not be outside the UN resolutions on Cyprus and the summit agreements -- why should we not wait until we officially receive the "ideas," study them thoroughly and then responsibly express our views? And, if there is something positive in these "ideas" we accept it while we reject what is negative and, at the same time, submit our own counterproposals. Don't you think that this is a more serious and responsible way of handling the matter than a yes or a no?

Whichever way we look at this matter, therefore, we will establish that the correct procedure and way of handling the Waldheim "ideas" is to receive them officially, study them and express our views on them responsibly. Any dogmatic or prejudiced approach to the question can only cause damage to our cause.

Nothing is binding us. We are only committed to the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. Whatever is outside these agreements and resolutions, whatever is outside the UN framework is rejected.

Greece is a NATO member. It withdrew from it in 1974, after the Turkish invasion, but returned to it recently but without having secured the withdrawal of the Turkish-NATOite troops from Cyprus.

Cyprus is, to its honor, a founder member of the Nonaligned Movement and it will remain in this movement.

The troops which have been occupying 40 percent of the Cypriot territory for 7 years now are Turkish-NATOite troops. The military bases in Cyprus, which are the root of the evil, belong to Britain -- another NATOite country. Therefore, again NATOite troops are occupying 99 square miles of Cypriot territory, 32 other points in various parts of Cyprus with the right to use our roads, ports, airports and Cypriot airspace for military purposes. The spy monitoring stations operating on Cypriot territory along to the leading imperialist power of NATO -- the United States.

All this attests that the plight of Cyprus -- bloodshed, dead and missing people, thousands of uprooted, enclaved people and generally all that this unfortunate nation has suffered and continues to suffer -- emanates from the NATO imperialists. This is why, and they are justified, the Cypriot people cannot have any trust whatsoever in their executioners; those who have crucified and are now torturing and mocking the Cypriot people.

This is why the Cypriot people demand the withdrawal of the occupation and all foreign troops from Cyprus and the dissolution of all imperialist bases and radio stations.

The best assistance and service the democratic political leadership of Greece could offer the Cypriot people, who are struggling for their independence, is to withdraw Greece from NATO, which is the executioner of Cyprus.

NORTH'S KONUK SENDS CONDOLENCE MESSAGE TO EGYPT

TA071121 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 7 Oct 81

[Text] Acting President and Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk has sent a message of condolences to Egypt's temporary president, Sufi Abu Talib, following yesterday's assassination of President as-Sadat.

In his message, Konuk said: The assassination of President as-Sadat caused deep grief for me and for the Muslim Turkish Cypriot people. On my behalf and on behalf of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, I extend our heartfelt sympathy and condolences to Your Excellency, to the bereaved family and to the brotherly Egyptian people. May God bless the memory of our deceased brothers.

KONUK REPLIES TO KIPRIANOU MELBOURNE STATEMENT

[Text] Referring to the news conference Spiros Kiprianou held in Melbourne, Acting President and Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk has said that the Greek Cypriot leader continued to adopt a negative stand. In his news conference, Kiprianou has blamed the Turkish Cypriot side for lack of progress in the solution of the Cyprus problem. Recalling that no results would be achieved in the intercommunal talks through the reversal of the realities, Konuk said that Kiprianou's statements demonstrated that he has not changed his past stand and positions. Konuk continued: By submitting to the Greek Cypriot side the concrete, meaningful and comprehensive proposals on 5 August, the Turkish Cypriot side has demonstrated its good will and accomplished its task. The public is aware of the Greek Cypriot stand in regard to those proposals. Had the Greek Cypriot side adopted the same good willed and sincere stand we adopted in this question so far, then a significant step could be made in the way to peace.

Pointing out that Kiprianou's statement in Melbourne on the territorial issue to the effect that a 20 percent ratio under Turkish Cypriot administration is reasonable as part of a general settlement proves that he has deviated from the Makarios-Denktas four-point agreement, Konuk added: That agreement envisages the settlement of the territorial issue based on certain basic principles and not only on the ownership of land. These principles cover the economic viability of the two communities as well as their security needs. Kiprianou is shouldering the responsibility for the outcome of the continuing intercommunal talks by making statements which ignore earlier important agreements.

Konuk said that despite Kiprianou's negative stand and statements, the Turkish Cypriot side would -- as it has done in the past -- continue to exert peaceful efforts with good will and sincerity for the continuation of the intercommunal talks for the finding of a (?final) and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem. If despite our stand no constructive results are reached, Konuk said, we will not be the side to be blamed for such a situation.

TURKISH CYPRIOT UNION STAGES 1-DAY STRIKE

LISSARIDHIS SAYS PASOK VICTORY WILL HELP CYPRUS

NC062353 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 6 Oct 81 p 7

[Report on a discussion held in Beirut with EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis by ELEVTHEROTIPIA correspondent Petros Makris -- date not given]

[Excerpt] "PASOK's rise to power will have a very favorable influence on Cypriot developments because both the foreign policy PASOK has announced and its stance as a party during all these years has been very correct toward Cypriot Hellenism." This was stressed in a statement to ELEVTHEROTIPIA by EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis who, referring to the direct repercussions on the Republic of Cyprus by any developments in the Greek area, made it clear that the elections of 18 October 1981 in Greece may prove to be historic for the promotion and solution of the Cyprus problem.

Specifically, in a discussion Vasos Lissaridhis had with ELEVTHEROTIPIA Editor Petros Makris in Beirut -- on the occasion of the international conference for solidarity with the peoples of Palestine and Lebanon that was held in that city -- among other things, Lissaridhis stressed the following:

PASOK's policy of national independence is inseparably linked with the Cyprus question because the United States and the proxy policy of the junta in Ankara are responsible for the entire misery of the problem.

A segment of the official Greek side and a segment of the official Greek Cypriot side have struck a blow against the Cyprus people's cause and against the Turkish democratic forces by assessing the junta in Ankara as a conciliatory interlocutor.

Thus they have made the dictatorial-militarist Turkish regime desirable to the European and international public. However, in addition to this, the Turkish constitutional proposals for two completely separate communities with strict borders and tough control of people crossing them are tantamount not merely to the island's division, but to the disappearance of the Greek Cypriot element, if one takes into consideration the fact that during the entire period of the occupation of Cyprus' northeastern part, innumerable Turkish colonizers have settled.

The Greek negotiating position would be omnipotent and internationally recognized if Greeks had showed UN Secretary General Waldheim his responsibilities by presenting not merely how unfounded the Turkish positions are but also how unacceptable they are to existing documents and resolutions by the international organization.

The principal points of Vasos Lissaridhis' interview are the following:

Question: In its government policy program, PASOK has most clearly declared a radical reorientation in its foreign policy with the aim of both abolishing dependence on imperialist forces and solving the Cyprus problem without concessions. Andreas Papandreou has repeatedly declared that PASOK's basic goal is the complete independence of the Cyprus Republic in accordance with UN resolutions. Do you not believe that this position by the party currently contesting power in Greece, with favorable prospects, will promote a solution of the Cyprus problem?

Answer: Certainly, any developments in the Greek area have immediate repercussions on Cyprus' reality. Cypriot Hellenism considers Greece and especially the Greek people as the principal and basic factor for waging the struggle, not only for reasons of national identification but for reasons of coincidence of natioal interests. This is so because Turkey threatens not only Cyprus and the Cypriot people with liquidation, but also endangers other basic Hellenic interests in the Aegean, the islands and elsewhere.

For these reasons we believe that the elections are significant. Frankly, we believe that PASOK's rise to power will have a very favorable influence on Cypriot developments because the policy the movement has announced and its stance in general as a party during this entire period have been most correct on the Cyprus question. PASOK's positions are most agreeable to us. In addition, PASOK's national independence policy is directly linked with the Cyprus problem because it is no secret that unfortunately U.S. policy and the proxy policy of Ankara's ruling class are responsible for the misery of the Cyprus problem. Consequently, we firmly believe and look forward to PASOK's rise to power. We do not conceal this at all, not only because we are ideologically identified with PASOK in our socialist positions but because we assess things on a true basis of national survival. I believe that PASOK's rise to power will have very favorable consequences on Cyprus.

TURGUT OZAL RETURNS FROM WASHINGTON VISIT

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal returned home today after attending the IMF and World Bank yearly meetings in Washington. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Ozal said that the improvement in Turkey's economic situation affected favorably Turkey's relations with the IMF and the World Bank. Ozal noted that progress made in Turkey's economy last year was set as an example to some countries with similar problems. Recalling that no problems existed between Turkey and these financial institutions, Ozal recalled that Turkey used up all loans extended by them. Ozal added that the he expected Turkey's relations with the World Bank to be more intensified in the coming year. Ozal expressed satisfaction over talks he had with the officials of certain banks in the United States and the finance ministers of various other countries.

GENERAL EVREN ISSUES RELIGIOUS HOLIDAY MESSAGE

[Text] Ankara, 7 Oct (AA) -- Head of State General Kenan Evren issued a message to the nation today marking the beginning tomorrow of the 4-day Kurban Bairam (Feast of Sacrifice).

"Whatever his religious or sectarian beliefs, man must be free to believe in his God, enjoying freedom of conscience free from any kind of oppression and violence," General Evren said, adding that such beliefs and convictions should not be exploited or turned into social events and most important of all, should never be reflected on the state administration, thus underlining the importance of secularism.

"Very recently the Turkish nation witnessed how anarchy and terror victimized affiliates of different Islamic sects, driven into hostility towards each other and became the target of heinous fatal operations, General Evren said, recalling that those responsible for these incidents had been condemned by the whole nation.

"Muslim religion was mainly based on love for the fellow men, honesty, justice, high morals and merit, and Muslims should fully harbour such spiritual values without hoping for any kind of recompense," General Evren noted, adding: "The Sep. 12 operation has established a climate of calm and confidence in the country thanks to the sincere support of the people. To further reinforce this climate, I hope and wish that all my countrymen will make use of this bairam."

Expressing his good wishes for Turkey and for the whole Islamic world on the bairam, General Evren went on to say: "We wish that friendly and fraternal Islamic countries resolve their differences through friendly and fraternal talks without resorting to arms. Our wish is all the more significant in the light of the fact that Islamic countries have strategic raw materials as well as being geopolitically situated."

AUSTRIAN MINISTER VISITS, DISCUSSES COAL, REFUGEES

[Text] Ottawa -- Austria will seek to establish closer contacts with private Canadian aid organizations in an endeavor to permit more East European refugees to emigrate to Canada. A Canadian trade delegation has been invited to Austria to discuss the possibilities of coal deliveries to Austria. These are two of the concrete results of the first day of Foreign Minister Pahr's official visit to Canada.

On Monday, Pahr met his Canadian counterpart Mark MacGuigan for a 2-hour talk. In this talk, which was marked by an excellent climate, the two ministers noted a far-reaching identity of the two countries' views on most world political questions.

SOVIET MINISTER'S VISIT PROVOKES CONTROVERSY

PM071329 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 3 Oct 81 p 1

["Own diplomatic correspondent" report]

[Text] A conflict between the Soviet Embassy and the Foreign Ministry threatens to overshadow the visit which the Soviet minister of machine building for animal husbandry and fodder production, Belyak, will make to the Netherlands from 5 through 12 October. According to the Russians, this is an official visit. According the Netherlands, it is merely a working visit.

After the occupation of Afghanistan by the Red Army, the second chamber last January adopted by an overwhelming majority a motion in which, as protest of the invasion, all Russian-Netherlands contacts at ministerial and top official levels were suspended. Minister Belyak's schedule nevertheless includes a call on the Netherlands agriculture minister. According to a Soviet Embassy spokesman, "talks" will be held at this meeting. The Foreign Ministry spokesman denies this and describes the meeting as nothing more than a "courtesy visit."

"Since January there has been no change at all in government policy. Official contacts are still being avoided and, during the meeting between the two ministers next week, no talks will be held. It is nothing more than a short courtesy visit," the Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

According to the Russian version, there are good reasons for calling this an official visit, considering that Minister Belyak was invited a few months ago by then Agriculture Minister Braks. This is not disputed by the Netherlands. A spokeswoman from the Agriculture Ministry pointed out that Braks sent the invitation expressly for a working visit. "The visit has come about on Minister Belyak's initiative. He indicated that he was interested in a visit to the Netherlands, but that an invitation from his Netherlands counterpart was necessary. Following this, Minister Braks sent a letter to Moscow, indicating that he agreed to a working visit by Minister Belyak," the spokeswoman said.

During his stay in the Netherlands, Minister Belyak will visit a number of arable and livestock farming concerns. The Netherlands agricultural community still has some interest in agricultural contacts with the Soviet Union.

EEC, THIRD WORLD ASSOCIATES CONFER IN LUXEMBOURG

[Marcel Scotto report: "Ten Asked To Make Measures To Ensure Multinationals Respect UN Pledges in South Africa"]

[Text] Luxembourg -- The sixth annual session of the consultative assembly of the EEC and the 61 associated African, Caribbean and Pacific [ACP] states, attended by 244 parliamentarians, was held in Luxembourg from 28 through 30 September. The session ended with the adoption of two resolutions. The first condemns Pretoria's policy in southern Africa; the second calls for an improvement in the running of the Lome II Convention.

The assembly traditionally recalls "the Namibian people's inalienable right to self-determination and national independence" and condemns "South Africa's acts of war" against states in the region. This year the South African intervention in Angola in August facilitated the ACP countries' task in securing a more specific condemnation of Pretoria. The final document calls on the ten to "take the necessary measures to prevent the multinationals from pursuing activities contrary to the pledges made at the United Nations."

The resolution also calls for community aid "for the Angolan victims of the South African incursions," but this hope comes up against a problem. Angola, which has not joined the Lome Convention, theoretically benefits from the ten's aid to unassociated Third World countries, but the funds have never been released owing to the FRG's veto. Bonn has frozen aid to a country which (like Mozambique) is linked to CEMA and does not recognize the "Berlin clause" in the Rome treaty, which includes the western sectors of the former German capital in the community territories.

With regard to the Lome Convention, the assembly calls for improvements without challenging its orientation.

Pisani, European commissioner for cooperation, says: "Africa...has allowed itself to be attracted by the mirage of industrialization before solving the problems of agriculture and food." The effects of this policy are uncontrolled urbanization accompanied by a drop in food products and a food shortage which will grow worse. The commissioner concludes by expressing doubts on the systematic financing of major works by the European development fund.

The commissioner's ideas received a qualified welcome from the ACP countries. While waiting for Brussels to explain its plan in more detail, they prefered to concentrate on an improvement in the way in which the convention's provisions are implemented; free access to the European market for their textiles; increase in community funds for the stabilization of income from exports (stabex), which, in 1980, only covered half of the ACP countries' losses; increase in the guaranteed price of sugar. A resolution calls for the supply of agricultural products by the community on preferential conditions, an increase in the ten's food aid and their adhersion to the international sugar agreement.

SYNAGOGUE TERRORIST CONFESSES TO NITTEL MURDER

[Excerpt] The murder of Vienna City Councilman Heinz Nittel has now been cleared up. Husham Rajih, one of the two Arabs arrested after the attack on the Vienna synagogue, has made a full confession which has already been partly verified by police.

Rajih is a member of Al-'Asifah, a terrorist group around Abu Nidal. He was instructed to choose an "attractive target" for an attack. The terrorist, who has been living in Austria since December 1978 and is a student at the Vienna technical university, "chose" Heinz Nittel. He learned from press reports that Nittel was president of the Austrian-Israeli Society. His suggestion was accepted by Al-'Asifah. Rajih acquired a photograph of Nittel, spied out his habits and suggested 1 May as the date for the assassination.

A contact -- the same man who had been in touch with him before the synagogue attack -- brought him the weapon used in the crime, a Makarov pistol. Rajih left his passport with the case officer as collateral for the gun. The perpetrator described the manner in which he set about Nittel's assassination in such a way that it is evident that he was well-trained for such operations. He took a taxi, changed taxis en route to City Councilman Nittel's house, and alighted in the vicinity of the house. Having fired three shots through the closed windows of the car in which Nittel was about to leave, he fled and later took a taxi to Huetteldorfer Strasse, where he picked up another taxi to his rendezvous with his case officer, to whom he returned the weapon. Thereupon he was given back his passport.

As Dr Danzinger, director general of public safety, declared, the murderer confessed to the murder only after a lengthy interrogation. He and his organization had wanted to torpedo the Middle East pacification policy actively pursued by Chancellor Kreisky for a long time. Rajih also admitted to having once met with Dr Ghazi Husayn, the expelled former PLO representative in Austria. Police were unable, however, to ascertain whether Husayn had known anything about the planned murder.

Danzinger stressed that every effort would be made to throw light on the background of the affair. Police also contacted the FRG authorities regarding possible connections with the notorious "Wehrsportgruppe Hoffmann." The perpetrator made his confession as early as on Sunday. Although it would have been desirable in the interest of the investigation not to inform the public about the confession, so many people had learned about it during police inquiries that secrecy could no longer be maintained, Danzinger said.

In the time between City Councilman Nittel's assassination and the attack on Jewish citizens in Vienna's first district, the attacker lived in Vienna as a student.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON CAIRO TALKS

DW091033 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0635 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Excerpt from correspondent Ruppel interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on his talks with Acting Egyptian President Husni Mubarak in Cairo -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] What is your firsthand impression of the new man and of his continuation of the policy pursued by his predecessor?

[Answer] What impresses me is the optimism with which he has begun his job, an optimism with regard to the internal stability of the country, and the determination of the vice president to continue President as-Sadat's policy consistenly if he is elected. You must know that Mubarak enjoys great prestige and support in the Egyptian Armed Forces and that he is one of those in Egypt who in the past also forcefully supported the course of President as-Sadat.

Two things are now important: First, it is necessary for Egypt's friends to show quite clearly that they are standing by Egypt in these difficult times and to help Egypt also in the future. Second, people in Israel must be aware that headway in the negotiations is in the interest of the region's stability.

[Question] Can you highlight the points which are important in this very region for German policy but also, and beyond that, for the policy of Europe and the West in general?

[Answer] I think it has been overlooked quite often in the past that President as-Sadat not only endeavored to ensure permanent Egyptian-Israeli peace and thus to secure the return of the occupied Egyptian territories, but that he also repeatedly pointed out that the implementation of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people -- meaning the key issue of the Middle East conflict -- is absolutely necessary. In this respect, steps will be necessary now to make comprehensive peace possible. We are interested in seeing that Egypt's stability remains secure, that Egypt continues its peace policy and that, beyond the Egptian-Israeli peace, concrete steps become possible for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East.

No doubt, the governments friendly with us, and which consider themselves friends of Egypt as well, will make it clear in no uncertain terms that Egypt may count on us in this difficult and serious situation.

GENSCHER MEETS IRANIAN, NETHERLANDS MINISTERS

'Brief Exchange' With Musavi

LD081736 Hamburg DPA in German 1610 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Genscher today received Iranian Foreign Minister Hoseyn Musavi for a talk at the Bonn Foreign Office. According to an announcement, they had a "brief exchange of views." No further information was given by the Foreign Office.

It was learned that the Iranian foreign minister made a stopover in Bonn during his return flight from New York to Tehran.

Discussion With Van der Stoel

LD081618 Hamburg DPA in German 1524 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Genscher today received his Netherlands counterpart Van der Stoel for a detailed discussion on European affairs and the situation in the Middle East.

According to the Foreign Minister, the two ministers agreed that it is important to take steps toward a comprehensive and just solution of the Middle East conflict. Genscher also briefed Van der Stoel on his visit to Cairo.

GOVERNMENT RESCHEDULES POLISH DEBT REPAYMENT

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- With the rescheduling of Polish debts, the Federal Republic has made a further contribution to overcoming the country's serious balance of payments problems. The Foreign Ministry said that Secretary Hans Werner and Polish Ambassador Jan Chylinski signed a governmental agreement in Bonn today on the settlement of Polish obligations resulting from trade deals and bank credits which the Federal Government had underwritten. In accordance with the agreement, medium and long term guaranteed debts of DM647 million, due by the end of the year, are rescheduled. These debts must now be paid by 1989 after a 4-year period of grace. With this rescheduling of debts, Bonn is fulfilling an agreement reached by the Western creditor countries and Poland on 27 April in Paris.

LAMBSDORFF MEETS WITH BULGARIA'S KHRISTOV

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct (DPA) -- Bulgarian Trade Minister Khristo Khristov and Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff agree that political and economic relations between the Federal Republic and Bulgaria have developed favorably and positively. At a meeting on the occasion of the sixth session of the German-Bulgarian Economic Commission, which ended in Bonn today, the ministers advocated enhanced economic cooperation between the two countries in third countries also.

According to the Federal Economics Ministry, Lambsdorff and Khristov agreed that especially for further economic progress cooperation between Bulgarian and Federal German firms and organizations play a great part. Bulgaria wants cooperation above all in energy economy, the chemical industry and engineering. Lambsdorff promised Khristov that he will use his influence in Brussels for the Bulgarian desire for EEC preferential tariffs.

IRANIAN CONSULATE OFFICIALS REQUEST ASYLUM

[Text] Hamburg, 9 Oct (DPA) -- In protest at the executions in Iran, the present head of the Iranian Consulate General, Consul Kamran Malek, his two vice consuls and the head of the consulate's finance department have relinquished their positions and asked for political asylum in Hamburg. According to Malek, all four informed the Hamburg Senate yesterday of their decision. He said that they would submit their formal applications for asylum to the police.

Malek said in a DPA interview that lately work in the Consulate had become increasingly unbearable through the constant presence of eight armed members of "Khomeyni's secret service." The secret servicemen had even spent the night in the consulate's rooms. The atmosphere had been "foul" and "poisoned," Malek said he was disappointed that human rights organizations such as Amnesty International, which protested conditions in Iran in the shah's time, have not opposed the wave of executions under Khomeyni in the same way. "The whole world is keeping silent and is not reacting at all to the fact that hundreds of our young people are being executed daily," he said.

Following the departure of Malek, Vice Consuls Mehdi Monshi and Hseyn Moshari and the head of the finance department, Shirin Mazdyasna, the consulate no longer has any diplomatic staff. The former acting head of the consulate, Consul Mohammad Keyarishi, is in Tehran for the purpose of reporting. Malek was the acting head of the consulate general in Hamburg in his absence.

MITTERRAND-SCHMIDT TALKS DEMONSTRATE AGREEMENT

[Text] Latche, 8 Oct (DPA) -- French President Francois Mitterrand and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today demonstrated from considerable to complete agreement on all important questions.

During a break in their 2-day meeting at Mitterrand's country residence in Latche, southwest France, they gave a short news conference before lunch. Schmidt, in a lighthearted mood, said: "The outside world seems to have been amazed at the degree of agreement on all foreign policy questions."

Both the German and the French delegations pointed to the friendly and relaxed atmosphere and the frank and direct discussion at these "private talks." A personal contact has been established between Schmidt and Mitterrand, the French side noted with satisfaction.

An approximation of views is considered possible even in the contrasting ideas about achieving an [economic] upswing in Europe. In this regard, Schmidt expressed the wish for a reduction in German payments into the community budget. As of noon today, there has been no French reply to this. Schmidt also spoke of good prospects for concessions and a coming together of ideas concerning Europe.

European basic principles were at the center of today's talks which focused mainly on the political impulse wanted by Bonn and the economic and social emphasis desired by Paris.

In yesterday's 3-and-1/2-hour talks, Schmidt and Mitterrand dealt with the NATO alliance, East-West policy and other international questions, including the consequences of President as-Sadat's death. French sources said that both sides assessed President Reagan's arms decision as a favorable condition for the Eurostrategic medium-range weapons talks which begin in Geneva on 30 November. The French side stressed that Reagan's measures help to end the arms imbalance which favors the Soviet Union. The French delegation also noted that Chancellor Schmidt is less worried than expected about the fact that the United States has not been sufficiently sympathetic to the pacifist trend in the Federal Republic.

Mitterrand also reported on his state visit to Saudi Arabia and his talks with Crown Prince Fahd on the Saudi Middle East Peace initiative. He assured that France would on no account become active as mediator in the Middle East. The two politicians agreed that a speedy solution to the Namibia conflict would act as a brake on the expansionist urge of the Soviet Union and Cuba.

Paris Notes 'Rapprochement'

LD082102 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] As-Sadat's assassination evidently was on the agenda of the French-German summit in Latche. At his Landes residence, President Mitterrand chatted with German Chancellor Schmidt for 3 hours. Both will go to Cairo to attend the funeral of the Egyptian president. Mitterrand and Schmidt also discussed East-West relations and purely European matters. Both were full of smiles at the end of the talks: We have a wide covergence of views on all matters, Helmut Schmidt said. It is true, admitted Francois Mitterrand, who at the same time made it quite clear that there is no Paris-Bonn axis. Perhaps he said this merely to reassure Britain's Margaret Thatcher. In any case, he said it. Here is Francois Mitterrand talking to Bernard Valette this afternoon in Latche:

[Begin recording] The Bonn-Paris axis is an expression [words indistinct] which was never adopted by anybody. In other words, it is to some extent a translation, and an inaccurate translation at that, which could have caused some suspicion of susceptibility, of a desire by Federal Germany and France to exercise an authoritative power within the community -- that is all. One must always watch the vocabulary used. However, it is evident that there are priviledged relations between our two countries. [end recording]

It is reported that the rural location of the talks at Latche has permitted a considerable rapprochement between Francois Mitterrand and Helmut Schmidt and that Germany was given assurances by France concerning the acceptance of nuclear waste at La Hague nuclear station.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON AFTERMATH OF AS-SADAT DEATH

[Text] External Relations Minister Cheysson discussed the consequences of President as-Sadat's death in the National Assembly on Wednesday, 7 October. In reply to a question from Branger (national independent deputy for Charente-Maritime), Cheysson stated:

"The withdrawal from the last occupied territories, as laid down in the Camp David agreements, must be carried out. However, those agreements were inadequate and President as-Sadat's ambition was to go further, in the service of the Arab nation. France is determined to play a role in this march toward peace. The friendship which it maintains with the countries in the region authorizes it to do this. It will not allow itself to be frightened either by threats or by violence or bloodshed, whether it is President as-Sadat or one of his ambassadors whose blood is shed."

"I fear," the external relations minister continued, "the start of a new struggle between the United States and the USSR, wishing to establish their supremacy over the region. But, I repeat, it is up to the peoples of the region and they alone to settle the present problems by negotiations. We will, of course, discuss the consequences of the tragic event which has just occurred with our European partners. The president has had a meeting with Chancellor Schmidt and the ten will meet in London 13 October. Finally, there will be a European Council meeting in November. We hope that despite the blow it has suffered Egypt will meanwhile pursue its march toward peace. In this respect, the calm and sense of responsibility demonstrated by President as-Sadat's aides and the respect for the Constitution which they have shown and to which we pay tribute are encouraging factors."

MINISTRY SPOKESMAN ON CHEYSSON VISIT TO POLAND

[Maurice Delarue report: "Cheysson to Visit the 'Poland of the Renewal'"]

[Excerpts] "The visit which External Relations Minister Cheysson will make to Poland from Thursday through Saturday, 8-10 October, is of exceptional importance," a Quai d'Orsay spokesman stated on Tuesday. "It is symbolic that the first visit by a member of the new French Government to East Europe should be the first visit by a French minister to the Poland of the renewal." This last expression is a find and will certainly be used again -- it has the advantage of paying combined tribute to the present government in Warsaw and the dissidents without whom there would be no renewal on the banks of the Vistula.

This visit, the Quai d'Orsay spokesman added, reflects "the excellent state of French-Polish relations" and "heralds" the visits which Premier Mauroy and the president will make to Warsaw next year. The spokesman also recalled that Cheysson's visit is part of "the regular consultation" at foreign minister level, decided upon when Gierek, then Polish leader, visited Paris in 1972 and confirmed in the "charter of the principles governing friendly French-Polish cooperation" signed by Giscard d'Estaing during his visit to Poland in 1975. It should be remembered that President Mitterrand's predecessor held many official or private French-Polish summits and that it was at Gierek's invitation that he had a meeting with Brezhnev in Warsaw in June 1980, for which he was strongly criticized.

HERNU OUTLINES DEFENSE BUDGET AT PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Paris, 8 Oct (AFP) -- Defence Minister Charles Hernu today presented his draft defence budget for 1982 and expressed the view that France must rapidly strengthen its army and nuclear force.

"The existing or potential imbalances," he told a press conference, "between the conventional armies and strategic forces of the big powers will provoke, for want of a limitation agreement between the superpowers, a period of maximum danger in 1984-85.

"We must act in such a way that in the middle of this decade France will be in a position to completely ensure its defence and security. That is what the proposed military budget for 1982 begins to indicate."

France's nuclear force, he said, would have to be strengthened, and measures in that direction, were under study.

"We cannot envisage," he said, "that our nuclear force be considered an element of negotiation between the two superpowers. Nor can we envisage that our entire armed services and our nuclear force be considered a stake in the discussion that will, and must, open between them" at Geneva next month.

"It is true," he added, "that the nuclear deterrent might be circumvented by indirect strategy, whether through military interruption of our supplies, terrorism, or assassination of heads of state. All that must be studied in its entirety.

"Our military tools must be adapted to the threats of today's multiform world by being able to act rapidly in complex situation without its freedom of use being compromised by anyone."

The draft budget represents an expenditure of 122,855,000,000 francs (about 24,571,000,000 dollars), which will be devoted primarily to new weapons. These include the building of a sixth strategic nuclear submarine, to be launched in 1985, the finalising of the M4 naval missile, which will have a 450 km (about 280 mile) range and six nuclear warheads, continued equipment of the Albion plateau strategic missile silos in southern France, and the finalising of a medium-range ground-to-earth missile to be fitted to Mirage-4 jets in 1991 or 1992.
Mr Hernu said these budget priorities meant that "the degree of trainings of our troops will not be stepped up as much as one might have wanted."

France's military expenditure will represent about 3.9 percent of its gross national product in 1982 against 3.85 percent in 1981. The percentage may rise to 3.94 percent in 1983, Mr Hernu said.

MINISTER FABIUS EXPLAINS 1982 FINANCE BILL

PM081531 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Oct 81 pp 28-29

[Serge Marti report: "Any Point Scored Against Inflation Is a Defeat Inflicted on Unemployment"]

[Excerpt] "A desire: employment. A method: recovery. A means: solidarity." With these three main points, defined at the cabinet meeting a few hours previously, Fabius, minister-delegate with responsibility for the budget, opened his press conference devoted to the 1982 finance bill before almost 200 journalists on Wednesday, 30 September.

Recovery is the objective which the government has set itself and it "must first improve the economic situation and reverse the unemployment trend to deal with the French people's main anxiety," Fabius said by way of introduction, immediately ruling out any idea of giving priority to inflation over unemployment and vice versa: "For France that alternative is meaningless. Any point scored in the battle against inflation is a defeat inflicted on unemployment. Any unemployed person who finds work is a branch taken off the fire of inflation, and economic recovery depends on this twofold action."

What about a resumption of growth in 1982? Fabius believes it is not only "possible" but puts it at 3.3 percent, to the nearest decimal point, as against only 0.5 percent this year -- a hypothesis which is accompanied by other economic parameters which are deemed essential. Domestic consumption would increase by 2.5 percent next year, after a 2 percent increase in 1981; investments by nonfinancial enterprises will increase by 3 percent whereas they fell by 4.5 percent this year; imports should increase by 5.1 percent in 1982 (as against a negative percentage of 3.5 percent this year); growth in exports would seem more moderate -- 4.0 percent as against 3.3 percent for the same periods of reference; the increase in retail prices should be slowed down considerably next year, falling to 11.0 percent gradually over the year, as against this year's rate which will probably be 14.2 percent.

After defining the overall scheme on which the 1982 budget is based, Fabius stressed the importance of public spending "intended for investment and jobs" which will increase by 27.5 percent in volume and by around 13 percent in value reaching Fr788.1 billion -- "an increase which can be explained by the extent of the needs to be met and by the need for recovery."

What sector will be given preference? "Anything which concerns the future," the minister asserted, stressing in passing the 30 percent increase in the civilian research budget and in the increase in the cultural budget which is thus increased from Fr3 billion to Fr6 billion. In allocating the money, Fabius has, nonetheless, not forgotten energy savings for which funds will be increased by 55 percent; economic and social development fund loans to industry, which soared from Fr1.5 billion to Fr7 billion; the doubling of grants to young farmers; the 74 percent increase in the grant for the professional training and job placement of young people and, of course, employment. As far as the last heading is concerned, "there will be 61,000 more public jobs in 1982, in other words, a total of 125,000 between the 1981 and 1982 budgets."

The government is determined to "pursue its action to help the most underpriviledged categories," and intends to extend the impact of the measures announced in June and July by increasing the minimum old age pension to Fr2,000 per month on 1 January and increasing old age allowances by another 25 percent, Fabius added, citing in addition a number of other measures concerning, in particular, agriculture.

In 1982, this ambitious program will lead to a budget deficit of Fr95.4 billion, in other words, some 2.6 percent of the gross industrial product -- a figure which the minister says is "among the lowest of the comparable countries, aside from the United States" and which "will be financed without excessive recourse to increasing the money supply," the minister asserted, turning to the subject of fiscal receipts in 1982 which he placed under the heading "solidarity."

These measures, most of which are known, relate to all kinds of things like the wealth tax, the additional unemployment contribution, the contribution levied on banks and oil companies, which are all "part of an overall program aimed at reforming our tax system which is at present unjust and frequently not very effective," Fabius added. He ended his "performance" on a subject about which he obviously has strong feelings: the struggle against tax fraud. Initially, this struggle should bring in around Fr3 billion to the state coffers as early as next year, thanks to the strengthening of the present system, notably to combat moonlighting and to the introduction of a series of legislative measures including such diversified measures as the registration of unassessed securities, increasing checking of computerized methods or..." the creation of a kind of Interpol to combat tax fraud."

PCF ON EXPULSION OF 'COMMUNIST ENCOUNTERS' GROUP

PM081117 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 Oct 81 p 3

[Apparent text of PCF Central Committee Secretariat statement issued in Paris on 1 October: "A Choice Contrary to Party Rules"]

[Text] On 18 September, the PCF Central Committee recalled the value of the principles governing the party's democratic life and demonstrated that the attitude adopted by the members of the group which formed "Communist Encounters" could not continue.

By establishing a factional activity totally contrary to the rules which form the basis of PCF membership, they are aiming to impose on the party a method of operation which, by dividing the party into hostile groups, would ruin the idea of each Communist's participation in the life of his party and would deprive it of its revolutionary efficacy.

The Central Committee resolution launched an urgent appeal to these party members, demonstrating the clear choice facing them: either they join the party's democratic life to defend their ideas in the broad and free preparatory discussion for the 24th congress or they place themselves outside the party.

Their reply was abrupt and immediate and they did not even take the time to seriously consider it. They decided to continue and step up the factional activity. They continued to publish and send their publication to thousands of Communists. They announced a series of public meetings and continued to use the media to attack the PCF and its leadership.

Faced with this attitude, which it regrets but rejects as absolutely contrary to the party's statutory rules and the requirements of its democratic life, the Central Committee is forced to observe that the members of the group which founded "Communist Encounters" have placed themselves outside the party. It records this fact.

AMBASSADOR TO GDR RESIGNS; REPLACEMENT NAMED

PM240759 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Sep 81 p 6

[Text] The JOURNAL OFFICIAL for 13 September announced the appointment of Maurice Deshors, France's consul general in Zurich, as ambassador to the GDR, replacing Xavier de Nazelle, who was appointed to that post in January 1981. De Nazelle is the only diplomat to have resigned during the formation of the Mauroy government on the grounds that he could no longer fulfill his duties in the GDR after the entry of Communist ministers into the government.

FATAH MEMBER KILLED IN ROME BOMB BLAST 9 OCT

[Text] Rome, 9 Oct (AFP) -- A military leader of the Palestinian group Fatah was killed in a bomb blast in a Rome hotel early today, an informed source said. He was named as Abu Shara who was in Italy for an international conference on solidarity with Palestinian writers, journalists and intellectuals.

Conference delegate Monsignor Hilarion Capucci, former bishop of Jerusalem, said the explosion was not accidental, adding: "A Palestinian leader does not walk around with a bomb." Police said the blast caused major damage to the fourth floor of the hotel in the Via Veneto. They reportedly found a P-38 pistol among the debris.

SPADOLINI ASSURES REAGAN OF SUPPORT IN MIDEAST

[Text] Rome, 8 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Government assured United States President Ronald Reagan today that it shares his anxieties about the international repercussions Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat's death might set off and urged Western allies to keep in close and constant contact with each other to coordinate their peace moves. Premier Spadolini also gave assurances that his government would bar no efforts to tighten its friendship with Egypt in the letter he sent off to Reagan today in reply to a message.

The U.S. President dispatched messages to Washington's leading European allies after As-Sadat's assassination in Cairo Tuesday to remind them that it was the United States' "fundamental interest" to safeguard peace and stability in the Mediterranean. In his reply to the note today, Spadolini assured Reagan that Italy was fully aware of "the peculiar role (Egypt) played for the stability of a vitally important and nearby region."

He said the Rome government was pleased that the new Egyptian leadership pledged to pursue the peace efforts undertaken by As-Sadat, with specific reference to the Camp David agreements. "The Italian Government will do all it can ... even within the European Economic Community to promote a renewal of negotiations...in the framework of the Camp David peace process... which could gradually lead to a comprehensive settlement in which all peoples of the region were assured absolute security," the letter stated.

Spadolini went on to assure Reagan that his government will pay close attention to the developments of the troubled Middle East region. He voiced relief that, for the time being, the situation in Egypt appeared relatively calm and under the Cairo government's control, while agreeing with Reagan that "points of stability in the region had to be strengthened to assure an orderly leadership succession in Cairo according to constitutional procedures."

"And I also believe," the Italian Government leader stressed, "that it is our duty to consult frequently and closely, even at the highest levels, between our major friends and allies at such a sensitive time.... so that we may coordinate moves to pursue our common goals of stability and peace."

Before closing off, the premier promised to contact Reagan soon to inform him of the decision his government might take to help improve regional stability.

COLOMBO CONDEMNS REJOICING OVER AS-SADAT'S DEATH

AU081640 Rome ANSA in English 1537 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 8 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Government "deplores any inopportune and unacceptable declarations" concerning the Tuesday assassination of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat in Cairo, which "applauding the act, tend to give an unjustifiable legitimacy to violence and terrorism," according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. "Violence cannot but generate more violence in a reciprocally destructive spiral and whoever extols these methods cannot imagine that they are contributing to the search for peace," Colombo added, in remarks addressed to the Italian lower house Commission for Foreign Affairs here today.

Although As-Sadat is dead, Colombo continued, "the Italian Government remains convinced of the necessity of preserving the accomplishments already attained through the Mid-East policies of President as-Sadat, and of avoiding any weakening of the relationship between Egypt and Israel in the contex of following through on the normalization process between the two countries and the completion of the Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai."

The Italian diplomatic chief also maintained that Italy is convinced that it must operate "together with the Ten (European Community countries) to bring about a climate of reciprocal trust between all the parties in the conflict, including the Palestinians and those components of the Arab world who have assumed a position of greater hostility toward Camp David."

Commenting on the roots of the assassination attack, Colombo observed that "it would be irresponsible" to hazard a guess at this point on the origins of the shooting. "It would be an imprudent move," the minister continued, "to speculate on the existence of links between the attackers and forces outside Egypt because of the lack of any objectively reliable indications. The indications coming from Cairo in any case, point to the fact that the attackers' objective was not immediately the Egyptian regime itself, at least for the time being, but the physical elimination of the president."

"This interpretation" Colombo continued, "finds a confirmation in the fact that the process to replace the country's leadership is unfolding in a normal manner, according to the constitutional procedures."

In his Pariament appearance, Colombo also reconfirmed the Italian Government position concerning the issue of sending an Italian contingent to the Sinai peacekeeping force, a request made jointly to Italy from Egypt and Israel. Colombo, reiterating past comments, said that the Egypt-Israel proposal is in keeping with the United Nations Security Council resolution Number 242 and is a proposal destined to facilitate Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories.

Colombo added however that any decision must be made in the light of Italian relations with the Mediterranean area countries and after consultation with European partners. In any case, Colombo concluded, the problem will be confronted by the Italian Government as a whole.

L'UNITA COMMENTS ON FOREIGN POLICY DEBATE

PM081427 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 18

[Vera Vegetti report: "A Slender Majority on the Government's Choices"]

[Except] Rome -- A bare majority yesterday adopted the extremely brief resolution with which the five government parties expressed their confidence in the foreign policy line announced by Colombo in the parliamentary debate.

The vote by which the Christian Democratic, Socialist, Republican, Social Democratic and Liberal deputies approved Colombo's statements calling on the government to "pursue the policy of balance and peace which has been adopted" did not succeed in hiding the differences of position and the conflicts which had been expressed in the debate, or the fact that there is a significant measure of agreement on decisive points between Socialists and Communists on the subjects of peace and security.

The political novelty of these points of agreement was stressed by Comrade Berlinguer in reply to a journalists' question on terrorism during the press conference. The parliamentary debate," the PCI secretary said, "demonstrated that there is a rapprochement between the two parties. For instance, we saw the Communists' and Socialists' positions on two points converge: on the prior and principled refusal to accept the neutron bomb on Italian territory, and on the support which both we and our Socialist comrades attach to the Franco-Mexican statement on El Salvador. However, I would like to point out," Berlinguer added, "that both stances -- and I could cite others -- conflict with the exposition given by Minister Colombo on the government's behalf and with the fact that all the majority parties approved an agenda which essentially welcomed Deputy Colombo's statements."

CHANGES ANNOUNCED IN PCI'S TOP LEADERSHIP

[Excerpt] Rome, 6 Oct (ANSA) -- There have been some changes in the top echelons of the Communist Party (PCI). Adriana Seroni and Alfredo Reichlin, the latter until now the editor-in-chief of the party's "L'UNITA" daily, have been named to the Secretariat along with Enrico Berlinguer, (secretary), Mario Birardi, Gerardo Chiaromonte, Adalberto Minucci and Alesshandro Natta. Piola Torre has been coopted into the party administration and Claudio Petruccioli will take over as head of "L'UNITA".

Yesterday, the PCI leadership and the party's Central Committee discussed problems of international politics. The work of the Central Committee was opened by Romano Ledda, secretary of the party's international politics center, who claimed that the chances of war in the world were dangerously on the increase. He claimed that with regard to East-West relations, the USSR in the past years had only managed to match the military might of the U.S. but that Washington will not accept this. Ledda also criticized the Soviet Union; however, for having used force to try to extend its areas of influence, citing the intervention in Afghanistan in this regard. However, in his view the policies of the Reagan administration were "reactionary and adventuristic."

For this reason a dialogue between the U.S. and the USSR was an urgent necessity, he went on, so as to avoid the installation of cruise and Pershing missiles in Europe by 1983.

REPORTS ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE DEBATE

LD082028 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] Nuclear weapons will not be permitted to be stockpiled or installed on our territory -- this is perhaps the most important text approved this afternoon by the congressional Foreign Affairs Committee which is debating Spanish entry into NATO. The text is an amendment by the Catalan minority and was accepted by the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD]. However, the UCD did not accept a similar amendment by the socialist party, which was more radical than the one approved. The socialist amendment proposed a clause in the North Atlantic treaty preventing the nuclearization of Spain and even the transit of nuclear devices on Spanish territory.

The amendment approved is less specific since it contains only the obligation not to accept nuclear commitments during the process of negotiation and, moreover, leaves the door open for the Cortes to authorize a review of this position once it is part of the NATO military system. Finally, another amendment by the Basque Nationalist Party, which demanded the ratification within 1 year of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, was rejected. Nonetheless, the amendment had the support of the socialists and communists. The UCD and Popular Alliance voted against it.

Resolution Reached

[Text] The work of the congress' Foreign Affairs Committee dealing with NATO is now over. The work, without bringing together the different standpoints, will be transferred to the full Congress of Deputies on 27 October. Juan Jose Campo reports:

[Begin recording] Late tonight, after more than 25 hours of debate, the congress' Foreign Affairs Committee reached a resolution on Spanish entry into NATO. The resolution, which was voted against by the socialists, communists and Andalusian group, authorizes the government to (?give) the consent which the state requires in connection with accession to NATO. [sentence as heard]

Along with this authorization, a series of recommendations were also approved, which the government will have to take into account when negotiations commence. Thus when negotiations begin, it must consider that NATO must cover the security of both the peninsular territory and extrapeninsular territory, that is, Ceuta and Melilla must have their Spanish identity guaranteed. The government must also take into account that the recovery of Spanish sovereignty over Gibraltar is fundamental and that parallel with the negotiations with NATO, negotiations with the EEC should be accelerated. Finally, the government will not accept commitments which involve the stockpiling or installation of nuclear arms in Spain.

Strangely, all these recommendations, which did not appear in the initial resolution drawn up by the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD], had been proposed in the morning by the left although with some differences of nuance. For example, in the case of Gibraltar, the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party demanded guarantees before beginning negotiations and the UCD replied that if this were done, negotiations over Gibraltar would be impossible whereas once inside NATO it would be much easier. As we said, UCD rejected all these proposals by the left, proposals which in a different form had to be introduced in the final resolution via an amendment from the Democratic Coalition which in this debate was the great ally of UCD along with the Catalan minority. PCE'S CARRILLO MEETS WITH DPRK DELEGATION

SK070828 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0808 GMT 7 Oct 81

[Text] Pyongyang, 7 Oct (KCNA) -- Santiago Carrillo, general secretary of the Spanish Communist Party, on September 28 met the delegation of NODONG SINMUN headed by Choe Chil-nam which had attended the festival of "MUNDO OBRERO," the organ of the Spanish Communist Party, according to a report.

The head of the delegation conveyed cordial regards of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song to the general secretary of the Spanish Communist Party.

After expressing deep gratitude for the cordial regards, the general secretary asked the head of the delegation to convey back home his sincerest greetings of deep and unbreakable comradeship to the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and Comrade Kim Chong-il.

He said that the participation of the delegation of NODONG SINMUN in the festival of the organ of the Spanish Communist Party was a great inspiration to it.

He further said: The relations between the Spanish Communist Party and the Workers Party of Korea have been deep and close from long ago and further strengthened and developed entering this year.

I have a very deep and unbreakable, firm and intimate relation with the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song. This is why, though busy, I decided to meet the Korean comrades.

When I and my family went to Korea in August, the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and Comrade Kim Chong-il took utmost care for us and accorded us immeasurable hospitality. Accordingly, during our stay there we had a good rest physically and mentally and earned precious political food.

He asked the head of the delegation to convey the invariable, firm support of the Spanish Communist Party for the cause of Korean reunification to the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song.

The conversation proceeded in a friendly atmosphere.

KEKKONEN'S CONDITION 'REMAINS UNCHANGED' 8 OCT

LD081418 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] The condition of President Urho Kekkonen remains unchanged. The president's office announced today that there have been no changes in the president's condition compared with the situation last Monday. The president has mostly been up and about and has been out of doors every day. The next bulletin on the president's condition will be issued Monday. President Kekkonen has now been on sick leave for almost a month. The sick leave was extended last Tuesday, on the basis of a medical certificate, until 10 November.

DEFENSE MINISTER OBJECTS TO SPENDING CUTS

[Excerpt] Defense Minister Lasse Aikas considers that the defense spending outlined in the government's draft budget presents the defense forces with some unpleasant decisions. In a speech in Forssa on Sunday, Aikas said the defense spending as proposed is 300 million markkaa below the level recommended by the parliamentary defense committee.

Aikas expressed his amazement at the leftwing's attitude to security policy. He said the left has obviously completely forgotten that sufficient striking power within the defense forces is a precondition for the credibility of the country's security policy.

COMPANIES CONCLUDE PROJECT DEALS WITH IRAQ

[Text] Finnish companies are expanding their exports to Iraq. The major share of Finnish project exports have so far covered projects such as roads, bridges and electrification schemes. Many plans for new projects are being discussed, Commerce and Industry Minister Pirkko Tyolajarvi said on her return from Iraq on Saturday.

An example of one new project is a contract signed by Valmet worth about 50 million markkaa. Valmet will start production of excavating machinery in Iraq in factory premises which are already finished. The intention is that later a new factory will be built so that annual production can increase to 300-600 machines. The project also involves product development and research. Negotiations covering Valmet's establishment of a tractor factory in Iraq have already made great progress.

The total value of projects being discussed at present is 3.6 billion markkaa. A central problem is how imports from Iraq could be developed. The value of imports last year was almost 1 billion markkaa, mostly crude oil.

Electrification projects give employment to many Finns in Iraq. A month ago the latest contract for such a project was signed covering the electrification of 1,000 Iraqi villages. The projects are being carried out by Nokia, together with the Iraqi state power company. Nokia will also electrify two areas of Baghdad. The value of this project is just over 350 billion markkaa.

The Finnish delegation led by Minister Tyolajarvi contained representatives from Finnish firms Lohja, Nokia, Valmet, Kone, the Imco group, Raumo-Repola, Perusyhtyma and Wartsila. Some of them remained in Iraq for private negotiations.

Minister Tyolajarvi opened Finland Day at the trade fair in Baghdad during her visit. Twenty companies from Finland are taking part in the fair. During her visit Minister Tyolajarvi invited Iraqi Trade Minister Hasan 'Ali and Public Works and Housing Minister Muhammad Fadil to Finland. Last year Iraq topped the list of Finland's exports to the Arab countries and was second with regard to imports.

ZIMBABWE FORESTRY PROJECT -- Finland will participate in a major forestry research project in Zimbabwe. The objective is to make Zimbabwe self-sufficient in timber and to make exports possible at a later stage. The value of the whole project is over 30 million markkaa. The agreement was signed in Salisbury on 6 October by Foreign Trade Minister Esko Rekola and Zimbabwe Natural Resources and Water Development Minister Joseph Msika. Rekola met with President Canaan Banana on Monday. [Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 7 Oct 81 p 12 PM]

FOOTWEAR EXPORTS TO USSR -- Finland's shoe exports are now mostly going to the Soviet Union. Exports to the West last year decreased in value by around 37 percent, while exports to the Soviet Union in terms of number of pairs exported more than doubled and now total around 87 percent of all shoe exports. During the first 6 months of this year the shoe industry increased its output by almost 10 percent compared with the previous year. In the first half of the year the value of exports totaled 375 million markkaa, an increase of 70 percent, and quantity was 3.5 million pairs, an increase of 55 percent. SOVIET UNION TO DRILL FOR OIL IN BARENTS SEA

[FINSKA NOTISBYRAN report]

[Text] Stavanger -- The Soviet Union will start drilling for oil in the Barents Sea this year, but it is not known whether the drilling will take place in the area in which both Norway and the Soviet Union claim rights on the continental shelf, the Norwegian oil company Noroil's news service reported.

The Soviet Union has already carried out seismic investigations in the disputed zone, but was kept away for several years at the request of the Norwegian authorities.

It is reported that the Norwegian authorities will closely follow what the Soviet Union is doing when the first oil-drilling vessel for operations in Arctic waters is ready later this fall.

RAPE DEAL WITH USSR -- Sweden has been made an offer to sow 2,000 hectares of land in the Soviet Union with spring rape and to be responsible for the care of the area until the harvest. This is one of the results of Agriculture Minister Anders Dahlgren's visit to the Soviet Union last week. The 2,000 hectares will consist of 500 hectares in four different locations -- in Belorussian near Minsk, the Moscow area, the Baltic states and western Siberia. A number of Swedish companies, including Svaloef, which have been working on rape sales to the Soviet Union for a long time, are interested, but it is not known whether it will be possible to sort out all the details in time for next year's sowing. ASSEMBLY RATIFIES DISARMAMENT RESOLUTION

[Text] Meeting under AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou today, the House of Representatives unanimously approved a resolution on disarmament. In its resolution, the house warmly supports the full demilitarization of Cyprus in conjunction with the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem and expresses the belief this will contribute to the strengthening of peace and security in the area and the effort to convert the Mediterranean into a sea of peace and cooperation between peoples.

The resolution also calls upon all states to contribute toward the just and peaceful settlement of the Cyprus and the Middle East issues and other local disputes as soon as possible on the basis of the charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

The resolution stresses the significance to the whole of humanity of the resumption and continuation of the strategic arms limitation talks between the United States and the Soviet Union and condemns the use or the threat of the use of force in international relations. In addition, the resolution stressed that international detente, cooperation and peace must be based upon the condemnation of the use of force; upon the peaceful solution of differences; upon respect for the independence, sovereignty and the territorial integrity of all countries; and upon observance of the charter and the resolutions of the United Nations.

In conclusion, the resolution adopts the unanimous resolution of the 68th Interparliamentary Conference for a more active participation of parliaments on questions of international cooperation, achievement of disarmament and the preservation of world peace.

The resolution of the House of Representatives will be sent to the Interparliamentary Union and to the parliaments of all countries.

ARCHBISHOP CRITICIZES WALDHEIM INITIATIVE

NC081101 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 8 Oct 81 p 8

[Text] In a statement to I DHILINI, Archbishop Khrisostomos has criticized Waldheim's initiative and stressed that the UN secretary general has now become a lever of pressure on our side and not on the Turkish side as he would at least like to appear.

The archbishop further maintained that he does not accept the accusation that he has prejudged the Waldheim ideas and said specifically:

"I have not prejudged the UN secretary general's initiative, but experience has convinced us -- unfortunately -- that the present secretary general, Mr Waldheim, tries to appear as a lever of pressure on the Turkish Cypriot side but sometimes, indirectly or even directly, he becomes a lever of pressure on our side so that we accept some positions which are contrary to the UN principles and which violate the Cypriot people's rights.

"Another thing that we are particularly worried about concerns some of the backstage steps taking place in the dark.

"Justice is not afraid of the dark. Yet, in this case discussion is avoided and this is why we are worried.

"We would be happy to be proved wrong and see the UN principles implemented, including the withdrawal of all foreign troops and return of all the refugees to their homes," the archbishop concluded.

ATAKOL RETURNS FROM NEW YORK UN MEETINGS

[Text] Interior, Foreign and Defense Minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] Kenan Atakol returned to Lefkosa [Nicosia] last night from New York. During his visit, Atakol held bilateral talks with representatives of various countries at the UN headquarters in New York and participated in talks held between TFSC President Rauf Denktas and UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

In a statement at his arrival at Ercan state airport, Atakol said that his talks were very beneficial. He added that during his contacts he explained the concrete and comprehensive Turkish Cypriot proposals submitted to the Greek Cypriot side on 5 August for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

BOZKURT REPORTS PROBLEMS IN TV TRANSMISSION

NC020850 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 29 Sep 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] As of yesterday, the TRT [Turkish Radio Television] and the Greek Cypriot TV networks, which are serving the Cypriot audience, have entered a new period of television programming. Both TV networks have announced their new programs. When we look at the programs to be televised during the new period, it becomes obvious that TV competition will be taking place in Cyprus. Both TV administrations have included in their TV calendars attractive programs, serials and films so as to tie down their audience to the TV screen.

Color TV programs are now on the agenda. While the TRT is augmenting its efforts to launch color programs and change its system to suit this aim, the Greek Cypriot TV too has increased its color programs. In view of the increased likelihood that TV sales in the TFSC will no longer be subject to control, we were convinced that color TV programs will be televised for us too in the near future.

And yet, while all these developments are taking place, a rather unfortunate thing is happening at the TFSC. Moreover, this is a development which will reinforce the Greek Cypriot side in the TV struggle in Cyprus. This is briefly what has happened: It was known that the TV transmitter at Kantara, which transmitted the TRT programs to Cyprus, would soon be out of use. Following continuous efforts for a considerable period of time, this wornout transmitter was dismantled and another, which was less wornout, was obtained from Turkey. Unfortunately, the new transmitter can only transmit black and white programs. The old dismantled transmitter, however, could transmit color programs to Cyprus. In fact, certain TRT color programs could be watched from this transmitter.

As a result of this latest development, the TRT has lost its superiority in televising color programs to the Greek Cypriot TV and propaganda, because even if the TRT included color programs in its casts, the TV audience in Cyrpus would be unable to watch them. What is more, this bad luck comes at a time when the Greek Cypriot TV network has increased its color programs. Televising in black and white is gradually fading out in TV technology and all TV firms are switching to manufacturing color sets. This means we are going in the wrong direction.

PAPANDREOU KALAMAI SPEECH ATTACKS RALLIS

NC082247 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Oct 81 pp 1, 15

[Dispatch from special correspondent Yiorgos Votsis]

[Excerpts] Kalamia, 8 Oct -- Speaking last night at Kalamai before a large popular gathering, Andreas Papandreou launched the most acute attack he has ever launched against New Democracy and personally against Mr Rallis. The gathering included all the people of the city and it could only be compared to the popular uprising of 1944 at the time of the Liberation.

Papandreou said: "As a Greek I am embittered and disappointed because instead of presenting their platform to the people and apologizing for their destructive policy, Mr Rallis and his collaborators embark upon an indescribable dangermongering.

"They lie and say that we are going to socialize everything; but from here, from Kalamai, we clearly say; the socializations solely concern 10 families, solely the country's economic oligarchy."

Continuing in the same tone, and while the people were booing each time they heard Mr Rallis' name mentioned, Papandreou added:

"Mr Rallis: I had thought that regardless of your capabilities you are honest and sincere. I am sorry because you are lying every day over the television and at your gatherings. This is also one of the reasons why the people will definitely push you to the margin of history."

With similar sharp language and personally addressing Mr Rallis all the time, the PASOK chairman dealt with the particular problems of Messinia, which has always been represented not only in Parliament but also in the government, and yet is a most neglected and abandoned province of the country.

Without particularly dwelling on the national questions, and interrupted by the shouting of the slogan "Out of NATO forever," Mr Papandreou mentioned in his speech the national questions (the occupation of Cyprus by Attila, the Turkish threat to the Aegean, NATO support and backing for Turkey, the government concessions that emboldened Turkey and so forth) in order to address "a message to Turkey's political leadership."

"The Greek people want to live peacefully with the neighboring people of Turkey. Nothing is dividing us. On the contrary, we are united by the joint struggle for deliverance from foreign dependence. We claim nothing. However, we are not going to concede anything, not even an inch of our land, sea, submarine or air space. The sole way to safeguard peace in our region is to speak nationally, bravely and clearly; we offer an olive branch. But at the same time we say that we will not give away even an inch from our motherland, that we will defend our territorial integrity and our national independence."

Rallis Response

NC090042 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 8 Oct 81

[Text] Addressing a popular gathering at Alexandroupolis tonight, prime minister and New Democracy leader Rallis stressed among other things that the PASOK chairman has already realized the unfavorable response to what he has declared at various times, in connection with both the foreign and the internal policies which he intends to follow and which we explain to the people and rebuff. To free himself from his self-commitments, Mr Rallis said, he accuses us of embarking on dangermongering and lies.

Mr Rallis added: During my speeches, when I refer to PASOK's positions, I make use of their written statements. I shall repeat what I said at Serrai. If they denounce these statements even now, I am not going to refer to them again. But they will not do so, because they fear that if they renounce them, they will lose their Marxist supporters.

As for our foreign policy, Mr Rallis said, I have challenged our opponents -- because they embarked on triumphant statements over the Socialists' victory in France -- to tell us whether they agree with Mr Mitterrand's foreign policy. They failed to answer my repeated challenges, because they want to conceal that their policy is in full contrast with both the policy of France and of all the socialist parties of Europe. Mr Rallis added: It is solely in Greece that PASOK, by disassociating its position from that of all the European socialist parties, and contrary to what its leader was saying until 1970, is against Europe and in favor of the cooperation of Greece with the Third World. As for the lies, I challenge them to name even one inaccuracy. On the contrary, I accuse them of distorting and twisting truth.

The New Democracy leaders referred to the privileged treatment of Greek agrarian products by the EEC; compared to Turkish products, and pointed to the danger of exclusion of similar Greek products by Turkish products which would result if we withdrew from the EEC, and the association agreement with Turkey were in force.

Finally, Mr Rallis referred to the work carried out by New Democracy in the field of education and stressed that New Democracy is proud of this. Mr Rallis concluded his speech with a reference to the questions of the Evros area and the achievments of New Democracy in all fields of government activities.

MORE DETAILS ON TURKMEN NEWS CONFERENCE

[Text] Ankara, 6 Oct (AA) -- At his press conference Tuesday, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen confirmed that his government shares the concern voiced by Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Al Sa'ud over the possibility of strategic cooperation between the United States and Israel. He added most Islamic countries were similarly concerned as explained by their foreign ministers during the UN General Assembly in New York. Turkey had already expressed its opinion that no strategic consensus could be reached in the Middle East without a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, he noted. With regard to the Cyprus issue, Turkey was not opposed in principle to the UN secretary general taking new initiatives to close the difference between the views of the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot sides over the recent concrete proposals by Turkish Cypriots for a settlement of the issue, without altering the major tenets of the Turkish stand, Turkmen said.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT SPEAKS AT BUNDESTAG DEBATE

[Excerpts] I understand perfectly well that many people in our country, especially young people, are concerned over peace. I can very well understand that. The concern about peace, God knows, is justified. Actually, all of us here share the concern of many people about the constantly increasing, terrible arms in East and West. [applause] Just as all of us share the concern of many people in the world over the preservation of peace in the Middle East -- and this concern has not declined during the past week -- and just as probably the vast majority here in the Bundestag share the concern of many people in view of the growing readiness in important parts of the world to enforce and attain political ends by force.

Far be it from me to dismiss concern over peace or demonstrations for peace as mere commotion and I agree with Willy Brandt who said that he has experienced worse things on German soil than young people working for peace and disarmament. But for the benefit of the young people, I add one point: I belong to the very generation which is prepared to take seriously the young people's concern over peace, and not just listen but also to conduct a dialogue with them. I did that publicly, for example, at the Evangelical Church convention in Hamburg last summer. These were only incidental examples which attracted public attention. I am prepared to do this, and I do it too. But for the sake of internal peace, I address myself to all young people and ask them to be prepared to take seriously our concerns and our experiences as well. [applause]

As far as the Federal Government and I personally are concerned, the anxiety about peace is of primary importance. Peace and concern for the preservation of peace in and for themselves constitute a basic value, just like the concern for the preservation of freedom and for the guarantee of justice constitutes a basic value in our profound creed. [applause]

In May 1978, the Federal Government, after very difficult talks and negotiations with the Soviet leadership, with General Secretary Brezhnev, achieved a conformity of views subscribed to by both sides that is is important -- and I quote from the joint statement -- approximate equality and parity guarantees equal security as well as constitutes the precondition for the continuation of the policy of cooperation between us and the East, between West and East. Out of the serious concern over the preservation of peace, in 1979, Federal Minister Genscher and I once again explained very urgently to the Soviet leadership what consequences would necessarily ensue if the Soviet Union did not discontinue its medium-range weapons buildup which changes the balance of military power in Europe.

Unfortunately, by its continued medium-range weapons buildup, the Soviet Union failed to abide by the joint statement of May 1978. This led to the dual decision by the Western alliance which has been mentioned here repeatedly today. It is essentially attributable to the efforts of this Federal Government that this decision by the alliance on the modernization of Western medium-range weapons in Europe contains with equal status the clear offer to negotiate with the Soviet Union on mutual arms limitation. This is a realistic peace policy. The negotiations will begin next month, but as far as the creation of a counterweight on the Western side is concerned, we, or rather the Americans, would act in 1983, 1984, 1985 or 1986 at the earliest; this is how long it takes. This is a realistic peace policy. We are pursuing a realistic policy by not letting the dialogue between East and West be interrupted and by keeping the principle of moderation in mind.

To this day, we have thus coped with an important task and we will continue to do so in the future. We will continue doing this when the negotiations between Americans and Soviets on these medium-range weapons opens in late November. We tell both sides -- and that includes our friends in America just like the security partners in the Soviet Union -- in no uncertain terms that these negotiations must not be used to fix existing or daily increasing imbalances or to create any other kind of new imbalance. Our objective remains an equal balance of military forces on both sides, the same balance of deterrence options on both sides at a level which will be lower than it is today. [applause]

The spokesmen of the SPD and of the FDP, Messrs Brandt and Mischnick, and the Federal Government, especially Mr Genscher and I, are agreed that the ideal result of negotiations would be attained if counterarming on the American side were to become superfluous because the Soviet Union would be prepared to eliminate, via a mutual zero solution, the level of its arms buildup in nuclear medium-range missiles, a level which provokes counter-armament. It cannot be up to one side to establish what constitutes a balance; rather it is necessary to reach agreement on this laboriously. [applause]

This agreement would be facilitated if the Soviet leadership were prepared to make the level of its armament in this field fully visible; it would be facilitated if the Soviet Union would stop deploying an SS-20 missile each week. [applause]

These questions will be one of several subjects -- economic and other kinds of cooperation will be other important subjects -- when I have the honor and -- putting it into a statesman's terminology -- the real joy to speak with the Soviet general secretary, and Mr Genscher with his Soviet foreign minister counterpart, in the fall. I am saying real joy because I am gratified at seeing East and West talking seriously about these questions. [applause]

We will be conducting these talks as part of the Western alliance, as a contribution toward the process whose core is the negotiations between Washington and Moscow.

Mr Zimmermann mentioned the assassination of Anwar as-Sadat which shocked all of us, the assassination of a courageous, valiant man endeavoring for peace, an event which has once again made the entire world aware of the dangers that may emerge in the Middle East. We trust that those who now have to determine Egypt's destiny, the successors of President as-Sadat, will continue with all their strength the efforts for the peace process. And we appeal to the leaders in Israel on their part to abide by what has been agreed and to negotiate briskly so that real progress will be attained at long last. [prolonged applause]

In the European Community, we will, within the framework of our possibilities, make our contributions toward the peace efforts in the Middle East as well as elsewhere in the world for instance, next week during the North-South meeting in Cancun, Mexico. The parties of the government coalition, the FDP and the SPD, in the past elections have been given a clear-cut mandate to pursue this active peace policy. The Federal Government will live up to this mandate. [applause]

The Federal Government is aware that our friends and allies, but also the security partners on the other side, have confidence in this policy. We are in harmony with our friends and allies. I found renewed confirmation of this again only yesterday and the day before in very explicit but very trustful talks with French President Mitterrand. The accord with Francois Mitterrand, by the way, is applicable to both parts of the dual decision just as it applies to the optimum negotiated result of a mutual zero solution to which we aspire. [applause]

It is hard for me to understand that the organizers, and, as it seems, also some of the speakers, of tomorrow's demonstration do not, or do not want to, recognize the benefits and the success or progress of our persistent, practical peace policy scored to this day. [applause] The NATO decision did lead to the opening of negotiations between the world powers which otherwise -- it is my firm conviction and my political life's experience -- would not have materialized. [applause]

And if this is not recognized, then I have to call on all the honest people who consider themselves part of the peace movement or movements and the honest people who plan to demonstrate for peace in Bonn tomorrow: Reconsider carefully whether you have seriously and honestly weighed the information accessible to you for your peace proposals. Do not fall for any one-sided contentions. Do not, for instance, fall for the argument, that the Bundeswehr in truth has a mission other than the defense of our country. [prolonged applause] Instead, please ascertain whether your assessment of our security has properly taken the Eastern arms buildup into account as well. And call on all those who have nuclear weapons. We Germans are entitled internationally, under international law, as signatories of the nonproliferation treaty, to call on all those who possess nuclear weapons and who prepared this treaty and presented it to us for signature, to reduce their nuclear armaments without exception. This is written therein. [applause]

And beyond the nuclear weapons, call on all those who increase their arms spending and ask yourselves whether the manner of your engagement for peace opens roads that can be traveled; and try to help achieve that negotiations will be conducted for disarmament and for safeguarding peace. On the other hand -- and I am still appealing to those who plan to demonstrate here -- feel sure, please, that we, the politicians and deputies of the German Bundestag, do not want to classify the vast majority of the demonstrators as belonging in the same category as people who apply violence as a political instrument or who approve of such practice or even call for it. We do not wish to lump them together. [applause]

Definitely, we do not want to lump them together with such people who, in their spheres of rule, grossly disregard or trample on the freedom of the individual. [applause] And I would like to add that we do not want to drive you into political aloofness. On the contrary, but please keep in mind, too, that very shady figures have gotten hold of your coattails [applause], and do not allow such figures to misuse you.

It is perfectly clear to me, ladies and gentlemen, that the cause of peace cannot grow worse by communists getting hold of the coattails of those advocating peace. The cause of peace cannot became worse thereby. But by the same token, I am aware that we Germans must not and will not allow any influence to be exerted on our policy, on the pursuit of our German interests by people who on their part have made themselves the complaisant tools of the foreign policy of another state. [applause]

There are some people who would like to use the longing for peace by hundreds of thousands and millions of Germans for entirely different political ends. Unfortunately, it has become quite clear that the organizers -- I am referring to the organizers and not to the demonstrators -- refused to repudiate a number of supporting communist groups, whereby they also lost the chance to phrase their own appeals in a balanced way and not just one-sidedly. [applause]

Under the conditions of our country, it would be beneficial to the unequivocal character of the cause of peace if people would brush off their coattails all those who pursue entirely different interests. It is not beneficial to the cause of the Germans' freedom of decision for peace and for the individual steps necessary for preserving and consolidating peace if the organizational skill of the DKP and some of its front organizations exploit the understandable inclination of all young people to take action, to engage in action, such as, the Communist Worker Federation of Germany, the people's front against reaction, fascism and war, of the group of international Marxists or the Spartacus Federation and whatever else they call themselves. A manipulating following by such people who swallow the bait of the slogans of foreign governments harm the cause of peace. What we have to advocate is German interests. [applause]

German communists who seek to support foreign political ends in our country by means of manipulating arguments are mistaken; they are mistaken at best. But under our basic law, even such people are allowed to demosntrate in our country. The young people in our country must know, however, that my political friends are not allowed to demonstrate either in the GDR or in the Soviet Union. [prolonged applause] They should also know that there is no right to conscientious objection against military service in these communist states such as we have in our country. It appears to me that at the demonstration planned for tomorrow at least four different principal movements will take part: First, there are those who are pacifists by conviction. I repeat that they enjoy my respect as much now as in 1955 and this will be so as long as I live. [applause]

Second, there apparently is a rather large group which, on the one hand, believes that we cannot renounce a military balance between East and West and therefore also believes that we cannot renounce our membership in and our contribution to the Western alliance. On the other hand, it wants to see this balance achieved at lower levels than before. My sentiments lie with this group of the peace movement. [prolonged applause] The entire Federal Government wants to support this group and if I am not mistaken also the two coalition factions making up the Federal Government, and I hear calls that the opposition also wants to support it. We will hear this soon from Mr Kohl.

Third, there is a group which wants to renounce the equilibrium and is ready for unilateral disarmament by the West, or by the Federal Republic of Germany any rate, and in this respect I must say absolutely clearly that such a policy does not create additional security, but additional insecurity. We cannot agree with this. [prolonged applause]

And fourth, there is, as I said before, a small minority who represent the interests of other states and who want to persuade us that Soviet missiles serve peace, wehreas American missiles serve war. With those I could never have anything in common. [prolonged applause, interjections] For me, the struggle for peace is absolutely and inseparably linked with integrity.

The basic law, article 8, which was quoted earlier by my friend Willy Brandt, explicitly speaks of the right of all Germans to gather peacefully -- peacefully, the basic law says. I want to emphasize today once again the term peaceful gathering. This basic right to freedom of opinion, to freedom of public meeting can be suppressed by external interference, freedom can be suppressed from without. But it is also the use of force from within that can weaken this basic right. Only the peaceful exercise of this right is protected by the basic law. But this protection of the basic right to demonstrate, of free expression of opinion, must not be used with a view to assuming the place of institutions created by the basic law. According to the basic law, essentially, the German Bundestag and the Federal Government are authorized to decide upon and shape the policy of our state. Precisely because they claim for themselves the right of freedom of conscience, which they are permitted to enjoy, it would be very immoral if they were to expect that the men and women in this house or those in the Federal Government will let themselves be forced to pursue a policy which is against our own conscience. [prolonged applause]

This is not what is meant by taking one another seriously. In the recent past, the Federal Republic experienced the limits of peaceful demosntrations. The lessons of Bremen, Brockdorf, Berlin and those learned elsewhere show that demonstrations intended to be peaceful may get out of the control of their organizers. The spark force may flourish and take over good intentions. Anyone wanting to secure external peace is not permitted to break internal peace because peace starts at home with ourselves and, by the way, it also ends here at our country. [prolonged applause]

I appeal to everyone: Let us preserve internal peace. Otherwise, we will not be in a position to secure external peace. We the freely elected deputies of four great democratic parties must not allow ourselves to jump at each other's throats here in the Bundestag on any command from without. [applause]

For 8 years now I have led a coalition government formed by Free Democrats and Social Democrats, whose basic foundation is the will for peace, the continuation of a policy of detente and of security partnership between West and East. Also in the future, the Federal Government will do everything to ensure that negotiations are held with a view to achieving results so that the interests of the two world powers are balanced but that at the same time also our German interests are safeguarded. [prolonged applause]

MINISTER APEL DISCUSSES DEFENSE, PEACE ISSUES

DW121334 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1145 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Correspondent Reisenberger interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in Bonn -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Federal President Carstens in a newspaper interview a few days ago answered the question on whether he can understand young people demonstrating for peace by saying that we must respect the position of those demonstrating peacefully even if we consider this position erroneous. The federal president added that the young people obviously are reacting to feelings of anxiety. Mr Defense Minister, is such an anxiety over the potential outbreak of war in Europe in the foreseeable future justified in the concrete political and military situation? Are you yourself afraid of war?

[Answer] If we take a look at the past decades of European reality, we can see very clearly that this Europe has had peace despite a number of serious crises; let me only remind you of the construction of the wall in Berlin and the Soviet Union's invasion of Czechoslovakia. Call it nonwar, if you wish, but in any case, arms were not heard in Europe even in serious political crises. This is attributable to the fact that both sides know of each other that alliance systems protect their members, that the Warsaw Pact is perfectly aware that any infringement on NATO's territory will trigger incalculable risks for the Soviet Union and its allies. By this I mean to say that the situation in Europe is stable.

And since we are endeavoring with obvious success to achieve understanding and detente on the basis of this policy of military balance, peace in Europe is as safe as it has been over the past decades. There will not be any change in this respect in the next few years either.

As far as I am concerned, there is yet another element of unrest and concern, although this element is not in Europe but involves extra-European developments. Events leading to massive tensions outside Europe -- let us just visualize the disturbance in the crude oil supply to West Europe but also a clash of the superpowers outside Europe -- may well cause the spark to jump over to Europe. This definitely is a concern of a topical nature owing to developments of the past several days.

If our young people are concerned about peace here in Europe, then I do take this concern seriously. But to some extent this concern is also attributable to the fact that the debate on security policy has not been waged profoundly enough with the young generation and that the young generation lacks profound historical knowledge. And we, the adults, must admit this and try to make up for past neglects.

[Question] Minister Apel, you were the one who pointed out that the peoples of West Europe actually have been living for decades in the awareness that the balance of terror is peace-preserving. Now that the Soviet Union builds up its superiority especially in nuclear medium-range missiles people demonstrate against Western counterarmament exclusively. How do you explain that?

[Answer] Surely, this can also be explained by the lack of a clear enough increase in information. I must add, however, that it is the advantage of parliamentary democracy that figures we deem correct may be contested by those who also consider themselves to be scientists. Hence, depending on the angle of view and the goal in mind, it is possible to show that figures we deem correct are differently assessed. But this is not at all the point at issue.

Those criticizing the NATO dual decision or even pursuing its abolition must themselves answer two questions: The first question is: How can we do away with the threat potential of the Soviet medium-range missiles? Will we get rid of it by remaining one-sidedly weak? This is an illusion, I think.

And they must answer the other question: How do we propose to induce the United States and the Soviet Union to sit down at the negotiating table again anyway, if not by means of this progressive dual decision which will take NATO to the negotiating table and which will bring the Soviet Union to that table if and when counterarmament remains credibly visible? What I mean to say is this: Anyone wishing to eliminate this NATO dual decision will not only plunge NATO into turbulences but also stabilize the Soviet superiority; war will become more probable if preponderance exists. And, in particular, he deprives us of a central argument and element of our policy, namely, using what little power we Europeans have to urge the two superpowers to sit down at the negotiating table.

[Question] Eugene Rostow, the head of the U.S. delegation which is scheduled to talk with the Soviet Union on medium-range missile limitation in late November, was in Bonn the other day. Mr Minister, how do you assess the political will of President Reagan's U.S. administration to achieve a positive result with the Soviet Union?

[Answer] I haven't the slightest doubt that the U.S. Government wants these negotiations seriously and that it also wants to achieve results. I do not harbor any doubts because I am perfectly aware that the U.S. Government is just as committed to the dual decision as we are since its predecessor was a party to it. Governments just cannot at will repudiate decisions that have been made jointly. And I also derive from the policy pursued by the Americans that they do want these negotiations.

[Question] Do you consider the so-called zero option, which has been expressly accepted by Washington as part of the Western negotiation concept, as a concrete possibility for a solution?

[Answer] I consider it a concrete solution possibility if both sides aimed for this solution possibility, in other words, if the Soviet Union eliminated its armament lead. So it is up to the Soviet Union to make this zero solution possible. I admit that it is more difficult to scrap existing arms, arms the Soviet Union possesses, than renounce the production of nonexistent Western arms. That is exactly the problem we are facing in expecting the Soviet Union to make a significant contribution to the achievement of this ideal aim.

[Question] There exists a difference between the Western approach to zero option and that of the Soviet Union.

[Answer] I consider this as quite normal. Prior to the beginning of negotiations, every side will take its positions not only with regard to the aims of the negotiations, but also with regard to the contents of negotiations. I would not be surprised, therefore, if the Soviet Union would present a detailed but different negotiation offer than ours. It seems important to me to hold negotiations in such a way that progress will be achieved in time, while indicating to the other side that one can also negotiate on other problems thereafter. One can and must then also include other fields of the nuclear potential which bring influence to bear on Europe. It is important not to lose much time and to handle the problems concretely. I am convinced that the West is prepared to do it.

[Question] Do you fear that the so-called peace movement may have a negative effect on the willingness of young people to comply with military service?

[Answer] I do not fear this. One must give some credit to the young generation, including those who are active in the peace movement. The last decade was not a decade where the conditions of peace have been clearly viewed in detail and from every position; this issue has been insufficiently discussed in public. And it is good that we again have a public debate on the conditions of safeguarding peace in Europe -- but under two conditions. First, we must listen to each other. Second, the peace movement must work with peaceful means. Everything else would be a perversion of the peace movement. Also, the young people must know -- I should rather the young men -- that they must serve peace if they are physically and mentally in a position to do so, either in the Bundeswehr or in civilian service as conscientious objectors -- both would be a service for peace.

[Question] Could one say that negligence was involved regarding enlightenment of the people and particularly the youths with regard to the tasks of the Bundeswehr and of our defense organization? Minister Apel, you asked the ministers of culture and education of individual laender to introduce in the schools lectures on safeguarding peace and on the Bundeswehr.

[Answer] I consider the latter point really important. If you speak to 16 or 17-year-old young men today, you do not always realize what you are dealing with regarding civil service or the Bundeswehr. These people have an insufficient knowledge of the conditions for safeguarding peace in Europe. They lack a certain knowledge of history regarding the reasons for the partition of our country, to what great respect Hitler Germany was responsible for the situation in Europe and many more things. It would be good if the school could help in this respect. I want to make known two reservations, however. First, nobody wants and nobody expects military instructions or propaganda for the Bundeswehr. All one wants is understanding for the problems of peace policy in Europe. Second, we cannot overburden the schools. The schools cannot handle all the things which do not work in this society. It can make just a modest contribution. This is what I am asking for.

EPPLER ADDRESSES BONN PEACE DEMONSTRATION

[Text] Bonn, 10 Oct (DPA) -- A passionate appeal for ending nuclear arming was made by politicians, Christians and other peace movement representatives to those responsible in both the East and the West today at a rally held in Bonn. It was demanded that the West not implement the planned NATO counterarming with medium-range missiles. The speeches revealed a deep mistrust of the state's elected representatives.

SPD Presidium member Erhard Eppler -- whose participation in the rally started a violent conflict within the SPD and which brought criticism from Chancellor Helmut Schmidt -- said the aim of the peace movement is "to break the chain of preventive and counterarming, which is dragging us in the direction of an abyss." Eppler rejected the accusation of political one-sidedness and said that if the demonstrators turned against their own government and not the Soviet Government, it would be because most of them had elected that government and not the Soviet one. Therefore, that government is the partner to address.

"If the federal chancellor thinks we are trying to press him, he is correct," Eppler said. However, it is questionable whether in a democracy such pressure is only to be interpreted as a challenge. The peace movement, which Eppler described as a union of those "who no longer want to know anything about arming with those who know too much about it," showed that the old nations of Europe are more than chess figures on the board of the world powers.

Eppler stressed that he supports the Federal Government so far as he also wants negotiations between the world powers on medium-range missiles. He also respects the will for peace of those who want to achieve negotiations via the Brussels NATO dual decision. However, there are signs that the peace movement has done more to hasten the willingness of the Americans to negotiate than the Brussels decision."

Eppler expressly urged the followers of the movement to act peacefully: "Every stone which is thrown today is a stone against the peace movement." The peace movement has to become the majority and it can only achieve this if it works together with organized labor.

Papers Comment on Rally

DW121057 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 12 Oct 81

[From the press review]

[Text] KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU writes: The size and the discipline of the Bonn demonstration were impressive. It is symptomatic of our frame of mind that we are grateful when demonstrators do not pick up cobblestones. It is hardly likely that the rally of 250,000 people will turn German politics. But it does make evident the great unrest, the anxiety over the preservation of peace. But all of us share this anxiety. Such an important problem definitely cannot be solved with one-sidedness or with the remarkable self-awareness of the Bonn protest spokesmen who simply claim for themselves alone the monopoly of political morale. What they promulgate and demand is democratically legitimate. Yet nothing authorizes them to describe their ideas as being the demands of all the people.

The editorial of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE says: The great peace demonstration in Bonn took a different course than had been feared here and hoped there. What occurred was neither transgressions nor rhetorical excesses, but a rhetorical clash with Bonn's government policy. Lacking was not only the thundering terminology of the first nuclear death movement, for instance Gollwitzer's word of the nuclear strike of the Christians, but also the brilliance of big names and the spiritual stimulation once experienced from professors of Goettingen and Heidelberg. The gray-haired speakers in Bonn's Hofgarten, the people with sadly drooping mouths, remained careful -- on the one hand, out of their life's experience because the glance at the Soviet past does not necessarily strengthen confidence in the peaceableness of this opponent; and on the other hand, because they did not wish to seem one-sided, wherefore they found themselves in a dilemma. That's the way it is: If things are viewed from both sides, human commonsense, if existing, is bound to produce the idea that the Western demand for balance could not be so far-fetched after all in view of the deployment of one missile a week in the Soviet Union as against none over here.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE advocates: After the Bonn demonstration the peace movement has different features than it had before. It was not an alliance of communists with suspicious socialists or Social Democrats which dominated the scene. Not much could be found of one wing of such or another people's front. And most people had not come to Bonn as sinister figures to challenge the Federal Government such as Schmidt, Genscher and Kohl had thought. Most of them did not even deserve the charge uttered by SPD Chairman Brandt that they are one-sided. The vast majority of this extraordinary general assembly of very many young and fewer older citizens need not be enlightened about the fact that it makes no sense if the West scraps arms while the Soviet Union continues to enhance its military preponderance.

The Muenster WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN observes: All in all, the so-called peace demonstration remained peaceful. Fortunately, many anxieties voiced just before this mammoth rally did not come true. This is a gratifying fact. The approximately 250,000 demonstrators who rallied in Bonn did not shake the Federal Republic. Granted, they were able to prove that the peace movement does not stand for a mere marginal social group but constitutes a new reality. They did not, however, represent the vast majority of the people. If any long term effect were to emanate from this super-demonstration, then this would, above all, affect the SPD and/or its partition.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG remarks: What SPD Federal Manager Glotz said after the Bonn demonstration, namely, that it is necessary to convert longing for peace into policy for peace, had been valid before. But it did gain urgency on 10 October, especially for the Social Democrats, who must become more aware of the fact that their people had gathered there in large numbers as well. No doubt, the difficulties will come once this has dawned on the party for the tightrope on which the party leadership has to walk in security policy will be very thin, perhaps too thin, for bearing both those in government and essential representatives of the extraparliamentary peace movement. Hence, it will be important to strengthen this rope which, however, cannot be done solely as the government and the coalition please, because their dependency in foreign policy is considerable. Still, the chance for a policy of dialogue, which SPD Chairman Brandt defended against the resistance in his party's own ranks, does not seem to have passed as yet.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER states: The mass rally indicated to the chancellor that he will have a hard time at the SPD congress this spring in obtaining an endorsement of the Brussels dual decision on disarmament or counterarmament. He has made his stay in office dependent on this confirmation. His resignation threat obviously did not impress the Social Democrats who participated in the demonstrations. Even now, 25 percent of the SPD Bundestag faction would calmly let the chancellor fail by the counterarmament. Viewed from this angle, this past Saturday spells another weakening of Schmidt's position by differently-minded SPD politicians as whose spokesman Chairman Brandt moves more and more into the foreground.

STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG sums up: The uncompromising way in which feelings have been mobilized is shocking for the political parties. After all, history has taught us that readiness for peace is not necessarily contagious. What good was neutrality to the Benelux states or to Norway in 1914 or in 1940? Can't one also endanger peace by being the only one deserting Western peace policy? Couldn't peace in a denuclearized zone in Europe be in greater jeopardy than it is now? Isn't it food for thought that wherever the superpowers faced each other directly in nuclear armament there was no war at all in 36 years whereas at the same time far more than 100 wars occurred in other parts of the world? Responsible politicians cannot be satisfied with the absoluteness of this belief by hundreds of thousands that it would be sufficient to want the good for creating the good. But this also means that the traditional parties stand little chance to integrate these emotions.

PAPER CITES REPORT ON TRENDS IN PROTEST MOVEMENT

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 Oct (DPA) -- According to WELT AM SONNTAG, the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution, in a secret report on "Security-Endangering Leftwing Extremist Trends in the Struggle for Peace," states that communist and ecological groups have drawn up a 3-year plan for actions against counterarming. The paper says that the report states that future actions of the mounting protest movement will not be confined to bringing "political pressure" to bear. Military installations in the Federal Republic are to become direct objectives of scheduled "resistance actions."

The Federal Interior Ministry confirmed the existence of the report which was not, however, presented, as was claimed, at the weekend in connection with the Bonn peace demonstration. Ministry spokesman Westkamp explained that the report had been written some time ago. It summed up earlier reports on "attempts of extremist groups to gain influence on the movement for the protection of the environment." The account as presented by the paper therefore is a false one.

In its reply, the editorial office of WELT AM SONNTAG said that the report was presented to the Federal Government at the beginning of October and that it referred several times to the day of the peace demonstration on 10 October.

SCHMIDT ON MEETINGS WITH HONECKER, BREZHNEV

[Text] Berlin, 9 Oct (DPA) -- According to Chancellor Schmidt, his proposed meeting with Chairman of the GDR State Council Erich Honecker must not be burdened with prior conditions already during the runup. Speaking at a works meeting at the Aeg-Telefunken factory in Wedding, Berlin, Schmidt said today that he is pleased a political summit will take place between the Federal Republic and the GDR after a gap of several years. He said he does not wish to make any promises about the success of this meeting. He knows that the meeting, for which no official date has yet been fixed, will "not be easy." It is important that Germans in East and West should be able to talk and listen to one another.

Schmidt also referred to the visit of Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev to Bonn next month. He will raise the subjects of arms limitation, expansion of trade and, above all, detente.

In his speech, Schmidt also spoke of recent acts of violence and terrorist attacks. He called the murdered Egyptian President as-Sadat "one of the bravest men of our time." The chancellor said he rejects "all forms of violence from the right or the left" and all forms of terrorism. This important point is held in common by all party groups in the Bundestag as was made clear this morning. The chancellor described as "one-sided nonsense" the minority belief that Soviet weapons create peace while U.S. weapons make war.

GOVERNMENT APPROVES CANNON EXPORT TO SAUDIS

[Excerpts] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Government has approved the export of field howitzers (FH 70) of joint German-British stocks. This was confirmed to journalists by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker in Bonn today. Becker described as "completely ridiculous" reports that the deliveries in question are of tank howitzers of the 155-1 type, the mount of which consists of components of the Leopard tank.

The export of field howitzers from "British stocks or British-finished manufacture's," Becker said, requires Bonn's approval because the cooperation agreement between the countries involved in their manufacture requires the consent of all partners. According to the government spokesman, London has ensured by means of a clause on their ultimate destination that Saudi Arabia will not sell the guns to anyone else.

Becker pointed out that Great Britain has no export restriction for arms exports to "areas of tension." "I am not aware that Saudi Arabia is one of the areas of tension," Becker replied to the question of whether the field howitzers are not the first instance of German approval being given to the export of artillery weapons to areas of tension. The Federal Government is to decide on new guidelines for arms exports later this year. Under the cabinet's guidelines to date, arms deliveries to areas of tension are not approved -- one reason for the refusal of Saudi Arabia's request for German tanks.

STATE SECRETARY: NO MILITARY OPTION IN MIDEAST

LD121844 Hamburg DPA in German 1618 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- In the Federal Government's view, the Middle East conflict can be settled only by means of a policy of equilibrium. Foreign Ministry State Secretary Berndt von Staden stressed in Bonn today as he said farewell to Jordanian Ambassador Nabih 'Amir an-Nimr that recent events have shown that there can be no "military option." Only a policy of balance between the parties involved and recognition of mutual rights will lead to a lasting, comprehensive and just peace, accepted by all. Together with its European partners, the Federal Government will make every effort to contribute toward such a peace settlement. An-Nimr will in the future be Jordan's ambassador to Tunisia.

SCHMIDT HAS 'INFECTION'; CANCELS APPOINTMENTS

[Text] Bonn, 12 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was admitted to the main Bundeswehr hospital in Koblenz this afternoon for a checkup involving a feverish infection. This was announced by a government spokesman in Bonn.

The chancellor, who spent the weekend in Hamburg after attending As-Sadat's funeral in Cairo on Saturday, cancelled all his appointments for today and, as a precautionary measure, for Tuesday as well, due to a "feverish infection," said Government Spokesman Kurt Becker.

His appointments include a speech to the Hamburg Overseas Club which he was to address this evening. Becker expects that Schmidt will chair the cabinet session on Wednesday. Becker said that Schmidt always goes to the Koblenz Bundeswehr hospital when he needs medical advice or wants an examination.

CHEYSSON DISCUSSES AS-SADAT ASSASSINATION

OW111940 Paris AFP in English 1928 GMT 11 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 11 Oct (AFP) -- The assassination of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat could remove an obstacle to an inter-Arab reconciliation necessary for any Middle East peace settlement, French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said today.

"If you want to be optimistic, you could say that the death of As-Sadat -- horrible in itself with all the consequences it could have for Eygpt -- removes an obstacle to the inter-Arab rapproachment," the minister said in a radio interview. He stressed that such a rapprochment was indispensable for peace in the Middle East.

Egypt was isolated from much of the Arab community after Mr as-Sadat agreed to an Egyptian-Israeli peace pact.

"There was no Arab leader who did not recognize that peace in the Middle East would involve the return of Egypt to the Arab camp," Mr Cheysson said, referring to meetings he and President Francois Mitterrand have had with Arab leaders.

"As long as you do not have Egypt in the Arab camp, I do not see how you can tackle problems that are not treated by Camp David," the accord between Israel and Egypt on Palestinian autonomy, he said.

RENAULT STRIKE POSES THREAT TO GOVERNMENT

[Text] Paris, 13 Oct (AFP) -- Lengthy negotiations last night at the government-owned Renault auto factory here failed to suspend the first sizable labour trouble in France since Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand was elected president last May 10.

The dispute broke out at an awkward moment for the leftist government -- just before parliament today starts debating the government bill to nationalize most of the country's banks and the major industrial corporations.

The embarrassing aspect is that the first serious labour trouble under the Socialist administration was not in a private corporation, but in one already nationalized since the end of World War II.

Observers said opposition politicians were sure to contend during the debate that the friction at Renault showed nationalization is not a cure-all.

Renault's management decided last Friday to lock out 4,000 workers because a series of small strikes had bottle-necked the assembly of R-4 cars.

Last night's unsuccessful negotiations concerned the pay demands of unskilled machine shop workers -- three-fourths of them foreign immigrants.

MATRA GROUP BECOMES 51 PERCENT STATE OWNED

NC121503 Paris AFP in English 1407 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Oct (AFP) -- Matra group, the leading French missile producer, today became 51 per cent state owned.

Last Thursday the state acquired amajority interest in Societe des Avions Marcel Dassault, which makes the Mirage and other planes.

The government thus has full control over the country's strategic armaments sector.

Matra, whose 1980 consolidated turnover was 5,600 million francs (roughly 1,000 million dollars at the present exchange rate), books about half its sales in the armaments field, which employs 2,550 people. Some 70 per cent of its turnover is export business.

GOVERNMENT SURVIVES CENSURE VOTE 12 OCT

[Text] Paris, 12 Oct (AFP) -- The opposition failed to bring down France's coalition government of Socialists and Communists tonight in a vote of censure (no confidence) that fell far short of the necessary majority.

The followers of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing backed by the Gaullist party mustered only 151 votes to express their lack of confidence in the leftist government's economic policy.

A vote of 246 (one more than half the National Asembly's members) is needed to topple a government. Backers of the administration do not vote when censure votes are held, and only votes against it are counted.

Since the opposition holds far too few seats to shake the government, the debate prior to the vote was mainly a gesture, rather than a serious challenge. Government supporters pointed out that "hardly 15 opposition MP's" were on the assembly's benches at one stage in the oratory.

COMMUNIST PARTY TO HOLD CONGRESS 3-7 FEB

LD101330 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Text] The 24th PCF Congress will be held from 3-7 February at St-Ouen. Georges Marchais will present the traditional report. This was decided by the Central Committee at the end of its 2-day meeting, at which it also confirmed the de facto expulsion of Henri Fiszbin and his 29 comrades who founded the Communist Encounters.

In reaction, Henri Fiszbin says he continues to consider himself a PCF member. He said nobody has the power to prevent Communists from being present at debates on preparing the congress.

L'HUMANITE HITS U.S. ARMS BUILDUP

PM091331 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 3 Oct 81 pp 1, 7

[Yves Moreau article: "U.S. Vulnerability"]

[Text] By announcing a new program allegedly to "modernize U.S. strategic forces," the U.S. President took the responsibility of stepping up the arms race even further.

The previous day Mr Reagan tried to justify himself by stating that he wanted to "close the window of vulnerability" which, according to him, threatens America. Nonetheless if there is one sphere in which everybody has hitherto admitted that there is at present a balance between the USSR and the United States, it is that of strategic weapons. The SALT agreements reached between the two countries were intended to ensure that that was the case.

So what is the point of the frantic pace which Mr Reagan intends to impart to excessive armament? What other explanation is there than an ambition to gain such military strength that the United States would be ensured of world domination and leadership?

Indeed this desire for hegemony is demonstrated every day; nothing must henceforth hinder constant U.S. intervention.

For instance, the Washington Senate has just annulled the Clark amendment, prudently adopted following the Vietnam War, which forbade the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of southern African countries; Mr Reagan now has a free hand to support or foment disturbances in Angola by any means he can.

Every where the supreme law must be that dictated by American imperialism. This has just been seen during the annual assembly of the World Bank and the IMF, at which Mr Reagan was not afraid to proclaim "the primacy of American prosperity over transfers of aid to foreign countries." What counts is not the need for a new international order which would finally enable 800 million human beings to emerge from underdevelopment but the creation of the best conditions for their extreme exploitation by imperialism: it is guaranteeing "the security and reception of private investments" in underdeveloped countries, as recommended by the Ottawa summit's final resolution. This subject was discussed at length at the annual assembly by new World Bank Chairman Alden Clausen, who prepared for his new job by directing the Bank of America for 11 years. "What is good for America must be good for the world," the Algerian delegation chief was able to say at the annual assembly with bitter irony.

Another affair which is characteristic of Washington's desire for intervention and hegemony: the sale of AWACS radar aircraft to Saudi Arabia. Mr Reagan and Secretary of State Haig explained at length that these aircraft would not be used for surveillance of Israel and that, moreover, they would be constantly in the hands of the American military in flight and on the ground. In other words, the AWACS would be used exclusively for espionage against Arab countries. They will bear witness to U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia and other Near East countries. Mr Reagan intends to deploy his arsenal on all continents and on all seas. On our border, West Germany is the region of the world in which the density of nuclear weapons already deployed is highest. That is still not enough: Almost 600 new American missiles are promised to West Europe...pending the neutron bombs. The "window" which Mr Reagan claims to want to shut is not that of splendid isolation. It is a fortress from which the most sophisticated bombers and missiles have already been widely distributed among hundreds and hundreds of American bases installed in tens of foreign countries. Nonetheless Mr Reagan is probably not wrong to invoke his vulnerability, provided it is not understood in the narrowly military sense which he gives it. For it is in fact political vulnerability.

Indeed awareness of the insane danger which the arms race poses is growing among all U.S. allies. In the FRG, Britain, the Netherlands, Scandinavia and Italy there are a growing number of demonstrations to prevent the return to the Cold War. More than 100,000 people are expected in Bonn next Saturday and, despite efforts by government members, 55 Social Democratic and 16 liberal deputies have signed the appeal. In Britain the demand for disarmament dominated the Labor Party congress. In Washington itself 400,000 labor unionists have demonstrated. In France there is no doubt that the rally planned for 25 October by the peace movement will be a great success. It is this universal assertion of the desire for peace which makes Mr Reagan's insane policy vulnerable. On Thursday evening he stormed against these "pacifists" and "neutralists," as he calls them, who, he complained, are "increasingly making their voices heard." Fortunately it is not in his power to impose silence on them.

Recalling the agreement signed with the PS, Georges Marchais stated in the National Assembly 15 September that any French initiative to seek peace and disarmament would be salutory reflection of the changes which have come about in our national life. Several of the remarks made by Francois Mitterrand in his press conference 24 September follow the same line: the desire for the simultaneous disappearance of the military blocs, the calculation that there is at present a real strategic balance, the invitation to negotiation without delay not only to halt excessive armament but to achieve disarmament. These are stances which should inspire our country's international action and which deserve to be heeded in the world to make the language of dialogue and cooperation prevail over the dangerous accentuation of tensions.

PERTINI, COLOMBO MEET WITH MUBARAK, RETURN HOME

[Text] Cairo, 10 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian head of state Sandro Pertini, accompanied by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, in Cairo for the state funeral for Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, met this afternoon with the Egyptian president-designate, Husni Mubarak. The consultation took place in the Uruba Palace in a Cairo suburb. Immediately after the talk, Pertini and his delegation left the Egyptian capital to return to Rome.

Sinai Troop Decision Denied

[Excerpt] Rome, 9 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo denied reports in the press today that the government has already decided to send troops to the Sinai to join an international peace-keeping force. The diplomatic chief dismissed the reports as pre-mature and groundless while giving reporters a brief rundown of the foreign policies covered at this morning's cabinet meeting in Rome.

Insisting that no decision has yet been taken, Colombo stuck by the version he gave Parliament yesterday according to which the government will come up with its reply to the Egyptian and Israeli request in due time and submit it to Parliament after consulting with the country's Western allies.

The joint Egyptian-Israeli request, the government official told the lower house Foreign Relations Commission Thursday, was in keeping with the United Nations' Security Council resolution on the Middle East (242). The peace-keeping force, he added, was planned for the purpose of assisting Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai.

Spadolini Trip Announced

[Text] Rome, 9 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini announced plans today to make an official visit to Cairo in the near future to meet President Anwar as-Sadat's successor, Vice President Husni Mubarak. During an interview aired on the radio this morning, Spadolini said he had just recently accepted an invitation from As-Sadat to visit Egypt and planned to keep the appointment with the slain president's successor.

MORE DETAILS ON KILLING OF PLO PRESS CHIEF

[Text] Rome, 9 Oct (ANSA) -- Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) press chief Abu Sharar, an intellectual known for his moderate views in Al-Fatah's Central Committee, was blown to pieces by a bomb which gutted his hotel room in Rome overnight. The PLO office in Rome charged Israeli spies with the murder this morning, but spokesmen from the dissident Palestinian guerrilla group, "Al Asifa" claimed they had "executed the traitor" in anonymous phone tips to UPI in Beirut and REUTERS in Rome.

Abu Sharar, a well-known Arab literary critic who shunned terrorism was in Rome for a conference on "media solidarity with Palestinian newsmen." The 47-year-old victim was a close friend of Palestinian poet (Wael Zuaiter), slain in Rome in 1972 by an Israeli assault squad. He signed in at Rome's Hotel Flora four days ago with a false passport in one (Hassah Zithouni's) name, a passport issued by Lebanese authorities in 1978 for an Algerian-born holder.

The high-powered device which killed Abu Sharar was planted under his bed, Rome firemen confirmed today after inspecting the devastated hotel room whose ceiling caved in from the blast. His body was so charred investigators were unable to determine whether he was asleep or what he was wearing when the bomb went off. The only object police were able to collect from the debris was a 7.65 caliber hand gun which they believe may have belonged to the victim.

Abu Sharar, who has been the chief of the PLO's news and information office since April 1980, leaves behind a wife and three children, the elder of which is ten years old. Before taking over the organization's press office, he was the secretary of Al-Fatah's revolutionary council, which recruits guerrillas for the resistance.

In his address to the Palestinian media conference in Rome this week, the PLO official asserted that Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat deserved the fate he met "because he deceived the Egyptian and Palestinian peoples." Sadat's death, he said, compounded with the problems Zionism was creating, complicated the situation in the Middle East and heightened the risk of a new war.

The slain Palestinian journalist met at the conference with Catholic Bishop Hilarion Capucci, an old acquaintance of his, who was jailed and then expelled from Israel a few years ago on charges of smuggling arms for Palestinian guerrillas.

Considered a loyal follower of PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat, Abu Sharar was member of the organization's center left faction, which advocated a policy of nonalignment. He came to Rome often to meet with Italian political figures and attend conferences and debates. He was recently operated on for an undisclosed illness at a Rome hospital.

The dissident "Al-Asifa" Palestinian movement, headed by Abu Nidal, has made assaults on other PLO officials in the past. The caller to UPI in Beirut today announced in what the American news agency's switchboard operator said was an international call from an undetermined calling-point:

"Majed Abu Sharar and his comrades have deviated from the true course of the Palestinian revolution and the armed struggle. They are traitors. We have liquidated Abu Sharar and we'll liquidate the others."

The PLO office spokesman in Rome, on the other hand, issued a statement charging Israeli agents with the hotel room attack and cited a "WAFA" dispatch monitored here from Beirut blaming the Israeli joint chiefs of staff for the "criminal attack, the latest of a long series aimed at wiping out the PLO's leaders and structures."

Israel Accused

[Excerpts] Rome, 10 Oct (ANSA) -- The Palestinian Liberation Organization has accused the Israeli security services of killing PLO press chief Abu Sharar in Rome. Speaking to a crowded press conference here last night, a PLO spokesman categorically denied the possibility that the assassination was carried out by a dissident Palestinian guerrilla group called "Al-Asifa." "The Al-Asifa organization is not capable of carrying out an attack like this," spokesman M. (Hammad) told newsmen in this capital.

From Beirut, the PLO has accused Italian police with negligence and collusion with Israeli security services. Meanwhile, in Rome police headquarters categorically denied releasing any version of Sharar's death, stating that the investigation is still continuing.

Shortly after the explosion rumors circulated here that an Arab was blown up while making a bomb in his hotel room. The PLO spokesman said that someone on Sharar's level did not make bombs. "He is not a terrorist but a political personality who sought to maintain good relations with Italian intellectual circles and political parties," (Hammad) continued.

(Hammad) who is the PLO chief in Rome, said that Sharar was checked into a Flora Hotel under a false name for reasons of security. Reservations in his real name had been made at a hotel on the northwestern outskirts of the city.

"Abu Sharar loved Italy and had the best of relations with the Italian political world... only the hand of Israel could have committed this crime," (Hammad) exclaimed. The assassinated PLO leader was praised by Orthodox Bishop Hilarion Capucci (a strong advocate of the Palestinian cause) and by British actress Vanessa Redgrave, known for her Arab sympathies. Sharar was also a good friend of (Wadi Zuater), a Palestinian poet and the PLO's first contact man in Rome who was riddled with bullets in 1972 on the outskirts of this city. That crime has been attributed to the Israeli secret servcies.

MINISTERS COUNCIL CALLS FIRST CONFIDENCE VOTE

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (FP) -- The Italian Council of Ministers on Monday called for a vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies to overcome obstructions placed by the tiny Radical Party (RP) to a bill on public contributions to political parties. It is the first time since Premier Giovanni Spadolini came to power in June that the government has sought such a confidence vote.

A statement from the Council of Ministers said that after consultations with the heads of the five major political parties, the government had decided to pose the question of confidence. Observers noted that the government in effect was seeking to pass directly to a vote on its proposal on contributions to parties, wtihout having to debate each one of the approximately 6,000 amendments filed by the Radical Party. The bill would increase state contributions to political parties to 120 billion lira (103 million dollars) next year from 45 billion lira this year.

The government of Arnaldo Forlani, which preceded that of Mr Spadolini, had been criticized in the press and by opposition parties for its frequent recourse to confidence votes in order to move legislation through Parliament.

Government, Optimistic

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (ANSA) -- A debate in the Italian lower house on public financing for the nation's political parties shifts today to the motion filed by the government Monday to call a confidence vote on the legislation to break through the filibuster mounted by the Radical Party, one of the smallest alignments represented in the house. The decision to hold a "technical" vote of confidence, reached at the end of a meeting of representatives of the five government parties, was announced to the house by Minister Without Portfolio Giuseppe Zamberletti.

Radical Party M.P.'s fired back the response that they intended to present another 300 amendments to the public financing legislation, which has already cleared the Senate, and call for separate ballots on each of their amendments.

On the government side, a note released by the premier's office in the evening explained that the decision to submit the bill to a confidence test was a "technical and not a political" matter. The document referred to the upcoming vote as one "which will not involve the positions of the (parliamentary) majority and those of the government" of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals.

Government spokesmen pointed out that the bill can be expected to come through the house with a comfortable margin because opposition parties which do not share in the thinking behind the Radical filibuster can either vote for it or abstain.

The articles of the public financing legislation which have been stingingly criticized by the Radicals are the one to index the funds to the cost of living and the area of disclosure. One of the Radical aims is to introduce amendments which would require subjecting political party balance sheets to special audits and full disclosure regulations.

On the issue of indexation, the M.P. manning the filibuster have pointed out that linking public funds for the parties to the cost of living index, to recover financing eroded by galloping inflation since 1974, would cost the state 32 billion lire (over $26 million) for the period 1974-1980. This allocating would be over and above the 82 billion 886 million lire (nearly $70 million) required to finance the parties annually beginning in 1981.

On the basis of the legislation, the total of public financing for the parties is doled out to each alignment according to representation of Parliament. The party of relative majority in Italy, the Christian Democrats, therefore, can expect to rake in 15 billion 485 million lire (nearly $13 million) for 1980 and another 30 billion 583 million lire (around $26 million) for the current year.

The nation's second party, the opposition Communists with 201 seats in the house compared to the 261 held by the Christian Democrats, would add to its coffers 11 billion 377 million lire (about $10 million) for 1980 and nearly double that figure for 1981. A small alignment, such as the right-of-center Liberal Party with nine seats in the house, would receive with the passage of the legislation 1 billion 556 million lire ($1.3 million) and another 3 billion 74 million lire ($2.5 million) for the current year.

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR VISIT

[Text] Rome, 12 Oct (ANSA) -- Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek arrived in Rome today for a two-day working visit to include consultations with the head of Italian diplomacy, Emilio Colombo, on the situation in Poland following the windup of the independent trade union, Solidarnosc, congress.

The Italian foreign minister, speaking to newsmen at Rome's international Fiumicino Airport, said that, "Italy follows developments of the situation in Poland with close interest and with anxiety and concern as well. Though there is no lack of other areas of tension in the sorld," Colombo noted, "and the past few days have demonstrated this, the situation in Poland remains the most relevant problem for Europe and for East-West relations."

The Italian diplomatic chief said that he hoped his talks with Czyrek would lead to "a more direct judgement of the Polish Government's attitude after the conclusion of the Solidarnosc congress." Colombo also described bilateral relations between Italy and Poland as "excellent." In September, the Italian and Polish foreign ministers conferred in New York on the sidelines of the opening of the United National General Assembly.

SOVIET CIVIL AVIATION MINISTER BUGAYEV ARRIVES

[Text] Rome, 11 Oct (ANSA) -- Soviet Civil Aviation Minister Marshal Pavlovich Boris Bugayev arrived in Rome Sunday from Moscow for a week-long official visit. During his stay in the Italian capital he will meet Thursday with Transport Minister Vincenzo Balzamo. The two men will discuss problems linked to civil aviation and Italo-Soviet relations in that sector.

On Friday, Bugayev will meet with Rome government leaders. Bugayev was welcomed at Rome's international airport by Transport Under Secretary Elio Tiriolo. He is due to leave Rome for Moscow next Sunday.

PCI RELEASES 'DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE' DOCUMENT

[Text] Rome, 10 Oct (ANSA) -- A ringing appeal for the "creation of a democratic alternative" in Italy to put an end to the Christian Democrat Party's "occupation of the state" was contained in a document drafted by the leadership of the Italian Communist Party [PCI] opposition alignment which closely rivals the strength of the party of relative majority, the Christian Democrats.

The document released today by PCI headquarters in Rome will be [word indistinct] on for rank and file debate and analysis in a series of regional party congresses [word indistinct] the autumn and winter months. In their document, Italy's Communists argued that the extremely serious political crisis now sweeping the country could lead to a sharp shift to the right or to "an atrophy with no roads leading out of it."

To counter this crisis, the Communists reproposed the "democratic alternative" first aired in the shambles of the southern Italian regions devastated by the killer earthquake of November 1980. This alternative, according to the PCI [words indistinct] shape as "a new response to the new problems and new requirements of an industrialized country, a response which cannot be the one provided by a social democratic past nor in any way by the Eastern European models." The driving forces of this alternative must be those parties of the historic left, the communists and the socialists, the document insisted.

The future lineup envisioned by Italy's Communists must include those political and cultural areas, especially Roman Catholics, tired of "Christian Democratic power" and those who would topple this power "for a real democratic change."

Following a reading of the Communists leadership document, political analysis noted that the party shied away from labeling their alternative an "alternative of the left" and, instead, emphasized the need to rally "the widest possible spectrum of social and political forces" around the Communist proposal.

These political commentators said that the idea of the "democratic alternative" marks a decisive shift away from the policy line of the "historic compromise" (entente between the Christian Democrats and the Communists) first proposed by PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer in 1973. They pointed out that the "historic compromise" idea accepted the Christian Democrat Party was representative of the majority of Italy's democratic Roman Catholics and was transformed briefly into reality in 1978 in the immediate aftermath of the kidnapping and killing of the Christian Democrat Party chairman, Aldo Moro, in the spring of that year. In Parliament, the Communists entered a "national unity majority" to support the government led by Premier Giulio Andreotti by abstaining.

The "democratic alternative," however, comes as a reflection of the Communist leadership view that no alliance with the Christian Democrats is possible and is aimed at luring away from the party of relative majority the more progressive areas of the Catholic world.

DEMONSTRATION IN SICILY PROTESTS EUROMISSILES

[Text] Comiso, 12 Oct (ANSA) -- Some 10,000 people staged a demonstration in Comiso, Sicily Sunday to protest plans to install Euromissiles there. The demonstrators, mostly young people, came from all over, Sicily to oppose plans, as they see it to make their island a nuclear outpost bristling between East and West. They marched past the Comiso airport where the cruise missile base is to be set up.

SEMINAR OF ARAB JOURNALISTS ENDS IN ROME

[Text] Rome, 10 Oct (ANSA) -- Arab journalists and intellectuals wound up a three-day seminar in Rome with an appeal to "all democratic and friendly forces" to boycott the plan for Palestinian self-determination under Israeli occupation. In a resolution adopted last night at the end of the seminar, the self-determination plan put forward by Egypt and Israel under the sponsorship of the United States was said to have as its goal the quashing of Palestinian hopes for an independent state.

The seminar, devoted to international solidarity with Palestinian writers, journalists and intellectuals, was organized by the Federation of Arab Journalists in conjunction with the Italian Association for Italo-Arab Friendship.

The resolution said that Arab journalists and intellectuals were in favor of any initiative that would end the Iraqi-Iranian conflict underway for over a year and that would restore good-neighbor relations between these two states so that they could devote their resources to the fight against Israel. The document accused "American imperialism and the collusion between Israel and the United States" with seeking to "liquidate the rights of the Palestinian people."

The Arab journalists and intellectuals attending the just-concluded seminar also claimed that Israel and the U.S. were seeking to Zionize Lebanon so as to force that country to join the peace process launched by Egypt and the Jewish state in November of 1979. They also claimed that the Israelis had conducted a "cultural war" against Arabs living in the occupied lands to keep intellectuals from springing up among the younger generations.

In conclusion, the seminar participants reiterated their firm conviction that the Palestinian Liberation Organization was the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

BERLINGUER DEPARTS FOR LATIN AMERICAN TRIP

[Text] Rome, 9 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer described his trip to Cuba and Central America today as a development for "Euro-communism," the West European brand of communism which claims independence from Moscow, in a departure statement at the airport this morning.

The Italian political leader, who heads the biggest communist party of the West and who has spear-headed the "Euro-communist" drive, specified that he wanted to explore the points on which advanced Latin American countries, the Third World and the vanguard of the West European workers' movement may meet.

He starts a five-day official visit to Cuba upon his arrival in Havana today and then goes on to Mexico October 14-19 as a guest of that country's Communist Party and Nicaragua October 19-22 as a guest of the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

Cuban Premier Fidel Castro, who invited the Italian Communist leader to his country, will be meeting with him on the 12th.

KREISKY 'BREAKS' WITH PLO LEADER 'ARAFAT

AU111642 Vienna KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 11 Oct 81 p 2

[Peter Gnam report]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- After the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, Chancellor Kreisky has now broken with the man he defended until recently against the whole world and who he had made "presentable" in the first place: PLO chief 'Arafat. In a talk with KRONEN-ZEITUNG and on the Vienna Domestic Service "Morgen Journal" program, Kreisky described as "incomprehensible anyone praising a murder and being happy about it," as 'Arafat did. In addition to personal consequences, the chancellor announced that at present there is no interest in a new official PLO representative in Vienna.

Yesterday, the day of As-Sadat's funeral, the chancellor once more expressed his shock at the murder. Assassinations have never served peaceful development, he said -- on the contrary. Then the chancellor turned to statements by 'Arafat, who after the assassination had repeatedly declared that he was happy that the traitor As-Sadat had been killed. In this context, Kreisky declared yesterday: "There will be personal consequences -- I don't want to say any more about it."

ARAB LEAGUE SEEKS TO OPEN OFFICE IN THE HAGUE

PM090951 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 6 Oct 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Arab League, in which the Arab nations and the PLO are represented, wants to open an office in The Hague. Since the beginning of June, when the league's request reached the Foreign Ministry, a correspondence on the matter has been taking place. The government agrees in principle to the establishment of an office, but talks are still being held on the status of the league's representatives.

Last week the league rented a building in The Hague next to the British Embassy. According to a Foreign Ministry spokesman, anyone has a right to do this but for the past month the ministry has not heard anything from the league, after The Hague sent a request that a mission be sent to the Netherlands to arrange the final formalities.

MINISTERS 'TO STRENGTHEN POLITICAL COOPERATION'

LD131438 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1410 GMT 13 Oct 81

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Common Market foreign ministers agreed in London today to strengthen their political co-operation in what could be a significant development of Common Market activities. They decided that "political aspects of security" can now regularly be discussed by EEC foreign ministers.

A carefully worded statement after the meeting at Lancaster House said the ministers agreed "to maintain the flexible and pragmatic approach which has made it possible to discuss in political co-operation certain important foreign policy questions bearing on the political aspects of security."

Lord Carrington, Britain's foreign secretary and current president of the community, told reporters afterwards that this did not include defence aspects of security. There was nothing in the proposals "which would undermine the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation," something that would be "gravely damaging."

But Lord Carrington gave few details of the exact nature of the subjects that the ministers would discuss. He mentioned disarmament proposals relating to the European security conference, but in general they would operate on an ad hoc basis, he said.

He acknowledged the potential problems facing Ireland which is a neutral country not in NATO. "They are anxious to see that security is defined in a way that is acceptable to them. We have made it clear that the security aspects we are talking about are political and not defence." "It will be rather ad hoc. We have no wish to embarass the Irish," he said.

The significance of today's decision is that ministers have taken another stage forward in developing their political links within the community. Political co-operation is not part of the Rome treaty, but as Lord Carrington points out, co-operation meetings have been held for 11 years and have become a central element in the foreign policies of the 10 community countries.

Although ministers have stressed that they are not concerned with defence, the Soviet Union can be expected to question whether a specific European defence bloc is now developing.

Lord Carrington said it had been agreed to strengthen the political co-operation machinery by creating a small staff to work under the Common Market president. This staff would be drawn from governments of the existing, previous and succeeding presidencies. Each country is president for six months at a time. Lord Carrington said the staff would remain employed by their national Foreign Ministry and would be on the staff of the embassy in the presidency capital.

It was also agreed that crisis procedures would be improved so that in the event of a crisis a foreign ministers meeting would be called within 48 hours. "That should prevent some of the disarray that existed in the community after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan," said Lord Carrington.

A statement issued after the meeting said that foreign ministers noted "that it is increasingly possible for the ten to speak with one voice in international affairs." It was also planned to strengthen contacts in the field of political co-operation with the European Parliament. The statement emphasised that the success of political cooperation depended to a large degree on confidentiality.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON PLO, 'ARAFAT

[Excerpt] Asked about Austria's relations with the PLO and about a successor to expelled PLO delegate Ghazi Husayn, Foreign Minister Pahr today said:

[Begin recording] We have recognized the PLO de facto, as a reality. Our recognition has never meant that we approve of everything the PLO says or PLO representatives do. In other words, our relationship with the PLO as an organization has not changed through this very unfortunate -- and, from our viewpoint, very objectionable -- statement [by 'Arafat lauding As-Sadat's assassination]. As far as I personally am concerned, all I can say is that the PLO's representative in Austria is always at the same time a representative of 'Arafat. And it is obvious and self-evident that we have no interest in having in Austria the representative of someone who welcomes terrorist murder. [end recording]

MINISTER OPTIMISTIC ABOUT POLISH COAL DELIVERIES

[Text] Vienna -- Following a talk with Polish Foreign Trade Minister Karski, Trade Minister Staribacher expressed optimism regarding coal deliveries from Poland this year. Staribacher expects Austria this year to get "substantially more than only one-third" of the agreed coal quota.

However, Austria will be compelled to buy part of the coal it needs in the West. And there, according to Staribacher, prices are at least 20 percent higher than those of Polish coal. In this context, Staribacher noted that prices of all energy imports from socialist countries are more favorable than those of energy imports from Western countries.

AUSTRIA INCURS GROWING DEFICITS IN CEMA TRADE

[Summary] The growing gap between an only moderate increase of exports to CEMA countries and rapidly rising imports from these countries has led to a drastic increase of Austria's deficit in its CEMA trade. This deficit amounted to 1.4 billion schillings in the first quarter of this year. And at 3.4 billion schillings in the second quarter, it was as high as in all of 1980. Austria's deficit in its trade with the USSR reached 3.8 billion schillings in the second quarter -- 18 percent of Austria's overall trade deficit. In trade with the CSSR, Austria incurred deficits of 0.9 billion schillings in the first quarter of 1981 and 0.8 billion schillings in the second quarter.

Despite market gains in the GDR, the USSR and Hungary, Austria's overall share in the CEMA market declined by 5.5 percent in the first quarter of 1981. In the second quarter, Austrian exports to CEMA countries developed more favorably, mainly owing to grain shipments to Poland and sugar deliveries to Romania.

PAHR MEETS WITH SOVIET CSCE DELEGATE ILICHEV

AU131309 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Oct 81 p 2

[Text] Vienna -- Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr yesterday received a Soviet delegation headed by I. Ilichev, USSR deputy foreign minister and Soviet CSCE delegate at the Madrid followup meeting. Officially, it was merely stated that "questions of joint interest" were discussed.

OFFICIAL 'SKEPTICAL' ABOUT CSCE NEGOTIATIONS

AU131314 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 13 Oct 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by Andreas Unterberger]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- On the eve of the next phase of the CSCE followup meeting in Madrid, Austria has again taken over a key role. Both superpowers are negotiating with Austrian Foreign Ministry diplomats in Vienna on how to overcome the CSCE deadlock. After last week's visit by Soviet chief delegate Ilichev, U.S. chief delegate Kampelmann is expected to arrive today, Tuesday.

Austrian CSCE expert Ceska, however, is skeptical regarding the negotiations scheduled to open on 27 October, despite the intensive preparations: "We take the greatest interest in the continuation of the CSCE process, but we do not see what could be put on the table."

Since March, a compromise proposal of the neutrals and nonaligned countries has been on the Madrid conference table, a proposal in the drafting of which Austria played a decisive role. However, this compromise thus far has not met with full approval in either East or West. A confidental suggestion submitted by Austria in July has not met with any response by the representatives of a hardline in the West either.

PAHR DISCUSSES SOUTH TIROL QUESTION

[Excerpts] "Since no progress has been made in 1980 regarding the implementation of the South Tirol package agreement, we will jointly exert pressure on the Rome central government," said Foreign Minister Pahr at a press conference in Innsbruck yesterday, following a session of the North and South Tirol Contact Committee attended by Governors Eduard Wallnofer and Silvius Magnago.

According to Pahr, the foremost task is to quickly solve the questions of ensuring that South Tiroleans can use their native language in dealing with the authorities and of establishing an autonomous court of administration for the Bolzano Province.
Asked about realistic possibilities of sanctions vis-a-vis Rome, Pahr answered evasively, stating that there might be a deterioration of the climate between the two countries.

JUDICIAL COOPERATION WITH SFRY -- Talks held at the Austrian Justice Ministry from 28 September to 2 October between an Austrian and a Yugoslav delegation on the mutual execution of court sentences in criminal cases has led to the conclusion of an agreement. "This agreement is to permit closer cooperation between the judicial authorities of the two countries, especially through executing prison sentences or supervising persons having drawn suspended sentences or having been released on probation in their respective home country." During the negotiations, the Yugoslav delegation was received by Justice Minister Broda. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 3 Oct 81 p 3 AU]

EAST BLOC DEBTS -- At the end of 1980, the debts of East bloc countries to Austrian banks totaled 57.3 billion schillings. This total increased by another 14 billion schillings in the first half of 1981. About 40 percent of these debts are owned by Poland.
The second biggest East bloc debtor is the GDR, followed by the USSR and the CSSR.

SCHMIDT FITTED WITH PACEMAKER, SUSPENDS DUTIES

LD131822 Hamburg DPA in German 1806 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt was fitted with a heart pacemaker at the central military hospital in Koblenz today because of a risk of disturbances in his heart rhythm. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said this evening that the operation, carried out by a team of doctors, took barely 1 hour. Schmidt telephoned his wife after the operation. If the post-operative phase proceeds satisfactorily, the chancellor will be able to resume his duties next week.

Becker said that Schmidt was given a local anesthetic. Before his operation, the chancellor conferred for 2-and-1/2-hours with State Secretary Manfred Lahnstein, the head of the federal chancellor's office, and changed current appointments.

Schmidt also wrote a long letter to SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, whom he wants to meet to discuss the North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico. The head of the federal chancellor's office is to see him in the hospital tomorrow to report on the situation.

FOREIGN MINISTER CHAIRS CABINET MEETING

[Excerpt] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Cabinet met on Wednesday in Bonn under the chairmanship of Federal Foreign Minister and Deputy Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher. Genscher is deputizing for Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who on Tuesday underwent an operation for the implantation of a heart pacemaker. The state of health of the chancellor, who was operated on in the army hospital in Koblenz, was described by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker this morning as very satisfactory.

Cancels Latin America Tour

[Excerpt] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Deputy Chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has canceled his tour through three South and Central American states because in the immediate future he must take care of government business in Bonn until Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is able to work again. Originally, Genscher intended to leave Bonn on Thursday and visit Columbia, Nicaragua and Honduras prior to the North-South summit conference in Cancun, Mexico, 22-23 October. Informed sources in the Foreign Ministry are not yet able to say whether and when Genscher will be able to visit these three states.

In Bonn today there was no doubt Genscher would fly to Mexico in the coming week to take part in the summit conference of the 22 states. What is not known is whether Schmidt will be able to travel then and head the German delegation.

CHANCELLOR WELCOMES EAST-WEST ARMS TALKS

[Text] Bonn/Hamburg, 12 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt emphatically underlined the demand for nuclear disarmament among the nuclear powers. In a speech to the Hamburg Overseas Club on Monday afternoon, Schmidt welcomed the start of talks scheduled for the end of November between the United States and the Soviet Union on European medium-range weapons and the negotiations planned for next year, including on strategic nuclear weapons.

Pointing out that the Federal Republic signed the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, he said: "This gives us, with all other nonnuclear signatory states, the right to expect that the nuclear powers not only limit their nuclear arms but, in fact, reduce them."

According to Schmidt, the Federal Government will do all in its power to ensure that the Geneva negotiations on medium-range weapons are brought to a successful conclusion. Schmidt added that he knows that U.S. President Ronald Reagan is imbued with this desire and that he wishes to reach this goal. The Federal Government has made a great contribution to the fact that these negotiations are now to begin at long last. "I am thoroughly proud of that," he said.

Schmidt once again spoke in favor of a military balance in Europe. If this balance were lost, a real endangering of the security of West Europe, the FRG and Berlin would ensue. The chancellor predicted that he will seek agreement with Soviet party chief Leonid Brezhnev during his visit to Bonn at the end of November on the principles of military balance, arms limitation, detente and cooperation in Europe. He underlined the necessity of talks between East and West and said that it would be even better if there were to be a meeting next year between Brezhnev and Reagan as the two highest-placed leaders of the two world powers.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON SCHMIDT-MITTERRAND TALKS

DW091047 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 9 Oct 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Regarding the meeting between FRG Chancellor Schmidt and French President Mitterrand, LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN writes: Following these talks, we may take it for granted that the chancellor and the president, who met for the first time without the unpleasant protocol of an official conference, have come closer together. After all, Mitterrand, who remained rather aloof from Bonn after his inauguration, now speaks of a preferential relationship and this is a clear indication that harmony has grown broader. There was, by the way, perfect harmony of views between the chancellor and the president on the very point over which differences cropped up between Willy Brandt and Mitterrand during the former's recent visit: the conviction that Moscow's missile armament seriously threatens West Europe's security and that a renunciation of NATO's counterarmament decisions might entail fatal consequences.

A SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG editorial says: The German-French summit talks in Latche in southwest France, which both sides called private, were quite clearly marked by a great deal of harmony of views about regaining military balance in Europe. Both Mitterrand and Schmidt made a point of welcoming the U.S. arms buildup plans, declaring that a balance of power in the heart of the old continent is the precondition for peace. Ronald Reagan was complimented on giving the right answer to the massive missile threat by the Soviets. In this respect, the Latche meeting was extremely important.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG sums up its view: Chancellor Schmidt returned to Bonn from his political trip to the French Atlantic coast with the certainty that President Mitterrand fully backs him in the vital questions concerning East-West policies. This backing is highly valuable in domestic policy because there are considerable forces in the grand government party which overtly and covertly oppose the Federal Government. The opponents of the chancellor within the ranks of his own party, who consider U.S. President Reagan's pace in security and disarmament too vigorous and daring, are very much at variance with the view of their socialist friends beyond the Rhine. The editorial then continues: Unlike the harmony with respect to security policy, the European policy balance sheet of Latche shows considerable gaps. Unfortunately, Schmidt and Mitterrand did not go beyond merely establishing possibilities for rapprochement. This is regrettable particularly because unemployment, currency calamities and agricultural worries are problems which seriously jeopardize the cohesion of the EC states.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE COMMENTS ON MIDDLE EAST

[Commentary signed G-N.: "Crisis Management"]

[Text] The inner stability of Egypt is the subject of increased Western concern, at least for a longer transition period. The period of an outward contribution to stability, as far as possible, again lies solely on the shoulders of America. Whenever it is important, the Europeans have nothing to offer. The Near and the Middle East are a permanent test of their foreign political ambitions according to the Venice statement and of their failure in the concrete case.

The U.S. 6th Fleet has taken a watch position in the eastern Mediterranean. The planned American-Egyptian maneuvers will be intensified next month. The fact that two wings of B-52 long-distance bombers are supposed to drop a load of live bombs on a part of the Egyptian desert, is certainly not an answer to the question of whether the planes can fly nonstop from America and back if refueled in the air. It is much rather a demonstrative political act. The American long-distance bombers will draw a political line on the map. A linkage of interests will be demonstrated. It is supposed to have effects with regard to all sides. One effect will help harassed Sudan in its conflict with Libya: another the moderate states on the Arab peninsula, particularly Saudi Arabia; a third will help Israel directly; and the fourth will reach to Moscow. The Soviet Union is warned against exploiting the insecure situation after As-Sadat's death. The Moscow protest signals that the message has been received.

American arms and American presence are of little help for the inner stabilization of harassed governments on the African-Asiatic subcontinent. As-Sadat did not fall victim to outer enemies in Libya or Syria but to the radical Islamic renovation movement. The same force had overthrown the shah and threatened the Saud family at the great mosque of Mecca. A cultural revolution is being attempted, and it is aimed at Western materialism thus also at Moscow. The new American engagement in Egypt and Arabia needs tact and a sense of proportion in order to fulfill its aim, the warning of third states against interference, without increasing the inner Islamic unrest.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY ADDRESSES PLEA TO USSR

[Excerpt] Munich, 13 Oct (DPA) -- The political committee of the North Atlantic Assembly has appealed to the Soviet Union "not to exert pressure on Poland and to respect the right of the Polish people to self-determination." The North Atlantic Assembly began its annual meeting in Munich yesterday. In a resolution to be voted upon on Thursday and Friday, the NATO parliamentarians called on the members of the Western alliance to impress on the Soviet leadership the importance of noninterference in Poland. They also appealed to Moscow to withdraw Soviet troops from Afghanistan. A draft resolution by the military committees of the North Atlantic Assembly calls on member states to "provide the necessary forces for a credible deterrent".

CHEYSSON CITED ON TALKS WITH CZYREK, WALESA

[Maurice Delarue dispatch: "Pierre Mauroy To Visit Warsaw mid-December"]

[Text] During Cheysson's visit to Warsaw, Mr Kania, head of the Polish communist party, renewed the invitation to Mr Mitterrand to visit Poland. Mauroy will pay an official visit to the Polish capital in mid-December, the external relations minister has stated. Moreover, visits are envisaged for the ministers of culture, research, agriculture and health.

Cheysson who returned to Paris in the evening of Friday 9 October after a meeting with Polish communist party leader Kania, had two intentions. His avowed objective was to ascertain the real situation in a country which plays a decisive role in East-West relations and to see what France could do to help it. His second, undeclared, objective was to preach wisdom, to help "defuse" the internal Polish tensions which could have serious international consequences.

The economic crisis is far from being solved. Poland still needs credits and food, but the Minister pointed to encouraging signs. "Virtually nobody is going hungry," he said before leaving Warsaw. Poland is now exporting potatoes; it is self-sufficient in sugar and the grain harvest is up to 2 million tons. But the meat shortage continues and there is a disastrous drop in coal production, which will affect France.

At the political level Mr Cheysson described as a "major event" the talks he had "in complete freedom" with what he called "nonofficial authorities but which are representative of the Polish population," like Monsignor Dabrowksi, number two among the clergy, and above all, Walsea. "Who would have thought 2 years ago that such free conversations would be possible?" he said. "Who would conceive of such conversations elsewhere in East Europe?"

Nonetheless it is doubtful that the leadership was delighted at the precedent set, which gives the Solidarity trade union a kind of international consecration. When he received the French press, Polish Foreign Minister Czyrek refused to comment on the Cheysson-Walesa meeting, arguing that he did not know what had been said. Nonetheless he vehemently condemned (without naming Solidarity) "irresponsible forces with anarchic leanings which are supported by outside forces seeking confrontation."

As regards French aid, Mr Cheysson stressed that the Poles are expecting credits in various forms, not only from France but from the West as a whole. Mr Czyrek, however, presented things differently: "Poland," he said, "expects cooperation from France in all spheres which serve economic and social stabilization which is the vital precondition for any political stability."

This was s superfluous recommendation addressed to Mr Cheysson. Although he did not say it in public, the minister had come to tell his interlocutors in substance: "We want to help you but our big Western economic partners are growing tired. They fear that aid without security. Do not destroy the Polish economy; recovery must start at any price. An upturn in coal production would be particularly desirable and, in a period of energy shortages, it would be of service to the whole world ...."

The leadership was all for that, as was Monsignor Dabrowski (to whom Mr Cheysson apparently presented this argument in a more historical form). But the same was not true of Mr Walesa for whom this plea for a period of industrial peace was particularly intended. "There is no question of my appealing to the workers," the Solidarity chairman replied in substance. "I would not be followed. We must continue to develop and extend our roots to secure new guarantees."

Mr Walesa seems as unaware of the international risks which his action involves as he is of what Mr Czyrek calls "the historical drafts" surrounding Poland and which are prompting the Warsaw government to work "in a realistic spirit" to take account "of geopolitical constraints" and, more explicitly, "to humor the Kremlin".

In any case Mr Cheysson denied having made any allusion to Polish-Soviet relations. Alliances could not be challenged or even discussed in the East any more than in the West. The minister admitted that relations between Paris and Moscow have "cooled" owing to Afghanistan and the Soviet Euromissiles. But he did not notice any anxiety on this subject among the Poles, any more than among other ministers from Warsaw Pact countries with whom he met in New York.

Finally, Mr Cheysson expressed the hope that the dialogue opened with Warsaw can be "an element" in a broader dialogue with the other East European countries, but he admitted that the "doctrine" of the Socialist government to which he belongs is still not "totally clear" on this point.

During his stay he drew many parallels between the left's arrival in power in France and the "renewal of Polish socialism." He apparently even tried to mollify Mr Walesa by telling him that if he succeeded in introducing a pluralist society in Poland "it would be bound to strengthen socialism in France." For his part the Polish Minister [as published], asked whether he deemed the left's victory in France "important" for French-Polish relations, replied with a touch of irony: "I think so, but not for ideological reasons because family quarrels are sometimes the fiercest."

CHEYSSON DISCUSSES MIDEAST, CANCUN CONFERENCE

[Unattributed Report: "An Obstacle to 'Rapproachement Within Arab Nation' Removed"]

[Text] As-Sadat's death removes "an obstacle" to the "rapprochement within the Arab nation" necessary to peace, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said on Sunday 11 October in reply to questions asked by Europe 1 Press Club journalists.

Questioned on the consequences of President as-Sadat's death, the minister first stated that the consolidation of the power of his presumed successor Mr Mubarak is "a very difficult matter," if he succeeds, "We have no reason to think that there would be a marked change of policy," but if he is "forced to take tough measures we have no way of knowing what would happen."

Mr Cheysson continued: "There was not one Arab leader (with whom he or Mr Mitterrand recently met) who did not admit that peace in the Near East requires Egypt's return to the Arab camp. There is not one of them, neither Palestinian nor Syrian -- I am thinking of those who are regarded as extremists -- nor anybody among the moderates in the Gulf countries or the Maghreb, who did not recognize that there is no chance of an all-embracing peace in the Near East until Egypt returns to the framework of the Arab nation because peace will necessarily stem from negotiation among the parties concerned -- Israel on the one hand and the Arabs on the other. Until Egypt is with the Arabs nobody can see a way of negotiating the problems which were not raised within the Camp David framework. Consequently if you wish to be optimistic...you can say that As-Sadat's death, which as such is horrible, with all the consequences it might have for Egypt, removes an obstacle to this rapprochement within the Arab nation...the Arab League secretary general said that immediately."

"The Camp David process has virtually ended. Egypt's recovery of Egyptian territories is to be completed in April. What is left of Camp David after that?" The minister also said. When it was pointed out to him that there would be "continuous ties" between Israel and Egypt which the other Arab states reject, Mr Cheysson replied: "The others will certainly have to have contact with Israel. They know that quite well in private.... There is not a single Arab leader who now denies Israel's right to a future."

Reiterating that there is not one Arab leader who "fails to recognize that solving the Near East's fundamental problems -- the most important being the Palestinian problem -- requires a common Arab front," Mr Cheysson explained: "But each of the Arab countries has a major concern and they do not have the same one... I think that gives a very good chance for negotiation.... I am thinking of Jordan: the Jordanians are thinking primarily of the fate of their brothers or cousins on the other side of the Jordan River. In Lebanon people would like to survive and to exist as a state. The PLO is anxious to have a state and not to be merely a fighting organization. Syria is very anxious about its borders and about the military threat it sees in Israel. Saudi Arabia fears that the continuation of the war might create social disturbances and has one major concern -- the holy places. I think that negotiations will have a fairly good chance since the concerns are different. But Egypt must return to this unit if it is to have its true dimension. Thus, if President Mubarak asserts his authority he can lead Egypt into all-embracing discussions which, of course, will take Camp David into account.... If President Mubarak can lead Egypt into this discussion the Arab side will be able to negotiate."

Turning to the North-South summit which will be held in Cancun (Mexico) at the end of October, Mr Cheysson stated that it must produce "two or three specific, clearly defined decisions." He announced that France had sent a memorandum to the participants asking two questions to which it intends to obtain "the answer yes or no." "1 -- Should all-embracing negotiations at the United Nations start immediately after the current UN session? We believe that this is vital and that, from the political viewpoint, if this negotiation doesnot start we will have intolerable tension which will make it impossible to discuss any problem elsewhere.

"2 -- A proposal has been made by the World Bank for a massive injection of investments for energy production in the world. The World Bank has proposed an energy subsidiary...which would make it possible to mobilize large amounts of money coming from the international financial market, especially from the oil-producing countries.... Should this proposal be accepted, or a proposal which is at least equivalent in its financial effects?"

(In fact these two questions are addressed to the United States, which is hindering "all-embracing negotiations" within the United Nations for a "new world economic order." Former UN Assembly Chairman Mr von Wechmar (FRG) has the job of organizing these negotiations. Moreover the World Bank's "Energy Subsidiary" would aim to organize cooperation between the Western countries, the oil-producing countries and the Third World for developing energy within the latter, giving the oil-producing states, which are being asked to finance the operation, a more important role within existing international financial organizations. Should this cooperation be hindered at world level France would ask the EEC to organize it.)

COMMUNIST PARTY PUBLISHES RESOLUTION 13 OCT

[By Yves de Saint Jacob]

[Text] Paris, 13 Oct (AFP) -- The French Communist Party (PCF) leadership, at its 24th congress next February, will not change its decision to join the Socialist government. This was made clear in the party resolution published in today's Communist daily L'HUMANITE for debate by the 600,000 party members.

It calls on them to show "unfailing solidarity" for the government of Socialist Premier Pierre Mauroy and to act "loyally within the new majority."

Observers here said that the heavy loss of votes suffered by the PCF in the recent presidential and parliamentary elections -- Communist deputies in the 491-seat National Assembly fell from 86 to 44 -- did not appear to weaken the position of party leader Georges Marchais. Some reports have said that he will be ousted.

Mr Marchais has stated that the PCF, with four ministers in the Cabinet, will stay in the government for as long as possible. He said that those who believed differently, that the Communist ministers would soon quit, were making a big mistake.

One of them, Charles Fiterman, (transport), is a top-ranker in the government. He is a minister of state making him the fourth ranking minister in the 43-strong cabinet.

Despite this, the PCF resolution stressed that its presence in the left coalition government, breaking 23 years of continuous right government, did not in any way mean that it was dropping Communist ideas and aims.

The congress will mainly concentrate on winning back lost votes. In the 1967 parliamentary elections the party won 22.5 percent of the votes compared to 19 percent by the non-communist left. The June 1981 results showed a spectacular loss of votes for the communists (16 percent) and a massive gain for the non-communist left (37.5 percent).

The Socialist Party, with its tiny Radical allies, has an overall majority in the assembly with 270 seats, compared to 107 in the last assembly.

The PCF Politbureau is urging a new-style mass movement to win more support.

The resolution termed the European communist bloc balance-sheet as "globally positive" and affirmed that there were various paths toward communism and not just one model way.

The resolution said that the PCF would seek disarmament in Europe in joint actions with social-democratic and Christian forces.

TRADE MINISTER COMMENTS ON ARMS SALES POLICY

NC131335 Paris AFP in English 1306 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 13 Oct (AFP) -- External Trade Minister Michel Jobert, explaining France's arms sales policy, said today: "It is not easy to be a great country, with a modern army, without selling arms."

France is the world's third largest arms manufacturer, after the United States and the Soviet Union, and just before Britain.

The minister, interviewed in the leftist daily LIBERATION, was asked whether France should sell arms without taking into account whether the client governments respect human rights. Mr Jobert, a former foreign minister under President Georges Pompidou, replied: "Different statements have given the impression of a certain indecision. But in fact they reveal a debate between the desirable and the possible." He said that the statements on arms sales by President Francois Mitterrand, on the eve of his official visit to London last month, indicated that "a nation's policy cannot be suddenly changed, even if one wants to make the change."

"The president made it clear that France's national defense depends on a foreign arms market large enough to guarantee that it can mass produce arms."

On the moral issue, Mr Jobert (?said): "I think that if a fingernail is torn off in some faraway corner of Asia, then we should refuse to supply the pincers which could be used to pull out this nail."

LIBERATION then asked about France's policy of selling nuclear plants to Iraq and South Korea.

Mr Jobert pointed out: "When a country is rich enough to buy a nuclear plant, then sooner or later it will be able to manufacture an atomic bomb." He said that such a country would be able to do so "as soon as it has 200 trained nuclear scientists.. Uranium is less important than brains."

CUBA'S RODRIGUEZ LLOMPART IN PARIS FOR TALKS

FL130036 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Hector Rodriguez Llompart, minister-president of Cuba's State Committee for Economic Cooperation, is in Paris heading a delegation which will participate in the sixth meeting of the Cuban-French Joint Committee, scheduled to begin tomorrow in the French capital.

During the meeting, which will last 2 days, the Cuban delegation will have as its objective the increase of exports of rum, molasses, textile products and other commodities traditionally purchased in our country by France as well as it will attempt to place in the French market other Cuban products not presently known in France.

The participants in the Cuban-French Joint Committee meeting will also examine the possibility of increasing credits granted by France for the purchase of agricultural products, foodstuffs and spare parts, among others related to the investment chapter.

During his stay in Paris, Minister Rodriguez Llompart will hold talks with French Minister of State for Foreign Trade Michel Jobert, Minister of State for Transportation Charles Fiterman, Minister of State for Economic Planning and Development Michel Rocard and External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson.

BURMESE AMBASSADOR -- French President Francois Mitterrand today praised Burma for its neutrality and pledged French help toward the development plans of this South-East Asian country. Accepting the accreditation here of the new Burmese ambassador to Paris, U Ko Ko Gui, Mr Mitterrand said France shared Burma's wishes for good relations, respect for human rights and no big power interference in the region. GOVERNMENT EASILY PASSES CONFIDENCE VOTE

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (AFP) -- The Italian Government won a vote of confidence tonight by a comfortable majority on a bill allocating 82.886 billion lira (71 million dollars) a year to finance political parties from this year on.

The vote was 351 to 42 with 170 abstentions (by Communists and independent leftists). The five-party coalition cabinet was backed in the vote by all its parties -- Christian Democrats, Socialists, Liberals, Social Democrats and Republicans.

POLAND'S CZYREK MEETS OFFICIALS, DISCUSSES AID

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian aid for Poland and the most recent developments in the Eastern European country in the wake of the independent trade union Solidarnosc congress were the two major issues dealt with here Monday in consultations between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and the head of Polish diplomacy, Josef Czyrek, who winds up a two-day working visit to Rome today.

The Polish foreign minister also met with Premier Giovanni Spadolini and renewed to him the invitation to come to Poland on official visit extended by the Warsaw head of government General Jan Jaruzelski. Czyrek also discussed with Spadolini developments on the international scene and the revival of a dialogue for East-West detente.

In the talk held by the two foreign ministers, Czyrek and Colombo picked up where they left off three weeks ago in consultations held on the sidelines of the opening of the United Nations General Assembly in New York. The Polish diplomatic chief updated the Italian minister on the situation in Poland and developments surrounding the Solidarity congress.

Czyrek confirmed the seriousness of the economic situation in his country and, citing the figures, disclosed that GNP declined by four percent last year as compared to 1979 and that the 1979 GNP was down by 2.3 percent under the previous year. In the area of trade relations, the foreign minister said that coal exports, Poland's biggest export, slid by 22 percent last year under the volume sold abroad in 1979 and that projections for the current year paint an even worse picture. At present, he said, his nation's foreign indebtedness stands at $27 billion. To meet requirements for the current year, Poland needs another $10.2 billion and Warsaw government authorities are seeking to renegotiate debts outstanding.

Italy, Poland's fourth trading partner in the West, has thus far extended a $177 million credit line to the Eastern European country and come up with an additional $15 million in food aid, the last $5.5 million slice of which was granted last week. Italy is willing to further assist Poland with food aid and a financial accord for the utilization of a $50 million credit line already opened.

Meeting With Pope

[Text] Castelgandolfo, 13 Oct (ANSA) -- Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek was received by Pope John Paul II today in the papal summer residence in this hilltown south of Rome. Czyrek arrived in Rome yesterday where he had talks with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo and with Premier Giovanni Spadolini.

As is usual with private audiences the Vatican maintained silence on the content of the conversation between the Polish minister and the pontiff; however, ecclesiastical sources said that they spoke of the situation in Poland after the Solidarnosc free trade union congress and in view of the coming plenum assembly of the Polish Unified Workers Party. The two men also reportedly discussed the economic crisis and the role of the church as moderator, these same sources said.

Earlier in the day, Czyrek was received in Vatican City by Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli. That meeting lasted around an hour.

PRESS ON LIBYAN PLOT TO KILL U.S. AMBASSADOR

AU131613 Rome ANSA in English 1553 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian press today was full of reactions to a report in an American weekly that Libya had plotted to kill the United States ambassador to Rome, Maxwell Rabb.

NEWSWEEK magazine in its latest issue claimed that the plot was only foiled by the expulsion from Italy of ten Libyan nationals.

Headlines in Italian papers today read: "Plot Uncovered in Rome To Kill U.S. Ambassador," LA STAMPA. "Libyans Sent To Kill U.S. Ambassador Stopped at Fiumicino" (Rome's international airport, editor's note) was the heading in IL GIORNALE NUOVO. "They Were To Kill Ambassador Rabb," LA REPUBBLICA, and "More Suspicions on Libyan Plot To Kill U.S. Ambassador," CORRIERE DELLA SERA.

NEWSWEEK said it had learned that Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi had reacted to the U.S. downing of two Libyan jets over the Gulf of Sidra last August by ordering Rabb's assassination.

The 71-year-old ambassador is Jewish and a friend of U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

The magazine said that the plot was aborted when Italian police deported ten suspected Libyan hit men.

NEWSWEEK went on to say that "Washington officials now believe Al-Qadhdhafi has called off the assassination attempt, but they are not entirely certain." After the Gulf of Sidra confrontation, U.S. intelligence also picked up evidence that Al-Qadhdhafi has hatched yet another assassination plot, this time against Reagan, himself, the weekly said.

Italian officials yesterday refused to comment on the NEWSWEEK article.

However, Rome's LA REPUBBLICA claimed that the plot had received unofficial confirmation yesterday from circles at the Italian Ministry of the Interior.

The foreign and interior ministers are keeping mum, wrote CORRIERE DELLA SERA, but there are reports of a recent expulsion of Al-Qadhdhafi men from Rome. The paper said it was sure that no trace of these expulsions would be found in the files of border police. It would not be the first time that in delicate political or diplomatic matters, exchanges or expulsions of Libyans or Palestinians take place under military cover, the paper said.

An Al-Qadhdhafi plot to assassinate the American ambassador in Rome is almost a certainty, wrote Milan's GIORNALE NUOVO, "even though, for one reason or another no one wants to officially confirm this," the paper added.

Other Italian papers cited the weekly's assertions and officials reactions without comment.

KIPRIANOU MEETS WALDHEIM IN NEW YORK 12 OCT

NC122206 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] President Kiprianou held a private meeting with UN Secretary General Waldheim in New York tonight. At the meeting they reviewed all developments in the Cyprus issue. President Kiprianou outlined Cyprus' positions on the present phase of the problem and they also had an exchange of views.

As is known, since the UN secretary general is considering the possibility of playing a more active role in the inter-Cypriot talks, it was natural, as it has been learned, for this matter to also be discussed. Mr Waldheim referred to some of his thoughts which constituted the subject on which views were exchanged. Mr Kiprianou told Mr Waldheim that he intends to discuss the whole matter with the National and Ministerial Councils in Cyprus and, after he concludes the round of necessary consultations and draws final conclusions, he will convey his final views to the UN secretary general.

As the president of the republic has repeatedly stated, it is understood that no committment has been made until this round of consultations is concluded.

A conference followed which, in addition to Mr Waldheim and President Kiprianou, was attended on the Cypriot side by: Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Permanent Cypriot Delegate at the United Nations Mavrommatis, Deputy Permanent Cypriot Delegate at the United Nations Sierifis, Director of the President's Private Office Vovidhis, and Director of the Foreign Minister's Private Office Siambos. On the UN side, the conference was attended by: UN Under Secretary General Urquhart, UN Secretary General's Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi, and UN secretary general's advisers Sherry and Lew.

A luncheon given by Mr Waldheim in honor of President Kiprianou followed the meeting. Another private meeting between President Kiprianou and Mr Waldheim will be held tomorrow afternoon to conclude their talks.

Communique Issued

The communique adds: During the meeting further measures in connection with the negotiations procedure were discussed.

Concluding Discussions

NC140130 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] The exchange of views between President Kiprianou and UN Secretary General Waldheim on the Cyprus issue and its latest developments continued and was concluded today. Following the conclusion of tonight's meeting, it has been confirmed that upon his return to Cyprus the president will brief the Council of Ministers and the National Council before he defines our position on certain matters raised during the discussions with the UN secretary general. It has also been learned that, on the same matters, there will be consultations with the Greek Government after Sunday's elections.

Tonight's discussion was conducted in depth on all aspects of the Cyprus problem. President Kiprianou first had a private meeting with the UN secretary general. Another meeting then followed which was attended on the Cypriot side by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Permanent Cypriot Delegate at the United Nations Mavrommatis and other officials.

On the UN side, the meeting was attended by Under Secretary General Urquhart, UN Secretary General Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi and UN secretary general advisers Sherry and Lew.

After this general meeting, the president of the republic again had a private meeting with Mr Waldheim. The entire meeting lasted for about 1 and 1/2 hours. Earlier, the president had a meeting with Mr (Deshani), chairman of the nonaligned contact group on the Cyprus issue and permanent Algerian delegate at the United Nations. During the meeting, Mr (Deshani) stated that the nonaligned group will support the reconvening of the UN General Assembly or the convocation of a special General Assembly session to discuss the Cyprus issue as long as it will not be discussed during the General Assembly's regular session.

KLIRIDHIS URGES RATIONAL WALDHEIM INITIATIVE VIEW

[Text] Speaking tonight at the opening of a club at Eylenja, DISI [Democratic Rally] Chairman Kliridhis said that the new state of affairs created by the Waldheim initiative requires calm and rational viewing. He also said that during these critical moments it is necessary to show prudence, a sense of responsibility and courage. Mr Kliridhis stressed that the new development must be viewed by all, solely guided by Cyprus' interest and unaffected by personal, partisan or ideological expediencies. He added: The DISI will courageously and responsibly adopt a stand toward the new Waldheim initiative when it is fully briefed about his ideas.

Mr Kliridhis also added that the DISI action to return to the National Council and to help the government face our national issue has not met with proper response either in charting a more concrete line to promote the Cyprus problem or in the handling of our domestic affairs. Finally, he said that the policy being followed by the president of the republic is tantamount to abuse of authority, and that the Democratic Rally will oppose this policy with all lawful means.

PAPER MAKES APPEAL TO NEW U.S. AMBASSADOR

NC131038 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 13 Oct 81 p 3

[From the "Liberal" column: "The U.S. Responsibilities, Commitments"]

[Text] The new U.S. ambassador, Mr R. Ewing, is arriving in Cyprus today to take over his duties. During his swearing-in ceremony in Washington, the new U.S. ambassador referred to President Ronald Reagan's commitment to "a fair, lasting and peaceful Cyprus solution" and promised that he will exert personal efforts in this direction, as well as for good relations between his country and Cyprus.

Despite the fact that the commitments which the U.S. President has undertaken can be interpreted -- because of their wording -- in various ways, particularly by the directly interested parties, we welcome Mr Ewing with an open heart and wish him a successful career here, both in the field of solving the Cyprus problem and of developing Cypriot-U.S. relations.

Both the U.S. leadership and the new U.S. ambassador are surely familiar with our views on the solution of our problem as well as with the possibilities and the responsibilities which we believe the United States has undertaken for "a fair, lasting and peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem." However, if the U.S. policy is to continue to respect and to comply, in the case of Cyprus, with the wishes of the strong party, [the Turkish side] the new U.S. ambassador's term could expire without any progress being made on the Cyprus problem -- leaving it to continue in the present stalemate.

But if the U.S. policy is based on the principles of justice and truth, if it is based on respect of the people's right to be governed on the basis of what constitutes for the United States a sacred doctrine -- "one man, one vote" -- just as we are demanding, then the contribution of the U.S. administration toward a proper solution of the problem could be significant. Mr Ewing spoke about the U.S. President's commitment to work for a lasting solution. The duration of the Cyprus solution is directly connected with the type and the nature of the solution. The duration of the solution depends absolutely on whether it will be fair, or whether it will depend on rotten foundations that would be knocked down by the first difficulties. The first Cyprus solutions [the Zurich and London agreements] is an obvious case to be avoided.

Recently Greeks in California submitted a lengthy document on the history of the Cyprus problem to the White House. The document contains views on the solution of the problem, views that are in agreement with the U.S. and the international concept of the meaning of justice. In reply, the White House announced that this document, which made an impression, was conveyed to the National Security Council for study. We believe that the new U.S. ambassador to Cyprus is aware of all these things, which will be of great service in the task which he is undertaking in Cyprus.

We know that ambassadors do not shape their country's policy about a problem, but their contribution to the shaping of this policy is unquestionable. And it is this role that we expect Mr Ewing to play. In this task he will have the support and assistance of the Government of Cyprus, of our people, of all of us. This is so because we believe that the United States has the ability to influence developments around the Cyprus problem in a correct direction that will lead to a "fair, lasting and peaceful solution."

KIPRIANOU REPORTED DISPLEASED WITH INTERLOCUTOR

NC110922 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 11 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Government officials and members of the Democratic Party are engineering the removal of Yeoryios Ioannidhis from the position of interlocutor or his forced resignation because they consider him an obstacle to the political aims of President Kiprianou and of the ruling party in general.

According to reports from sources that are in a position to know the political backstage, the president of the republic and the Democratic Party are not happy with Ioannidhis' recent public speeches in which he supported the formation of an all-party government and dropped barbs against the government.

Other reports mention that the displeasure of the president and of the Democratic Party with the interlocutor comes from the fact that Ioannidhis will probably be supported by various parties as a candidate for the presidential election that is to be held early in 1983, a few months before the expiration of the current president's term of office.

As O AGON recently published, efforts are being exerted to elbow out Ioannidhis. When Ioannidhis was called to comment upon the reports, he stated that "he does not consider it expedient to make any statement."

PAPER REPORTS ARRIVAL OF IRANIAN SHAH'S FAMILY

NC110917 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 11 Oct 81 p 1

[Exclusive report by Titos Kolotas]

[Text] Limassol, 10 Oct -- Our exclusive reports note that former Iranian Empress Farah and her son the former crown prince of the Iranian throne, Cyrus, are in the British base of Akrotiri near Limassol. These two "important" British guests hastily departed Egypt, where they have been living since the shah's death, and it is believed they have taken refuge in Akrotiri for security reasons following President As-Sadat's assassination.

It is believed that the current conditions in Egypt following As-Sadat's assassination have raised fears for the security of the shah's family should it remain there.

Our report on the departure of Farah and Cyrus from Egypt is strengthened by reports of a movement and a disturbance by fanatical Muslim groups which, as is well known, are closely cooperating with Khomeyni's theocratic Muslim regime in Iran.

More details on the movements of the two Iranian blue-bloods and their stay in Akrotiri have not been learned, but it is believed that they will remain in Cyprus until the situation in Egypt improves.

Their goal should be to return to Egypt, because it will be difficult to find a country that will accept them as permanent residents.

We wish to stress that there is absolutely no truth in these reports."

RALLIS SPEAKS AT IRAKLION RALLY, DEFENDS NATO

[Excerpts] Prime Minister and leader of New Democracy Rallis spoke at 1945 tonight at Elevtheria Square, Iraklion, Crete.

At the start of his speech, Rallis denounced the efforts on behalf of PASOK to prevent the New Democracy gathering. Continuing, he recalled that New Democracy's expansion started in Crete and was a complete success. "In a very short time," Rallis underscored among other things, "we bloodlessly restored democracy, a democracy which in no way falls behind any other democracy in the world."

Rallis then referred to the New Democracy government policy on domestic and foreign problems. Rallis specifically referred to Greek-Turkish relations, to Greek relations with NATO, to the bases and to the great benefits of our country's accession to the European Community.

Replying to a question from PASOK Chairman Papandreou, delivered in yesterday's speech in Thessaloniki on why we returned to NATO, since the conditions for which we withdrew in 1974 have not yet changed, Rallis stated:

"In 1974 we withdrew from NATO in order to offer moral support to Cyprus. We did well. In 1980, we returned to NATO in order to guarantee our country's defense. Our withdrawal from NATO in 1974, among other things, resulted in the enforcement of the embargo on Turkey. In 1980, we were convinced we had to return because we saw that the country would not be able to defend itself against any enemies unless it had the assistance of the alliance."

Rallis also underscored that the good organization of our armed forces, which the chairman of PASOK admits, is because our country belonged to the political wing of NATO during these years and was therefore regularly supplied with the necessary war equipment to maintain its forces in a battleworthy condition.

He also said that during the New Democracy governments of recent years there was a full guarantee of the absolute balance of power between Greece and Turkey, which was established at the ratio of 7 to 10 with respect to military aid.

Continuing, Rallis stated that Greece belongs to the West because it is the West. He characteristically mentioned France, which belongs both to NATO and to the EEC, like all European peoples. "This policy," he added, "is pursued by all the European socialist parties with the exception of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement--PASOK." Referring to what the leader of PASOK said about the bases, Rallis stated that these are not death bases as PASOK's chairman describes them but that they are the very same bases which existed in 1964-1965 when Yeoryios Papandreou was the prime minister and today's leader of PASOK was a minister in that government.

Rallis stressed the bases serve the basic interests of both Greece and the alliance. In reference to nuclear weapons, he emphasized that today the bases have only certain improved and very modern weapons compared to the weapons which they had in 1965-65.

Continuing, Rallis said the plan on the U.S. bases in Greece, submitted by the foreign minister to the Americans, is a plan which improves the existing situation in a spectacular way. The other side did not accept this plan during the negotiations. It was resolved that the agreement will be signed after the election. This agreement will be to the benefit of the alliance but it will also guarantee the interests of Greece 100 percent.

Concluding, Rallis expressed the certainty that the Greek people will once again give the majority to New Democracy, which will not simply win next Sunday, but will triumph.

Campaign Tension Reported

[By Pierre Durel]

[Text] Athens, 12 Oct (AFP) -- A shift in Greece's political power and a resulting period of instability appear increasingly likely, observers said, as intense verbal, and even some physical clashes, have been reported in the run-up to next Sunday's general elections. The sources said Andreas Papandreou's opposition Panhellenic Socialist Movement could become Greece's leading party for the first time since it was formed six years ago. But, they added, it was doubtful that the party could gain an absolute majority in the 300-seat parliament.

The ruling New Democracy Party expects to lose 30 of its 175 seats in Parliament, party insiders said.

That shift in power could mean a period of instability in Greece, with new elections within a year, because of the opposite views of Greece's two major parties and the unlikelihood of coalition rule.

The campaign which got underway on September 20 heated up abruptly this weekend when five people were seriously wounded in clashes between members of Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis' New Democracy Party and supporters of Mr Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialists at Iraklion, on the southern island of Kriti, the site of a large United States military base. Responsibility for the incidents has not been firmly established, but the pro-government press played them up on its front pages today. The opposition press played them down, noting that the socialists also had condemned the violence.

Meanwhile, Deputy Premier and Defense Minister Evangelos Averof, known as a fervent anti-socialist, stepped into the verbal war, with a virulent campaign against what he has called foreign interference in the campaign. In a statement last night, Mr Averof condemned the arrival of Spanish Socialist Workers' Party head Felipe Gonzalez to campaign for Mr Papandreou, and the upcoming visit of former Swed Social-Democratic Prime Minister Olof Palme. The deputy premier had earlier condemned the socialists' use of actress Melina Mercouri and French Culture Minister Jack Lang, who both came as guests of the party.

Mr Averof has not flinched at using personal attacks; pointing out that Mr Papandreou was in the United States during World War II and the regime of the Greek colonels, which lasted from 1967 to 1974.

A naturalized American, Mr Papandreou renounced his U.S. citizenship after the colonels were overthrown, and has said his American connections put him in a better position to deal with Washington. Mr Averof also has expressed astonishment that Mr Papandreou is not a member of the Socialist International and has [implied] that the reason may be that his views are too Marxist for the group.

The prime minister instructed the minister of public order to proceed immediately to Crete to conduct an on-the-spot investigation of the incidents and the way in which the authorities handled them.

Katsadhimas arrived at Khania by air before noon today accompanied by the chief of the gendarmerie, Lieutenant General Rizas. After chairing a meeting at the gendarmerie headquarters, he left for Iraklion.

Papandreou Disavows Incidents

NC122351 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] The New Democracy administration was to have given an interview this evening in connection with the well-known incidents at Iraklion. The interview was canceled following a statement by PASOK Chairman Papandreou to Prime Minister Rallis according to which he disavowed the incidents and their perpetrators as irresponsible elements.

Furthermore, the PASOK executive office announced that the members and cadres of PASOK did not have, nor do they have, any connection with any provocations or incidents. The announcement mentions that the members and cadres of PASOK are ready to cooperate with the relevant authorities for the establishment of a democratic and mild atmosphere for the conduct of the elections.

Additional Reaction

NC131252 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1200 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Referring to the incidents at Iraklion during the election gathering addressed by Prime Minister and New Democracy leader Rallis, Public Order Minister Katsadhimas today made the following statement: The organs of order have been ordered henceforth to strictly apply without discrimination the letter and the spirit of the law.

In his statement, the minister of public order said that individuals, obviously with an undemocratic mentality, have tried to prevent the free demonstration of the convictions of the brave and proud people of Crete. The minister added: They have apparently taken advantage of the excessive tolerance and politeness which the organs of order have been displaying in an effort to avoid tension and to contribute to the carrying out of the election campaign in a calm and civilized way. In conclusion, Mr Katsadhimas said that fortunately only in a few cases, for which the necessary administrative measures have been taken, has undue tolerance by police organs been noted and this, or course, has not been intentional.

RALLIS INTERVIEWED ON PASOK ELECTORAL STRENGTH

NC112223 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 11 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Exclusive interview granted by New Democracy leader and prime minister of the caretaker government Yeoryios Rallis to I KATHIMERINI chief editor Stamos Zoulas; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Prime Minister, could we start with a general observation by you on your election campaign contacts with the people?

[Answer] The strong militant spirit and universal mobilization of New Democracy's popular base are certainly the main characteristics in view of the forthcoming election confrontation. Also unprecedented for our own area are the mobilization and enthusiam of the youth and the women who have offered and continue to offer much, particularly in the organization sector. These factors already lead to the conclusion about a certain great victory which will go far beyond the 1977 victory, approaching the limits of the New Democracy triumph of 1974.

[Question] Doesn't your forecast clash with the general rule that the governing party suffers a natural erosion [of support] during its exercise of authority?

[Answer] This rule will be overturned in next Sunday's election because there are new factors in the creation of the people's will. At the outset we also have the considerable changes within our political area resulting from the dissolution of the center and by the return to New Democracy of the moderate wing of the extreme right which made up the majority in this area. In addition, the voter knows he has the responsibility in this election, for the first time, to decide on the endangered post-war institutions and firm national options which were decided upon, adopted and applied thanks to the decision of the greatest possible majority of the Greek people. To be more specific: In their declarations against the EEC and NATO and against our country's ties with the West, PASOK and the KKE ask the Greek people to condemn and revise a policy that was established with the consent of the majority and was ratified in nine elections since the war, and which was even implemented by governments supported by other parties, with the sole exception of the communist left.

[Question] One could observe that PASOK managed to double its election strength between the 1974 and 1977 elections on the basis of the same -- perhaps harder -- positions.

[Answer] Most certainly the increase in PASOK's strength between the two elections is not due to the positions it supports on matters of foreign policy. On the basis of some inexplicable, and I would say arbitrary line of thinking, a great proportion of its voters in 1977 considered PASOK's economic pronouncement as more credible and, at the same time, lowered the importance of its positions on foreign affairs. This conclusion is not just my own; it was officially underscored by PASOK's Central Committee in two of its resolutions which expressed concern over the existing ideological divergence in the beliefs of new voters and the declared principles of the movement.

[Question] What makes you believe that a similar line of thinking will not prevail over a considerable proportion of the electoral body in the next confrontation?

[Answer] As I have said, different conditions have developed now. Papandreou is the victim of self-suggestion by his own propaganda, which was aimed at creating the impression that PASOK is on the threshold of authority. Under the influence of this delusion he is now rattled by the possibility of being called upon to implement his thoughtless promises and to pay the price of his crazy excessive support of all demands submitted during the past 7 years.

Luckily for him personally, but also for the Greek people, there is no possibility that PASOK will be called upon to ante up -- without having any backing -- and to pay for the promises which it so freely distributed and which, according to the government's estimates, go far beyond the astronomical figure of 1 trillion drachma.

In addition, the Mitterrand government policy of austerity and restrictions that Papandreou hastened to adopt as an example is totally contrary to the sweet concoctions that the PASOK chairman has proposed to date as stimulants for the Greek economy. It is for this reason that he has now moderated his promises and asks for time, ceasing to present himself as an economic miracle worker. Although this position may be more realistic, it does tend to disappoint those who believed in his original pronouncements.

[Question] I could point out that in 1977 New Democracy considered foreign affairs as much more important for the election confrontation. The result, however, demonstrated that a considerable proportion of the electorate used different criteria in deciding where to cast its vote.

[Answer] It is a fact that this is also New Democracy's evaluation. Four years ago we mainly replied to the criticism of our opponents on foriegn policy implementation. Now it is we who criticize the positions of the opposition.

PASOK and the KKE, which question the consolidated positions of Greek foreign policy, represented -- until the 1977 election -- only 20 percent of the popular base. Consequently, there was no question of revision or undermining these positions.

Now, however, the position is very different. The two parties of the left could argue that they represent 35 percent of the Greek people and could call upon this strength in order to change the consolidated national orientation of the country.

Believing that such an argument does not represent the facts, New Democracy not only has the right but also the duty to criticize the positions supported by the two parties of the left and, primarily, to inform the Greek people about the calamitous repercussions inherent in their policy.

I believe this effort has succeeded and that the Greek voters have already grasped the meaning and the importance of next Sunday's election.

[Question] Let us now deal with another question. The opposition strongly criticizes the bilateral expansion of New Democracy. Its criticism is focused in particular on openings toward the extreme right.

[Answer] Let me use opposite terminology. This is not an opening, but a closing of a long-pending issue. In its effort to weaken New Democracy, the opposition overlooks the damage it causes to democracy. Immediately after the 1975 plebiscite, the opposition's policy tended to identify one third of the electoral body that voted for a crowned democracy with the remnants and the supporters of the dictatorship. It is the exemplary stand of this one third of the Greek people to respect the will of the majority that proves its strong devotion to the democratic process.

Knowing that I will never get a reply, I call upon Papandreou to state, at long last and publicly, the percentage that in his opinion represents the extreme right among the electorate, because the distortion that is being attempted with the use of the term "junta-royalism" is an insult directed at a considerable portion of the Greek people and attributes a nonexistent strength to the forces that support anomaly.

[Question] In recent weeks the election campaign has gained a certain tension that was not evident in the two previous elections. To what do you attribute this?

[Answer] The development of the election campaign has demonstrated that PASOK's chairman abhors dialogue and cannot stand criticism. This is unpleasant, since it proves a lack of democratic understanding. Perhaps as a result of his many years in opposition and the authoritarian structure and operation of his party, Papandreou believes that control and criticism are his own exclusive privilege, and he reacts with tension bordering on abuse whenever he cannot or does not desire to reply to New Democracy's arguments. Fortunately, the tension created by PASOK was a negative influence upon the Greek people, who detest a climate of hatred and mudslinging, which have brought so many hardships upon our country in the distant past as well as recently.

PAPANDREOU SPEAKS AT THESSALONIKI GATHERING

[Excerpts] Speaking at a public gathering tonight at Aristotelis square in Thessaloniki, PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou strongly criticized New Democracy's domestic and foreign policies and outlined his party's government program concerning NATO, the [U.S.] bases, Greek-Turkish relations and the Cyprus issue. He paid particular attention to the economic policy he will implement and PASOK's program for decentralized regional development.

Opening his speech, Mr Papandreou stressed that the battle has been decided and that only the formal end of the life and era of New Democracy remains. He further said that New Democracy's transformation from a party of radical liberalism into a European-style conservative party -- in the classic traditional rightwing of our country with the participation of fascist and monarchical elements which do not recognize or respect the people's verdict in the 1974 referendum -- is a very bad service to the country. This is so, because it will bring into the Chamber of Deputies -- in the place of the opposition, of course -- persons who do not respect the people's sovereignty and institutions. Of course, he stressed, this will not save New Democracy from the cliff toward which it is marching decisively and quickly. He then strongly criticized the dangermongering which the New Democracy has organized and systematically spread throughout the country. He said: Instead of dangermongering, the New Democracy ought first to give an account of its work even if it presents this account the way it wants. New Democracy should also say something about its program, and how it plans to solve the enormous problems both the nation and people are facing.

Referring to the national issue of Cyprus, Mr Papandreou said the government's policy is characterized by confusion. He said: Greece left NATO in 1974 because of the Cyprus issue and returned to NATO even though Cyprus is still under Turkish occupation. Mr Papandreou also stressed: The alliance, despite what Mr Rallis says, refuses to guarantee our eastern borders as it also refuses to define a ratio in granting military aid to Turkey and Greece. A gigantic operation is taking place today to modernize the Turkish Armed Forces and, I wonder, how can Mr Rallis talk about guarantees of our territorial integrity when the Rogers agreement has placed in doubt, in suspense, the question of who, within the NATO framework, controls the airspace?

Concerning Greek-Turkish relations, I will repeat that the negotiations are meaningless if their object is merely what Greece will cede to Turkey. We are extending an olive branch, we are making the offer of peace and cooperation between the two peoples, we are claiming absolutely nothing. At the same time, however, we are absolutely clear that we will not cede anything from our homeland's national, sovereign territory.

As far as Cyprus is concerned, it is a mistake to accept -- as, unfortunately, the government has indicated -- that the problem is between the two communities. The Cyprus problem is that Cyprus is now under occupation; 40 percent of Cyprus is occupied by Attila and the negotiations are between the Nicosia Government and Ankara. They are not negotiations with Denktas. What we stress is that we insist on the UN General Assembly resolutions.

Concerning the U.S. bases, we will begin negotiations and the first target will be to shape a time schedule for their removal. We will even ask for the control of an entire base in the case its operation undermines our national interests. We will also remove immediately and without negotiations all the nuclear warheads existing in our country, and we will make an open proposal to the Balkan countries to do the same.

Mr Papandreou went on to stress that PASOK will reponsibly answer the questions facing the new generation. In particular, he said, we will occupy ourselves not only with education but also with unemployment, underemployment, anguish and estrangement of the new generation.

Mr Papandreou also said that PASOK will recognize the national resistance, destroy the political dossiers, seek the return of political refugees, establish the simple proportional representation [electoral system] and abolish the preference voting for deputies.

The PASOK chairman concluded: Thus, from the burnt out land which we inherit from the rightwing the new Greece will be born, a Greece that will be expressing the hopes of the national resistance generation, the faith of the unyielding struggles generation and the dream of the polytechnic generation.

Comments on Speech

[Text] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou has adopted a new position on two basic policy issues. Speaking in Thessaloniki yesterday, he admitted -- for the first time -- that inflation, to a great extent, is imported, and assured that the organization of import trade will be established only if it is ascertained that imported goods are sold at higher prices in Greece. At the same time, in his speech yesterday, Mr Papandreou unleashed a strong attack against the KKE -- although he did not name it -- saying that "this is not the time for registering party strength" and that "all those who believe in the change should support PASOK, on which everything has fallen, to realize the change."

At noon yesterday, speaking to reporters at Kavouri [Athens suburb], Mr Papandreou predicted that the Thessaloniki gathering -- which was taking place at press time -- would be unprecedented. "The largest gathering in the history of Thessaloniki," he indicatively said. The interview was also attended by Mr Felipe Gonzalez, first secretary of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party.

In his speech yesterday, Mr A. Papandreou more specifically: -- admitted for the first time that, to a great extent, inflation is imported (note: a view that has been firmly supported by New Democracy and was opposed by the PASOK chairman).

-- In order to confront inflation, he said, the contribution of the small-and medium-size enterprises must be increased.

-- He modified his earlier position on the socialization of import trade by saying that an organization will be established for the import of basic products "when it is ascertained that these products are sold at higher prices in the domestic market."

-- He reiterated his position that control should be imposed on the prices of basic commodities in order to "break the dynamics" of inflation.

-- He said that, at the end of 1982, a 5-year plan would be submitted to the Chamber of Deputies. Its long-term financing would be ensured by public revenues which will result from reducing tax evasion and from the economic recovery. He est[illegible] accomplishing a five percent annual increase of the national income.

-- He reiterated his programmed position on the cleansing of private enterprises; suspend the operation of the nonviable ones while taking measures to absorb those working in them. In the viable enterprises -- which, however, are "crushed with debts to the banks" -- the loan capitals will be converted into shares. The public corporations will be cleansed by adopting various measures, including the participation of workers in their administration.

-- He reiterated his criticism about "dangermongering by the rightwing" and so forth.

FLORAKIS SPEAKS AT KKE THESSALONIKI RALLY 9 OCT

NC101920 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 10 Oct 81 p 9

[By correspondent Yiannis Liapis]

[Excerpts] Thessaloniki, 10 Oct -- KKE Secretary General Khariloas Florakis last night addressed a party preelection gathering at Aristotelis Square in Thessaloniki. In his speech, Florakis sought the committment of PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou (as the future prime minister, in the questions of NATO, the U.S. bases and EEC).

A democratic government, he said, must proceed with decisive measures against Americanocracy; it must lead the country out of NATO and out of the EEC monopolies. A tendency to yield to pressures, he warned, a tendency toward conciliation in any form with the U.S.-NATOite regime in the name of any difficulty or expedience would not provide a way out, it would further deepen national crisis.

Mr Florakis further reiterated that "there can be no change without the KKE" and appealed for "unity of all the democratic forces of the change." He avoided, however, to name these forces. He gave the impression that with the term "forces of the change" he exclusively meant PASOK alone.

Explaining his views about the "U.S. danger," Mr Florakis stressed:

--Our homeland today, fenced in by NATO -- full of U.S. bases and nuclear weapons, is in the forefront of a war threat. We face the danger of being pushed by the Americans into war adventures in the Middle East with unpredictable consequences.

After the above comment, which obviously emerged from the latest developments in Egypt, the KKE secretary general said:

--We have already had enough foreign interventions; we have had enough national humiliations and adventures. The time has come for Greece to become independent, nationally sovereign and for our people to be the masters of their own future.

Mr Florakis was particularly violent against those who, as he put it, have spread the rumor about a secret agreement between PASOK and the KKE. It is a brazen lie, he stressed, that we have agreed to support certain PASOK candidates. The rumor is a dirty and dishonest job by certain suspicious elements who are trying to serve various expediencies such as pilfering votes from the KKE, to cause confusion and to aggravate the relations between PASOK and the KKE....

After the gathering, when correspondents asked him to assess the size of the crowd, Mr Florakis established the following reasoning: "If 180,000 people participated in Mr Rallis' gathering, as it was reported, then 200,000 people have participated in our gathering."

SPAIN'S GONZALEZ ARRIVES AS PASOK GUEST 9 OCT

NC101628 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 10 Oct 81 p 1

[Excerpt] "I am very happy to be here among friends to demonstrate the cooperation and solidarity which exists between us," said Felipe Gonzalez, first secretary of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, immediately upon his arrival in Athens last night. Gonzalez, who is visiting Greece on an invitation from PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou, will leave with his host for Thessaloniki today to attend PASOK's large gathering and will deliver a greeting at a dinner to be held after the gathering.

Gonzalez, in any eventuality, explained yesterday that in no case does he desire to interfere with the decision which the Greek people will make at the election, a fact which his friends in PASOK also requested. However, he does believe that at this moment there is an historic phenomenon as the south of Europe is turning radical and is moving to a position beyond the center of gravity.

"So far," Gonzalez explained, "adoption of decisions have taken place in northern Europe and it is for this reason that misfortune prevaled in southern Europe. This has been overturned now." The success of the French Socialist Party in the election and the rise of socialist parties in Greece, Italy and Spain, he added, "are the peoples' reply to the inequality and injustice with which southern Europe has had to live." Gonzalez also said that his party is opposed to Spanish entry into NATO and in favor of a decrease in armaments and the simultaneous dissolution of coalitions.

KODISO NOT RULING OUT COOPERATION WITH PASOK

NC090104 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 9 Oct 81 p 5

[Text] Yesterday, KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman Pesmazoglou explained at a press conference at the union of foreign press correspondents the KODISO positions on the country's economic problem, the European orientation of the country and its relations with NATO and the EEC.

Mr Pesmazoglou reiterated that Greece's economic crisis is due to internal causes and stressed that KODISO "attaches primary importance to the cutting down economic disparity."

Referring to the country's European orientation, he remarked that "New Democracy has proved that it has neither the will nor the power" to effect Greek gains from "our active participation in all the functions of the community."

Speaking about the relations with NATO-EEC, Mr Pesmazoglou stressed that "the so-called neutrality of the alliance toward the Turkish expansionist goals is tantamount to bias at the expense of our country's internationally-recognized rights."

Answering questions by newsmen in connection with the postelection "possibilities", the KODISO chairman said (reiterated) that his party does not rule out cooperation with PASOK on the basis of a preagreed program.

PAPER CONDUCTS POLL ON ELECTORATE PREFERENCES

NC131859 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 13 Oct 81 p 11

[Text] According to a scientific public opinion poll conducted on 8 October by the Institute for Research and Communication on behalf of ELEVTHEROTIPIA, 7 out of 10 inhabitants of Athens and Piraievs believe that PASOK will be the certain winner in the elections. Only 2 out of 10 currently believe that New Democracy can win these elections.

According to this public opinion poll, out of the total number of citizens who were asked in the A and B Athens constituences and A and B Piraievs constituencies which party will win the October election:

--68 percent spontaneously replied PASOK,
--18 percent spontaneously replied New Democracy,
--13 percent replied they did not know (or did not reply)
--1 percent said "some other party," that was regardless of the party they themselves would vote for.

As it emerges from the relevant table, the percentage of those people who believe that PASOK will win the elections is above average among men (70 percent), among younger people it is (87 percent), and especially in the A constituency of Athens (75 percent), and lower in ages above 50 in the Piraievs A constituency. In any case, it does not drop below 59 percent and in only one instance (in ages between 50-60) is it 50 percent.

The public opinion poll was conducted by the Institute for Research and Communication Inc, (Meidani Street 25, Athens, telephone 9221374) among a random sample of 425 inhabitants of the capital's major region. Fifteen experts worked starting from 43 places in the A and B constituences in Athens and Piraievs.

It is again noted that in the public opinion poll published today the question concerned a forecast by the capital's voters of the winner of the elections. The people who were asked replied to what they thought would emerge from the November [as published] elections regardless of the party they themselves would vote for.

Meanwhile it emerges from a parallel public opinion poll that was conducted by the Center for Study and Market Research "Research Center" [last two words published in English] (T. Vassou Street 10, Athens, telephone 6440661) throughout the country on behalf of ELEVTHEROTIPIA that the majority of Greeks believe that "things will improve" with a PASOK victory in the elections whereas only a very small percentage -- less than 1 in 10 -- deems that "things will deteriorate" with a PASOK victory.

On the contrary, about 1 in 9 (11.6 percent) believe that "things will change for the best" with a New Democracy victory in the elections. Three in 10 say that "things will deteriorate" and a high percentage (26.1 percent) believe things will be "the same."

Specifically as it emerges from table 2:

--41.7 percent of the people polled believe that "things will improve for the better" if PASOK wins the elections,

--only 7.4 percent believe that "things will change for the worse" if PASOK is the winner of the election,

--41.7 percent allege they do not know while

--8.8 percent believe that "things will be the same."

In reply to the same question about New Democracy, as it emerges from table 3:

--28.6 percent declare that "things will change for the worse" if New Democracy wins the elections.

--11.6 percent believe that things "will change for the better,"

--28.6 percent say "it will be the same" whereas,

--33.2 percent say they do not know.

These facts emerge from a public opinion poll conducted by "Metrix Research Center" [in English] throughout the country on behalf of ELEVTHEROTIPIA between 17 and 27 September. Two thousand two hundred and thirty-six people chosen at random by the pollsters who started from 211 places in 18 representative urban, semiurban and rural areas were polled.

The results of this scientific investigation clearly shows that the great majority of the Greeks -- in a ratio of almost 4 to 1 -- believe that with PASOK in the government instead of New Democracy things will change for the better for Greece.

Truly it is characteristic that in the current critical conditions into which the country has fallen that according to this poll 41.7 percent of the Greeks believe that PASOK will succeed in guiding "things to the better" whereas only a meager percentage of 11.6 can say the same for a new government by New Democracy. Similarly, very few people -- 7.4 percent -- believe that with PASOK in power current conditions will deteriorate while there are many more -- 28.6 percent -- who believe in such a development in case there is a new government by New Democracy. This is regardless of their political convictions and their specific vote at the elections of 18 October.

FRENCH STATEMENT ON ARMENIAN CLAIMS PROTESTED

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen described as senseless the statement made yesterday by French Defense Minister Charles Hernu, which seemed to support Armenian claims. In reply to a question by ANATOLIA on the statement in question, Turkmen said: If the French defense minister's attitude is not senseless then it is insolent.

Meanwhile, the deputy secretary general of the Foreign Ministry, Ambassador Oktay Cankardes, called the French charge d'affaires in Ankara, (Philippe Baude), to his office today and conferred with him for some time. ANATOLIA reports that Cankardes informed (Baude) that we violently protest the statement supporting unfounded Armenian claims.

INDONESIAN PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER BEGINS CONTACTS

TA121139 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Indonesian Public Works Minister Purnomosidi Hajisaroso, who is in Ankara on an official visit, has begun his contacts. He called on Public Works Minister Tahsin Onalp this morning and conferred with him for some time. At the meeting, Onalp expressed his pleasure at seeing Purnomosidi Hajisaroso in Turkey. He said they would discuss the possibilities for Turkish and Indonesian contractors to cooperate in the Middle East.

Purnomosidi Hajisaroso said his country wanted to develop relations between the two countries. He then visited the Turkish contractors union and conferred with businessmen. The official talks between Turkey and Indonesia will begin at the Public Works Ministry this afternoon.

Official Talks

[Text] Indonesian Public Works Minister Purnomosidi Hajisaroso, who is in Ankara on an official visit, is continuing his contacts. The official talks between Turkish and Indonesian delegates began today at the Public Works Ministry. Public Works Ministry Under Secretary Hasan Bora is heading the Turkish delegation at the talks while the Indonesian delegation is being led by the Indonesian Trade Ministry's Middle East coordination office director, (Zanu Yahyi). In his opening statement, Bora said that efforts would be exerted in a bid to bring economic and cultural cooperation between the two countries to the highest level to the benefit of both countries. In his statement (Yahyi) noted that his country is interested in cooperation with Turkey and other countries.

The visiting Indonesian public works minister today visited Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk and Industry and Technology Minister Serbulent Bingol in their offices for talks.

Purnomosidi Hajisaroso will depart Turkey on Wednesday.

VOTCP NOTES U.S. AMBASSADOR'S TOUR OF EAST ANATOLIA

TA090815 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 Oct 81

[Text] Robert Strausz-Hupe, the former U.S. representative to NATO in Brussels, that has been appointed the U.S. ambassador to Ankara by the Reagan administration, is continuing his secret tour of Turkish cities in eastern and southeastern Anatolia.

It has been learned that the U.S. ambassador flew to Erzurum in a special plane after completing his visit to Diyarbakir and some of its districts where he held contacts with various circles.

In Erzurum, the U.S. ambassador met with VI Corps Commander Lt Gen Selahattin Canbazoglu and Governor Nihat Bastak for talks. Noting the close interest expressed by the U.S. ambassador on the regional problems and situations, journalists asked the Erzurum governor the purpose of the Strausz-Hupe visit. The governor replied: The U.S. ambassador is touring our region in a bid to be better acquainted with our country and he is visiting Erzurum with the same objective.

COMMUNISTS' BILEN GREETS IRAN'S TUDEH PARTY

TA030745 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 3 Oct 81

[Message sent by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Bilen to the Iranian Tudeh Party on the 40th anniversary of its foundation -- read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of all Turkish communists and the Turkish working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates the 40th foundation anniversary of the brotherly Iranian Tudeh Party and extends its revolutionary struggle greetings. Since its foundation, the Tudeh Party has always been in the front lines of the struggle waged by the Iranian people against imperialism and exploitation. It has been the subject of heroic epics in the struggle against all tortures, oppression and massacres and against the bloody regime of the shah. It is now waging an arduous struggle to secure and further the gains of the people's revolution in Iran and to establish the unity of all anti-imperialist forces. The Turkish Communists are in full solidarity with the Iranian Communists and the Iranian people in this struggle. The ties between the TCP and the Tudeh Party are developing and are being strengthened based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. We wish that the 40th year of the party be one of new successes and leaps.

With our communist greetings. [Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 2 October, 1981.

EYSKENS GOVERNMENT COLLAPSES OVER SCHOOL ISSUE

NC131107 Paris AFP in English 1059 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Brussels, 13 Oct (AFP) -- Belgium was without a government for the second time in less than a month today, as Prime Minister Marc Eyskens' caretaker cabinet split over the closure of a Flemish school in French-speaking Wallonia.

Mr Eyskens last night decided to suspend all cabinet meetings and not to take up government affairs, pending general elections set for November 8, after French-Language Education Minister Philippe Busquin closed a Flemish school in Comines, near the French border. Mr Busquin said the school had enrolled only nine pupils, seven fewer than the required minimum. But his decision provoked an outcry in Flanders, and led Flemish-Language Education Minister Willy Calewaert to call the order illegal, countermand it, and tell the teachers to report to work. Mr Busquin then accused Mr Eyskens of failing in his duties to mediate between French and Flemish sides.

The coalition Flemish Christian-Socialist and Flemish and Francophone Socialist government first fell on September 21, when French-speaking cabinet members refused to discuss agenda matters in protest of what they considered insufficient measures to protect the Wallonian steel industry. That collapse of the government, provoked by the split between the two main parties in the coalition, the Social-Christian Party of former Prime Minister Leo Tindemans and the Wallonian Socialist grouping led by Guy Spitaels, was the seventh in six years. The crisis has also spread to the streets. Twenty people were injured in clashes on Sunday between Flemish and French speakers in the northern town of Les Fourons, an enclave of 5,000 Francophones in a Flemish area near the Netherlands border.

INTERIOR MINISTER WARNS OF UPCOMING ETA ACTION

LD132201 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Excerpt] At a press conference in Madrid this morning, Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson said that he is in possession of information which indicates that the ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] terrorist organization is planning an important action in Madrid before the end of the month. In view of this threat, Roson says the commandos will only leave Madrid if they see that their objective is difficult to carry out. The interior minister later expressed his concern at the release, as a result of judicial decisions, of some 100 people belonging to the ETA Military. At another point in the press conference, Roson stressed the role of the Euskadiko Ezkerra [Basque Left] Party in the appeasement of the ETA Political Military Front.

With regard to Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo, the interior minister believes him to be the ruling party's -- the Union of the Democratic Center -- only choice as prime minister.

SCHMIDT HOPES TO RESUME WORK NEXT WEEK

LD141350 Hamburg DPA in German 1319 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) — Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt hopes to resume work in Bonn in the course of next week. The chancellor said this today in a telephone conversation from the Koblenz military hospital with SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wichnewski. According to the spokesman of the SPD Executive, Wolfgang Clement, the chancellor also said that he felt well and that he read newspapers this morning.

Clement said that SPD Chairman Willy Brandt had been informed beforehand about the operation, in which a pacemaker was implanted for Schmidt's heart. Brandt had also been informed afterwards that the operation had gone off extraordinarily well.

Deputy Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher took over government business today as Schmidt's deputy and chaired the cabinet meeting. For this reason Genscher cancelled a tour through three South and Central American states. However, the foreign minister will next week go to the North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico. It is uncertain whether Schmidt will also be able to take part. According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, the doctors have advised against such a journey involving such a great change of climate.

Clement would not be drawn into a discussion on a possible successor to the chancellor. Such a discussion would in his opinion be "tasteless and pointless." The SPD would make clear the value Chancellor Schmidt had for the Federal Republic.

As was also announced in Bonn, the chancellor intends to speak on Friday in the Koblenz hospital to the North Rhine-Westphalian Minister President Johannes Rau about his forthcoming trip to Moscow. It is said that this appointment was arranged before Schmidt fell ill. The Federal Government is expecting the visit of the Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev at the end of November.

Spokesman Comments on Schmidt's Illness

DW141223 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Reporter Reinhardt interview with Government Spokesman Kurt Becker; date and place not given — recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] There is a considerable difference between an infection as officially announced and the danger of heart rhythm problems. How is Chancellor Schmidt really doing?

[Answer] The federal chancellor underwent a most thorough physical examination in Koblenz, where he always goes when he wants to see a doctor. He has been doing this for more than 10 years. A very thorough examination revealed that there was the risk of heart rhythm problems. To eliminate this he had to undergo surgery to receive a heart pacemaker. The federal chancellor took all this very well. Prior to the operation he listened to a detailed report by the chief of the chancellor's office, State Secretary Lahnstein, and then even played chess with him for half an hour.

[Question] This means that all this was a matter of decisions made in the past 2 days — yesterday an examination and today the operation.

[Answer] Yes, he had to have the operation this afternoon. Tomorrow he will again receive the chief of the chancellor's office and hear his report. This will take place every day as long as the federal chancellor is in the Koblenz Bundeswehr hospital.

[Question] Hearing reports, does this mean that he will be governing from the hospital? Or will he just be informed? Who will actually be governing?

[Answer] The federal chancellor will be informed and will naturally make decisions. There is, of course, a great difference between being in the chancellor's office and staying in the hopital. A great part of governing consists of chairing meetings, receiving visitors and so on. He cannot do all that.

[Question] So the meetings will not take place and visitors also cannot be received by the federal chancellor. What portion of routine governing is taken up by such things?

[Answer] First I would like to say that the federal chancellor will be replaced by the vice chancellor in heading the cabinet, namely by Foreign Minister Genscher. Foreign Minister Genscher, the vice chancellor, will head the cabinet session tomorrow as well as the later session of the nuclear cabinet. The nuclear cabinet has nothing to do with nuclear weapons. What is involved is civilian nuclear energy. He will not be replaced with regard to other things. Certain visitors he wanted to receive will not be received. Trips planned in the Federal Republic will not take place.

[Question] This week?

[Answer] This week. The vice chancellor decided not to go to Central America, something he had planned prior to the Cancun North-South summit conference. He had wanted to leave on Thursday, but he will stay in Bonn for the time being. In this way there will be no gaps in the Federal Government.

[Question] How many hours can the federal chancellor work, and what else is he doing?

[Answer] The federal chancellor has a considerable program; he will listen to reports at least for 2 hours a day. On Thursday he will receive North Rhine-Westphalian Minister-President Rau who is to go to Moscow on 18 October. Naturally this is a particularly friendly gesture toward the North Rhine-Westphalian minister-president -- wanting to talk to him so thoroughly -- and vice versa, namely that the minister-president wants to visit him there.

Radio Cites 'Critical Symptoms'

LD142134 Hamburg DPA in German 1744 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Baden-Baden, 14 Oct (DPA) -- According to Southwest Radio, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who was fitted with a heart pacemaker in the central Bundewehr hospital in Koblenz yesterday, was obviously more gravely ill than could so far have been assumed from official statements. Quoting statements from one of the doctors treating Schmidt in Koblenz, the radio reported that on Sunday and to an increased degree on Monday, Schmidt had suffered critical symptoms such as temporary loss of consciousness. These symptoms appeared when the heart was at times no longer pumping and the brain was not receiving its full blood supply. The doctors treating him added that following the operation for fitting the urgently needed heart pacemaker the chancellor's stress capacity was again quite normal.

Government Denies Radio Report

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Regarding the information on Southwest Radio, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker has already told newsmen in Bonn this afternoon in reply to questions that "This is the first I've heard about the chancellor being unconscious. If one of the doctors treating him is supposed to have said that, my first assumption is that it is not correct, because I still believe that doctors observe their duty to remain silent. For this reason I do not consider this a realiable source."

DPA CITES SCHMIDT LETTER TO BRANDT ON CANCUN

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has said that despite the difficult budget situation the Federal Government will not flag in its efforts to further assist the developing countries, in a letter to the SPD chairman and chairman of the Independent Commission for Development Questions, Willy Brandt. He also expressed the hope that the forthcoming North-South meeting in Cancun on 22-23 October would be a new beginning for the discussion between industrial and developing countries.

The chancellor had composed the letter, which was published today by the Federal Press Office, in the Bundeswehr hospital in Koblenz on Tuesday before his operation. Originally Schmidt had wanted to meet Brandt today to discuss the Federal Government's position for the summit meeting.

Schmidt stressed in his letter that Cancun could offer the chance of a new start if the meeting resulted in "us understanding each other better and listening to each other." The Federal Republic has a very clear and positive position. With all the partners in the European Community it supported an early start to comprehensive negotiations on North-South problems, but these negotiations had to be backed by the political will to make them successful. "The closer they are to reality, the more successful they will be."

In this letter, Schmidt still assumed that despite his operation he would be able to travel to Cancun in person. He wrote that at the conference he mainly wanted to speak about energy questions, but also to touch especially on unrestricted population growth, which directly affects all other problem spheres.

The federal cabinet, chaired by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, discussed the Cancun conference and its great significance today. Government Spokesman Becker stated that the cabinet had been united in agreeing that the conference must be successful.

ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE FAVORS ZERO OPTION

[Text] Munich, 14 Oct (DPA) -- The special Nuclear Committee of the North Atlantic Assembly regards a "zero option" in the form of a "reciprocal removal of the land-based nuclear medium-range missiles" as the "ideal aim" of the forthcoming negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. In the draft resolution for the North Atlantic Assembly Plenum proposed in Munich today the nuclear committee says, however, that such a solution would be difficult to achieve.

The committee urges the member states of the Atlantic alliance to place equal weight on both parts of the NATO dual decision -- that is, on both modernization of weapons and arms control. Joint efforts should also be made to convince the public that the dual decision serves both military stability and the preservation of peace in Europe.

In this connection the NATO parliamentarians regret the "growth of opposition in various European countries." This could undermine NATO's negotiating position and unintentionally serve Soviet aims. The U.S. Administration is urged to continue its consultations on arms control with the partners in the alliance in respect to nuclear medium-range missiles and on the future modernization requirements.

Due to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's illness, according to the Federal Press Office, the minister of state in the Foreign Office, Peter Courterier, will address the North Atlantic Assembly Plenum in Munich tomorrow in his stead.

SPOKESMAN URGES USSR TO ACCEPT ZERO OPTION

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) — The Federal Government today appealed to the Soviet Union to give up its resistance to a mutual renunciation of medium-range weapons. This would relieve the people of Europe of grave concern, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker stated after the cabinet meeting. If the Soviet Union agreed to a zero option — that is, a renunciation of such weapons — in the negotiations scheduled to begin at the end of November, there would be no counterarming in Europe. The key to the problem lay not in Bonn or Rome and not even in Washington, but in Moscow.

Becker said that Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had told the cabinet that the EEC foreign ministers, with whom he had spoken in London yesterday, had strongly welcomed the beginning of negotiations on medium-range weapons between the two world powers. "The Federal Government and the coalition have every reason to welcome — and this was the general opinion in the cabinet — the fact that the aim of the negotiations is, in accordance with the proposals of the United States, the mutual zero option for medium-range weapons," Becker said.

BONN CONFIRMS BREZHNEV VISIT 23-24 NOV

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) — The visit to the Federal Republic by Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev on 23-24 November was officially confirmed today by the Federal Press Office in Bonn. Brezhnev has been invited by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

The main topic of the talks between the two politicians is foreign policy. The chancellor particularly wants to learn from Brezhnev the Soviet ideas on the negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe which begin in Geneva at the end of November.

APEL WELCOMES EAST-WEST ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

PM141505 Rome AVANTI in Italian 4-5 Oct 81 Culture Supplement p I

[Giampolo Segala interview in Bonn with Defense Minister Hans Apel; date not given]

[Text] Bonn — The Europeans watched with great interest the resumption of East-West negotiations at the meeting between Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and U.S. Secretary of State Haig: Is it possible to reach an agreement in 2 years; before the Euromissiles are deployed on European soil? Yes, Defense Minister Hans Apel replied, but only on condition that the Soviet Union is willing to isolate negotiations on Eurostrategic weapons and that once this point has been established NATO will negotiate the subjects of interest to the Soviet Union. The minister also stated what the West understands by the zero option: "To be in a position to abandon the deployment of the Euromissiles." In other words, for the Soviet Union in turn to be willing to dismantle the medium-range missiles that it has already deployed. During this interview Apel broached several other topics: the shifting tensions in the southern Mediterranean which are having repercussions in both Eastern and Western blocs, face to face in Europe; the difficulties created by the differing figures cited in assessing the balance of forces; relations with the German pacifist movement. It was on this last topic that we began our interview.

[Question] In recent months we have been witnessing a number of demonstrations, meetings and marches for peace in Europe, especially here in the FRG. Is peace in danger?

[Answer] No, peace is not in danger. The problem is that in Germany we have for a long time discussed the conditions for maintaining peace in Europe only among experts. Now a broad debate has begun among young people, which is of fundamental importance partly because the problems of nuclear weapons are new to young people. We, on the other hand, are more aware of the complex problems implied by these weapons and that their use would mean the destruction of our societies. This is why I view the development of the debate favorably. But I would add that we must tell our young people that in order to want peace one must also want a military balance, including in the nuclear field. Otherwise the threat of the outbreak of war would increase because war would become easier.

[Question] One of the weapons used by the pacifists against your policy is the fact that the German defense minister is in favor of NATO's dual decision, which means the possible future deployment of new missiles, and is therefore against peace. How do you reply to these charges?

[Answer] There are two answers. Those who believe that a military balance is a condition — albeit not the only one — for guaranteeing peace in Europe must be able to acknowledge that the first to rearm was the Soviet Union and that this is unacceptable to us. During the present weeks we are witnessing how valuable NATO's dual decision was, because without it there would have been no possibility of bringing the two superpowers back to the negotiating table. Thanks to the decision, however, it has been possible to tell our American friends to fulfill the second part of the NATO decision, thus initiating negotiations with the USSR. Also the "dual decision" has allowed telling the Soviet Union that unless it is willing to negotiate NATO will rearm. Without wanting to overestimate the historical importance of this decision, I do believe that this instrument was fundamental to the resumption of contacts between the superpowers after a period of silence. Now arms control negotiations have a chance. Let us consider the alternative of a continuing absence of dialogue between the superpowers and the dangerous nature of the situation that could have developed.

[Question] One characteristic of the German pacifist movement is its broad diversification: it includes Protestants who are demanding the abolition of weapons; and it includes communists, who oppose only the West's weapons. To what extent is the SPD capable of winning back at least part of this movement?

[Answer] It will not be easy for the SPD to achieve a constructive kind of contribution even with the section of the movement willing to conduct a dialogue. We have neglected the debate on security problems for too long. Nevertheless, I do see a possibility of positive results if we manage to make people realize that the West's unilateral disarmament will not produce the desired results, in other words that the Soviet Union in turn must disarm. We must make them understand that with a weak West political and military instability increase and therefore so do the dangers of a war. On the other hand, however, as a political class and as far as I am concerned, as minister of defense, we must take these young people's fears and anxieties into serious consideration and reflect more on their proposals.

[Question] The U.S.-USSR negotiations have resumed. Is it possible to isolate Eurostrategic weapons so as to reach specific results in a relatively short space of time?

[Answer] This is precisely the problem facing us. If the Soviet Union were willing to accept negotiations on the SS-20's on the one hand and the cruise and Pershing missiles on the other, then despite the time lost, the negotiations could advance considerablely. Nevertheless, in that case, we for our part would have to tell the Soviet Union that subsequently — once this subject is exhausted — the subjects of interest to the Soviet Union, such as the forward base systems, would be discussed and that eventually the entire negotiations on Euromissiles and their limitation must be included in SALT III. In that case I see a good chance of achieving specific results in 2 years. If, on the other hand, there are several points on the agenda, as the Soviet Union is demanding — and there is no lack of pointers in this direction — then the time factor will become somewhat critical and I regret it. Nevertheless, the FRG Government is committed to NATO's dual decision, and the deployment of the Euromissiles would take place even if negotiations were still underway.

[Question] There has recently been renewed talk of the "zero option." Are there any ideal conditions for its implementation?

[Answer] From the Western viewpoint the zero option means being in a position to be able to abandon the deployment of the Euromissiles. It is therefore a matter of seeing the conditions for this to take place realized in the Eastern Bloc countries, in other words, of the Soviet Union being willing to dismantle its medium-range missile force. At present it is impossible to forecast whether the USSR intends to do so. Of course it would be a major decisive step forward both in relations of trust between the superpowers and for arms control negotiations. I would also like to add, however, that if the West were to reveal doubts concerning the deployment of the Euromissiles in the event of the negotiations failing to produce results, then the zero option could never be reached.

[Question] One of the main problems in the disarmament negotiations are the differing assessments of the balance of forces. How can this situation be resolved?

[Answer] There will undoubtedly always be two different criteria in assessing the balance of forces. For instance, the definition of specific weapons systems alone can lead to their inclusion in or exclusion from negotiations. I would not attach so much importance to these problems. Whether the numerical superiority is 7:1 or 3:1 is not of decisive importance. What is decisive, however, is the fact that the Soviet Union has in its SS-20 missiles a potential threat that it can use to avert political pressures. Against this the West must be able to deploy the same potential threat. Or if the Soviet Union abandons it, so can we. The military balance in Europe does not mean having the same number of weapons as the Eastern bloc. We are talking here about a potential threat, not the number of warheads. In other words, it is a matter of the political ability to defend oneself against these threats.

[Question] Isn't there a southward shift in tensions in Europe toward the Mediterranean area?

[Answer] This is a hypothesis that I can accept, but I would like to go much further south. Of course some problems have emerged here in Europe, partly because of the Eastern bloc countries' difficulties in resolving domestic problems connected with the Helsinki conference. But these problems are not on such a scale as to create intrabloc tensions. In any case we want there to be peaceful internal developments in the Eastern bloc. And this is why we have confirmed our willingness to grant economic aid.

I believe that we have entered a decade in which the hotbeds of tension will be outside Europe — oil and raw materials — and that the tensions created in those areas will have repercussions in Europe, where the two superpowers and their blocs are lined up against each other with all their weapons. In my opinion these are the causes for concern in this decade. Together with the Americans, we must draw certain conclusions: first to regard aid to developing countries as an integral part of security policy. And above all we must not make the mistake of labeling as communist the Third World countries that think differently from us. On the contrary, we accept their right to self-determination even when the roads differ from ours. These countries are not Eastern or Western bloc territories. Europe should have greater strength of conviction on this point so as to make the American friends adopt these stances.

[Question] In recent years the Soviet Union has implemented a somewhat expansionist policy in Africa. How should the West react?

[Answer] One must differentiate. If we are talking about North Africa — and I am thinking here about a specific country — then there are some problems that cannot be shelved, especially because of its continuous increase in armaments. However, if one looks at developments in other African countries and Soviet or Cuban influence, one cannot fail to observe that the West has made a number of errors that have facilitated the expansion of this influence.

[Question] Libya and its president, Al-Qadhdhafi, have become a not inconsiderable problem for several countries in the Mediterranean area. How seriously should Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi's recent threats be taken?

[Answer] I do not know what Al-Qadhdhafi thinks, but I believe that it is in Europe's interests in North Africa too -- indeed specifically in North Africa -- to open the way to reasonableness, using all available means, whether diplomatic, commercial or other. This applies even to the countries that could potentially be dangerous, so as to seek reasonable relations of mutual understanding. I am not in favor of answering those who emit war cries in kind.

[Question] One final question: Doesn't Spain's NATO membership perhaps imply an alteration of the present balances, this time in favor of the Atlantic alliance?

[Answer] I do not see why Spain's NATO membership should lead to an alteration of East-West balances. NATO is an exclusively defensive alliance of interstate solidarity in the face of possible aggressors. Therefore there must be no fears if it is expanded. However, we must be very careful not to interfere. The decision must be made by the Spanish people and their representatives. I would also like to stress the great difference between the EC and NATO. I look forward to and welcome Spain's EC membership, while I leave the Spanish democratic forces to decide on membership of the Atlantic alliance. However, whatever decision is reached, we must respect it and it will certainly not alter our good relations with Spain.

GENSCHER EXPECTS POLITICAL STABILITY IN EGYPT

[Text] Bonn, 14 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher expects political stability in Egypt. According to an announcement by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, Genscher gave this assessment to the Federal Cabinet in Bonn today. It is based on his talks with the new Egyptian President, Husni Mubarak, last Wednesday and Saturday in Cairo. Genscher briefed his cabinet colleagues on these talks and spoke of an "impressive" procedure for succession that led to the election of Mubarak yesterday. Genscher gave the assurance that Egypt can count on the Federal Republic's "friendship and solidarity."

Federal President Karl Carstens today sent congratulations to the new Egyptian president, Husni Mubarak, on his election. In his congratulatory telegram, Carstens expresses the conviction that Mubarak will continue President as-Sadat's peace policy energetically and with circumspection for the benefit of the Egyptian people who are the friends of the Federal Republic and of the other Middle East states.

PORTUGUESE GENERAL COMMENTS ON SPAIN'S NATO ENTRY

LD141734 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Spain's admission into the Atlantic alliance would not provoke any conflict with Portugal, the chief of the Portuguese Armed Forces Staff, Gen Nuno Tavares de Melo Edigio, said yesterday in Bonn on his arrival for a 3-day official visit to the FRG at the invitation of the country's military authorities.

He said that although the question of Spain's entry into the alliance had not yet been discussed between Madrid and Lisbon, it is his belief that such an entry would not give rise to any conflict given the exceptionally good relations existing between the two peninsular high commands.

The general said he is against setting up a joint Spanish-Portuguese NATO command, but in favor of Spain's entry into the alliance provided Portugal's position in the organization is not affected.

Melo Edigio said there is no problem over the Federal German Air Force using the Beja airbase in southern Portugal under agreements dated 1979 and still in force.

The armed forces chief of staff reiterated Portugal's keenness on increased Federal German military aid for the reequipment of the Portuguese Armed Forces.

MINISTER BAUM CRITICIZES NATIONALZEITUNG

DW141337 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2000 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Reporter Happe interview with Interior Minister Gerhart Rudolf Baum, date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Baum] NATIONALZEITUNG is a shame for our country, I am also ashamed with regard to our Jewish fellow citizens. The paper promotes anti-Semitism. The Nazi dictatorship is characterized as harmless and democratic institutions are being degraded. I can only dissociate myself from this with disgust. I am shocked every time I see this paper on a newsstand.

[Question] What can we do against this paper?

[Answer] Many legal things have been tried in vain, particularly in the criminal code field. Procedures were initiated against Frey with the aim of depriving him of basic rights -- in vain -- because the Constitutional Court did not think that the basic order was endangered. I believe that we should not count so much on legal steps but on enlightening and making aware those people who are susceptible to the unbelievable theories and statements printed in the paper. We should do this continuously, particularly with regard to young people. There is no doubt that people with a certain trend toward rightist extremism will be led astray and strengthened in their beliefs. Personally I have no doubt that such publications and the people who associate with them are hotbeds of rightist extremist actions, which we have unfortunately been experiencing more frequently lately.

CHEYSSON EXPLAINS REMARK ON AS-SADAT'S DEATH

[Text] Paris, 14 Oct (AFP) -- French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson, who raised eyebrows around the world with his comment that the death of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat had "removed an obstacle" to inter-Arab relations, attempted to explain the meaning of the remark to parliament here today.

France is "interested in peace," Mr Cheysson said, and therefore it wants "all the Arabs to sit at the same negotiating table." He added that Mr as-Sadat, who was isolated in the Arab world following his signing of a peace treaty with Israel in 1979, had sat alone for too long a time.

"If the Camp David process is complemented by a global settlement, if Egypt consolidates itself, then there will be numerous signs of tighter links among all the Arabs, Mr Cheysson commented.

Expressing his support for new Egyptian President Husni Mubarak and the Camp David peace process, Mr Cheysson said he would also favor negotiations including "all the nations in the region, including the PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) which represents a fighting force."

[Excerpt] Things are moving at the Quai d'Orsay. Next Wednesday [21 October] the first diplomatic shuffle of the Mitterrand era will affect about 50 French ambassadors abroad. Among the innovations is the appointment of Bernard Vernier-Palliez, currently managing director of Renault, to the ultrasensitive post in Washington.

PAPER CITES DIPLOMATS ON INDOCHINA POLICY

BK140655 Bangkok NATION REVIEW in English 14 Oct 81 p 4

[From the "Thai Talk" column by Suthichai Yun: "France Seriously Considering a 'New Look' Indochina Policy"]

[Text] French Ambassador to Bangkok Jean Soulier would not say it's a basic change in the French policy but Paris is clearly walking a subtly new path over the Kampuchean issue. "We don't want to cut off any possibilities which may eventually help lead to a negotiated political settlement in Kampuchea..." Soulier told the nation the other day.

There have in recent months been signs of some "significant gestures" and a new approach: France has been reluctant to join the ad hoc committee set up during the internation conference on Kampuchea in July in New York. At the same time, the French door seems slightly more ajar for requests by Vietnam for economic aid following a 2-year significant slowdown in assistance programme after Vietnam invaded Kampuchea in 1979.

The French Government has, through the well-connected Vietnamese Ambassador to Paris Mai Van Bo, been getting numerous aid requests from Hanoi after the new Mitterrand government let it be known that following a "slowdown" in French aid programme (part of the $130 million deal signed in an economic aid agreement in 1976), France will consider, on a selective and case-by-case basis, proposals for assistance from Hanoi.

The Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea in 1979 did put France in an awkward position. Paris turned "cool" and partially froze the assistance programme although a senior French diplomat maintained that French economic aid to Hanoi was never "frozen" but it was also pointed out that the grants and loans in the $130 million protocol signed 5-years ago could have been spent much earlier. The last amount of the package was signed only about 2 months ago.

The new gesture by Paris may not underscore a drastic change in the French policy towards Vietnam over the Kampuchean stalemate "and we continue to be on ASEAN's side in the search for political solutions," said senior French diplomats who, however, insisted the Chinese line in "bleeding the Vietnamese" would not produce the desirable results.

France has been non-committal (together with Sweden) over the request by ASEAN and other countries to be a member of the ad hoc committee set up by the July 13-16 New York international conference on Kampuchea. "Admittedly, we are cautious on this issue because we want to be certain that any decision we reach would not close the doors of possible dialogue with the Vietnamese," said another French diplomat.

Paris realizes that a decision would have to come some day — and soon — to decide on whether to be in the ad hoc committee or not. But she certainly doesn't want to be caught in a dilemma.

"For one thing, the new French Government has made it clear that we would be clear-cut in our public statements instead of being vague, offering nuances rather than specific statements. We have made it plain that we are against the Russian invasion of Afghanistan and we have been clearly against the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea. We, therefore, want a negotiated settlement," said Ambassador Soulier.

The basic philosophy and policy of the previous and present French Governments might not have differed too vastly — but the approach and conduct apparently have taken some new twists.

The French are still talking these days of their "special relationship" with the Vietnamese, and they would not fail to point out at times the futility of the Chinese and the American policies in certain aspects.

Back in Paris, Southeast Asia may not rank very high in the list of foreign policy priorities but French diplomats handling Indochina and ASEAN would like to think that somewhere, somehow they should, and could, have an edge over the other major powers in dealing with them...

The French would like to appear realistic and pragmatic in their policy in this region. "We are not running in to say we would talk and help the Vietnamese but if possibilities arise which may lead to possible defusing of the tension, our policy is not to ignore them..." another French diplomat said. But he also admitted that there had been no signs of more flexibility from Moscow or Hanoi in the Kampuchean question.

A French diplomat went to the extent of saying that Moscow might eventually hold the final card in the whole scheme of things.

"The Soviet Union, of course, would continue to be on Vietnam's side. But at the same time, Moscow realizes that it needs friends in Asia apart from Vietnam as well. Look at how Deputy Foreign Minister Nicolay Firyubin was sent out recently to this area to cultivate better relations with ASEAN countries.

"And don't ignore the signals from some of the allies of the Soviet Union in Eastern Europe which have been asked to try to develop closer ties with ASEAN countries in this regard at the same time. So, Moscow would have to think very hard as well about its own image among noncommunist countries in the region..."

In the French viewpoint, Moscow could well, in time, balance off its relationship. But the complications must necessarily be taken into consideration.

"Somebody told me the other day," a French diplomat with long experience in the region said, "if there hadn't been the Afghanistan invasion, it might have been easier for Moscow to relax things in Kampuchea. But the dilemma is clear: If Moscow loosens its grips in Kampuchea, people would ask: Why not Afghanistan as well?"

There are frustrations in the tone of some French diplomats when they discuss the stalemate over the Kampuchean question. But they are very careful in stressing that Paris is behind ASEAN. "We won't take any initiatives. We would follow ASEAN's line. But the Chinese haven't changed an iota of its policy," commented another French diplomat based in Bangkok.

Their frustrations obviously also are linked to the deadlocked negotiations among the three Khmer factions which have gone nowhere in their sixth round of talks. The seventh round of the negotiations is due on Oct 28, this time giving more time between intervals so that each side could report back to its respective boss.

"Prince Sihanouk seems flexible enough, for some reasons, but the Khmer Rouge simply wouldn't change their stand. Son Sann obviously doesn't want to yield to any condition which may place him in a disadvantageous position," commented a French diplomat who has been monitoring the negotiations closely in the past few months.

"The Khmer Rouge say they are ready to talk about a coalition government but they insist on maintaining the old Democratic Kampuchean [DK] structure -- the presidium and the assembly. Son Sann, of course, had presumed that the coalition talks would mean dissolution of the old DK structures and that they would agree on a new structure," the French diplomat said.

The French appear more inclined towards Son Sann, having declared that they would have nothing to do with the Khmer Rouge. Sihanouk, a close personal friend of French President Mitterrand, remains an alternative the French consider important.

Obviously, Paris doesn't bank too much hope on the Khmer tripartite negotiations in Bangkok. Neither does she believe too much in the international conference on Kampuchea's ad hoc committee. The French, if they had a choice, may want to wait until there are some favourable signs of a more flexible stand from Moscow and Hanoi.

But then, the French diplomats all admit that they haven't detected any new signs of postive reactions from the Soviet Union and Vietnam.

LE MONDE EXAMINES MITTERRAND-SCHMIDT TALKS

PM141345 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Oct 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Preferential Ties Between Paris and Bonn"]

[Text] The Paris-Bonn axis may not exist but it must be admitted that "preferential" ties still unite the two capitals. This is the most important conclusion to be drawn from the informal talks held by Mitterrand and Schmidt at Latch on Wednesday and Thursday.

Both West German and French sources stress the total agreement which emerged on the balance of nuclear forces in the world, especially in Europe. The chancellor, who faces strong pacifist opposition within his own party, must have appreciated the strength of Mitterrand's positions in this sphere. They will help him not only to counter the advocates of unilateral disarmament in the FRG but also to present a stronger face to Brezhnev when he visits Bonn at the end of November.

It was probably community questions which constituted the most delicate point of these French-German talks. This danger seems to have been avoided but it is obvious that the dispute, nonetheless, has not been settled. It relates essentially to the requests for a ceiling on West German budgetary contributions and to the Common Agricultural Policy. Paris, for its part, would like to give Europe a real "social" dimension, as recommended by the French memorandum to be studied during the next European summit in London at the end of November. Between now and then, the two governments will step up their contacts to reach a compromise, as was the case last weekend during the Brussels deliberations on the readjustment of the mark and the franc.

In any case, Chancellor Schmidt said he was very satisfied with the understanding shown by Paris with regard to the problem of the German budgetary contribution to the EEC.

Regarding bilateral relations, trade relations again dominated the discussion, the balance between the two countries tipping very clearly in the FRG's favor. The chancellor was also concerned over France's suspension of the reprocessing of West German nuclear waste at the La Hague factory. It seems that Mitterrand reassured him by recalling that France "will honor its contracts."

The thorny question of nationalizations apparently was not raised. Nonetheless, Bonn is worried by the future of the Roussel-Uclaf company, in which the Hoechst group has a majority holding.

The North-South summit in Cancun and the Near East constituted the two other major international issues. On the first point, Mitterrand and Chancellor Schmidt agreed to develop a joint approach to aid for the Third World. Contrary to what the United States wants, their aim is to move out of the framework of East-West tension. The two men apparently also agreed that the Cancun meeting should produce specific results and not merely be limited to wishful thinking.

Finally, there was consistent agreement on the Near East. The chancellor, who is attending Anwar as-Sadat's funeral, as is Mitterrand, apparently listened with interest to the president's account of the talks he had recently in Saudi Arabia and expressed understanding for the Fahd plan.

MOZAMBIQUE PRESIDENT ARRIVES FOR VISIT 14 OCT

[Text] Rome, 14 Oct (ANSA) -- Mozambique President Samora Moises Machel arrived here today on a special flight for a three day state visit to Italy. He was welcomed at the airport by Tourism Minister Nicola Signorello, other Italian officials and numerous African ambassadors accredited in Rome. He was immediately helicoptered to the Quirinale Palace for a meeting with head of state Sandro Pertini.

During his stay the African leader will also meet with Premier Giovanni Spadolini, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and other top government officials. At the conclusion of his state visit Friday, Machel will travel to several Italian cities, including Bologna, Reggio Emilia and Venice. The former military chief of the Mozambique Liberation Front (Frelimo) led his country to independence in June 1975.

Machel, 48, is accompanied on this official visit by Foreign Minister Joaquim Chissano, Industry and Energy Minister Antonio Branco and Information Minister Jose Luis Cabaco. During ministerial level meetings here Chissano and his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo are expected to sign a new technical cooperation accord Thursday.

Italy and Mozambique have had close relations for some time. At a government level the two sides signed a general agreement in 1977 which led to the creation of a mixed economic commission which has already met twice; once in January 1980 in Rome and again in May of this year in Maputo. As a result of these contacts, exchanges which until last year showed a deficit for Italy, were in the black in 1980 to the tune of 25.7 billion lire (around 24 million dollars).

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER ENDS VISIT, LEAVES 14 OCT

[Text] Rome, 14 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini will go to Poland on an official visit some time before the end of the year. Speaking to newsmen this afternoon, the premier reported, "I received an invitation from Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek and accepted it." He then disclosed that he will schedule the visit for later this year. Czyrek left Rome this morning at the end of a three-day working visit which included consultations with Spadolini and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

PLO OFFICIAL ON 'FRIENDLY' RELATIONS WITH ITALY

AU141553 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 14 Oct (ANSA) -- A Palestinian Liberation Organization official here has said that "we are still interested in maintaining friendly relations with Italy." In an interview published today by Rome's MESSAGGERO, the head of the PLO's information office in Italy, Walid Ghazab, seemed to take the teeth out of statements made Saturday by PLO Ambassador Nehmet Hammad. Hammad had accused Italian police of negligence in handling the murder in a Rome hotel of PLO official Majid Abu Sharar.

There has been a tacit agreement not to use Italy as a site for Palestinian commando actions. Saturday, Hammad indicated that this accord might be allowed to lapse.

During the interview, Ghazab complained of the fact that the Italian press stubbornly spoke for at least a day or two after Sharar's death of the possibility that he was blown to bits by an bomb he was handling in the hotel room. The PLO spokesman also reconfirmed the organization's charges that the Israeli secret services were behind the killing. "This is not an hypothesis but a certainty on our part," he told MESSAGGERO. "The hand that struck down Abu Sharar belongs to the Israeli secret services."

He concluded the interview with the hope that investigations conducted by Italian police would soon bear fruit.

WEEKLY AIRS CARDINALS' DISSATISFACTION WITH POPE

AU130910 Rome ANSA in English 0828 GMT 13 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian cardinals are dissatisfied with the pontificate of John Paul II, according to the "L'ESPRESSO" weekly in its latest issue. The Italian magazine claimed that the cardinals were also working for a redistribution of ecclesiastical power.

Two arch conservatives were said to be involved in the manuever: Silvio Oddi and Piero Palazzini, both retired early by Pope Paul VI but later put back into their posts on the Curia by the present pope. A symptom of this struggle, the magazine, said, is the chapter of the new code on canon law entitled "De Sede Impedita" to be presented at the next plenary session set for October 20. A group of 38 cardinals led by Pericle Felici is reworking the code. The draft for the new article that will follow those of "De Sede Vacante", introduces an innovation with respect to the previous ones in the history of the church, "L'ESPRESSO" said.

If the Felici proposal is accepted, a regency would be formed in the event of any impediment to the papacy produced by an assassination attack, a kidnapping, serious illness or incapacity. In other words, the weekly said, the article provides a way to remove an unwanted pope.

The accusations against John Paul II come primarily from rightwing Italian cardinals, according to "L'ESPRESSO". They reportedly claim that the pope meets too infrequently with the cardinals and neglects matters submitted to him for judgment, merely signing papers before him to show that he has seen them as if, these disgruntled cardinals said, he did not want to share responsibility for the decisionmaking.

But what these cardinals will not forgive, the weekly claimed, is the fact that John Paul II is a Pole and is surrounded by what they consider an impenetrable wall of fellow Poles. They dislike his predilection for audiences with Polish all the time, the magazine went on. In the old and new Curia there is no office where at least one Pole is not already installed or on the way, the journal continued. These countrymen have easy access to the private rooms of the pope, these cardinals complain. The disgruntled feel that it is almost as if there is a curia within the Curia, powerful and hard to pin down, "L'ESPRESSO" concluded.

SPECULATION ON MAY BERLINGUER VISIT TO U.S.

AU101524 Rome ANSA in English 1518 GMT 10 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 10 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer may be the first Western communist leader to ever set foot in the United States, according to a local weekly. The "EUROPEO" magazine in its latest issue claimed that Berlinguer may go to the United States next May at the invitation of an American university.

"This mission of historic import could wind up with a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig," the weekly speculated.

The journal also claimed that the trip is being studied by the head of Berlinguer's secretarial office, Antonio Tata, and a representative from the American Embassy in Rome who was not identified. The latter was said to have met often with Italian Communist Party (PCI) officials in this regard. Asked to confirm these rumors, the PCI responded with a diplomatic "no comment."

Berlinguer has just left Rome for a trip to Central America that will take him to Cuba, Mexico and Nicaragua.

PUBLIC INQUIRY TO BE MADE INTO SA CARNEIRO DEATH

LD142328 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Excerpts] We have just received an official note from the prime minister's office which we now will read in full as laid down by law:

1. Through the minister of justice, the prime minister took cognizance of the attorney general's directive regarding the dossier of what has come to be known as the Camarate affair.

2. After having received the said dossier from the judiciary police, the attorney general took the view that the specific nature of this case calls for the continuation of investigation efforts, now in the form of a public inquiry. Any individual likely to have any useful knowledge about the case under investigation is thus asked to make it available to the authorities and directly and voluntarily give his cooperation to the police inquiry.

3. The government expresses its gratitude to the attorney general for having, within the legal framework, found a solution to this new stage aimed at enlightening the public, by enlisting the citizens' participation in the investigations so as to prevent any future speculation about the case. In effect, the emotional climate created throughout the country and even abroad by the deaths of former Prime Minister Francisco Sa Carneiro, of Defense Minister Adelino Amaro da Costa, of those accompanying them and of the crew makes it impossible to consider this case as an event like any other with the same consequences. All sorts of versions indeed emerged about possible criminal involvement in the Camarate affair. The present public inquiry may, once and for all, put an end to any doubts and confusion. Hence, another reason to support the attorney general's proposal.

The government continues to be deeply committed to the full clarification of the truth about Camarate and hopes that this exceptional kind of public inquiry, now announced, will contribute to that goal.

BRAZIL'S DELFIM NETO DISCUSSES ECONOMIC TIES

PY150128 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Planning Minister Delfim Neto arrived in Lisbon today, starting a 16-day tour through various European countries. He will remain in Portugal for 4 days.

Upon arrival, Delfim Neto stated that Brazil is making a great effort to increase its economic relations with the African Portuguese-speaking countries and added that Brazilian foreign policy is one of cooperation and not of competition with other countries. The Brazilian minister stated that Portugal will not become an entrepot of Brazilian products in Europe when it becomes a member of the EEC. Nevertheless, he stated, its membership will contribute to increasing Brazilian trade with the EEC. The minister believes that $6 million — the equivalent of 10 billion cruzeiros or 6 million escudos — will be negotiated during this trip. Brazilian enterprises intend to acquire maritime equipment in Portugal. The Brazilians intend to sell aircraft and vehicles to Portugal.

Delfim Neto stated that the Brazilian Government has decided to intensify preferential economic relations with Portugal since the relationship in other fields is considered good. This visit complements the one made by President Figueiredo at the beginning of the year.

At the end of the meeting, Minister Delfim Neto, in answer to a question regarding the meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund during which the U.S. representatives supported the diminishing of loans to some developing countries, stated: The United States is tidying up its house but there are no reasons for it to do the same with others.

FINANCE MINISTER DISCUSSES 1982 BUDGET

PM140807 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 4 Oct 81 p 33

[Primo Gonzalez Ortiz interview in Madrid with Spanish Finance Minister Jaime Garcia Anoveros; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Minister, one's first impressions on seeing the budget are that it is a budget of a fairly defensive nature in which subsidies and gaps, filled at the expense of public funds, have increased disturbingly. It doesn't seem to be a budget which will extricate this country from the crisis by means of more imaginative and creative behavior on the part of the public sector.

[Answer] I don't agree with that. On the one hand, the budget is perfectly integrated into an economic policy to the extent of incorporating prior agreements and decisions within the context of that economic policy. And the latter has set itself the aim of reducing wage costs for enterprises, which gave rise to the national agreement on employment. Some budgetary consequences result from that fact. On the other hand, the budget retains basic elements of a policy appropriate for emerging from the crisis: a very appreciable increase in public investment and a very considerable curbing of state consumption expenditure, which I believe should be emphasized. The rest is transferences. But the transferences are aimed -- let us not forget -- at correcting the distribution among various components of the private sector of the economy. These transferences entail neither a greater bureaucratization or even an increase in what we might term the administrative public sector. These transferences are justified insofar as the crisis is creating some effects which we wish to correct partly through the budget. They are also corrections on which everybody is in agreement. The amount, the adjustments or the abuses which may occur can be questioned, but not the fact in itself.

Therefore, if the state's consumption expenditure increases moderately, at the risk even of affecting the proper functioning of the state machinery, and with an obvious sacrifice for the public sector, and if an appreciable increase in investment occurs, there can be no doubt that this is a budget for combating the crisis. And I would like to emphasize something very important: one budget effort is to reduce a tax which is gravely detrimental at the present time -- social security contributions as a payroll tax. And here there is an effort involving a state contribution totaling 350 billion pesetas. So what we have done is to replace restraint in that payroll tax by a deficit. And I believe that the deficit is better than the payroll tax. Theoretically, the best thing would have been to replace the payroll tax by another, less irrational tax, which is what will eventually have to be done because -- let us not deceive ourselves -- the deficit cannot last forever. But in a crisis situation, it seems to me to be fairly reasonable to experience a deficit situation temporarily through lightening the payroll tax.

If we had increased the tax pressure to provide those social benefits which society wants from all viewpoints -- from the right to the left -- then we would have undertaken a tax burden of 17-18 percent in terms of GDP. And that cannot be done at a strike, especially if we have no alternative tax.

Deficit: Greater Awareness

[Question] But this country -- at least, some sections of it -- is increasingly aware of the problem of the deficit.

[Answer] This seems to me to be a quite hypocritical outrage because it doesn't seriously face up to reality. I am no advocate of the deficit. The deficit troubles me as much as anybody. Indulging in a deficit is a bad attitude although this does not mean that it must not be accepted sometimes, provided that its amount does not reach levels which would impose intolerable inflation on us or drive the economy toward a recession. And that is not the case.

[Question] So to what extent can the budget, in the form in which it has been drawn up, help this country find its way out of the crisis next year?

[Answer] The budget is one more instrument for emerging from the crisis -- not the only one, although it is important and potent. And of course, it will help extricate the country from the crisis. If we have controlled the state's current expenditure to such an extent that labor costs are increasing by 13 percent and those for the functioning of the civilian services -- excluding defense -- by 10 percent, it is clear that the state is tackling expenditure from an absolutely restrained stance because funds are being set free for the transferences and investments, because it must not be forgotten that revenue is increasing by 21 percent.

Sectors in State of Crisis

[Question] The budget earmarks a good many billions of pesetas for covering public enterprises' deficits and resolving the industrial crisis. To what extent is it logical for this to be a matter to be resolved by means of the budget? Couldn't a rehabilitation of those enterprises be sought by means of strictly industrial measures so that the losses of the enterprises in a state of crisis would not be borne by all taxpayers in general?

[Answer] That is debatable. Of course, there are methods of granting credit in addition to that of the budget, and I realize that those capital grants should be controlled, but it is not easy because society simply does not accept the social consequences of the shutdown of enterprises if they are not included in the budget.

[Question] But these capital grants to enterprises are rather like a revolutionary tax which the whole of society must pay to maintain enterprises which are located in specific places.... And these grants have no effect of redistributing wealth among social classes.

[Answer] It doesn't seem to me that this is an excessive cost in relation to Spanish industry as a whole. It seems to me to be a reasonable cost. Of course, some of them are in one place and others elsewhere and we cannot change them.

[Question] Do you believe that the tax incentives contained in the 1982 budget are sufficient to encourage enterprises to invest?

[Answer] I do not believe in the effectiveness of tax measures for encouraging investments. Not at all. It seems to me that incentives, when they are of a permanent and regular nature, are useless. They are simply a reduction of the level of taxation and insofar as this can result in improved profitability of projects, it can be useful. However, any specific measure can serve, rather than to encourage investment, to divert it toward a certain sector, region, financial type of investment....

But if it is permanent, the market assimilates the difference and it eventually has no more effect. Private investment cannot be revived by tax incentives. The fact is that savings are affected by the overall level of the tax burden so that if the tax burden is low, people will save more. I believe that investment occurs as a result of other mechanisms -- the mechanisms characteristic of the free economy and especially as a result of a very important factor -- the interest rate.

Interest Rates

[Question] But here a high deficit can have an influence because it creates upward pressure on interest rates....

[Answer] Very slightly. The interest rate in Spain is not high because there is that deficit instead of a lower deficit. Because, among other things, the public debt is sending interest rates down and not up. There are other causes which determine interest rates and not budgetary policy. And on the whole, it is the interest rate which is decisive in determining investment expectations in any kind of investment, whatever its financial mechanism. However much an employer is given 20 percent of investment in an activity without expectations, it is useless because we will not invest. [sentence as published] What I can achieve is to make investment go from one place to another and offset certain shortcomings, but fiscal instruments have limited effectiveness in the overall volume of investment.

Tax Collective Capacity

[Question] One possibility for reducing the deficit would be to improve the state's tax collective capacity. Can't improvements in administration be achieved with the taxes which already exist? Is there no scope which is unutilized through lack of efficiency?

[Answer] It can never be said that tax collecting capacity is saturated and, of course, there is scope. But it is scope on which we cannot rely, on its own, for resolving the problem of a deficit such as that which we now have. Let's not deceive ourselves. This year we will probably fulfill the tax collecting forecasts which represent an increase of about 23 percent in the 1981 revenue. And to achieve that with such a low growth in income and the inflation which we have had and, last, with tax measures which did not bring in such a great additional amount -- that is, in itself, an important improvement in administration. If we had not improved administration, we would not have been able to do this. For next year we estimate a 21 percent -- 20.8 percent to be precise -- increase in revenue. And bearing in mind that only 40 billion pesetas will come in as a result of additional tax measures, it is fair to acknowledge that an appreciable improvement in administration is occurring and will continue to occur because the combined growth of the economy and prices will be approximately 15 percent. And between that and the 21 percent, there is a difference of 180 billion pesetas. And if we subtract from this the 40 billion pesetas produced by increases in tax rates, about 140 billion pesetas in higher revenue are left, thanks to an improvement in administration -- an improvement in administration pure and simple.

What is clear is that with a deficit of 700 billion pesetas, the solution does not lie in improving the administration of revenue. That deficit represents approximately 25 percent of revenue and it seems inconceivable to improve tax collecting capacity by that percentage with the fiscal instruments now existing.

Scope for Reducing Deficit

[Question] So what can be done to reduce that deficit?

[Answer] The Finance Ministry has virtually no scope for reducing the deficit with its techniques for squeezing operating expenditure. The policy of squeezing and squeezing is no longer producing results. In a year in which officials' salaries are increasing by 13 percent and pensions by 10 percent and in which the state's labor costs in general are increasing by 13 percent, there is no longer any more scope.

Greater efficiency can be extracted from civil servants but not lower wages — something which is not advisable either. It must be borne in mind that officials' earnings have been increasing less than those of other groups of workers over the last few years nor is it possible to curb the operating expenditure of the services any further since possible waste has been eliminated and some services no longer even have enough to pay their light bills. There are now services in the administration which have reached their limits and this is apparent because we are sometimes seeing strains. I believe that reduction of the deficit or savings in expenditure can be achieved theoretically in three areas: in public investments where there is greater flexibility, in transferences and in defense. And it is there, in that threesome, that the political options for reducing budgetary expenditure and hence the deficit lie.

[Question] But should investments, for instance, be reduced?

[Answer] I do not believe so. The transferences are largely consequences of the crisis and the growth in defense expenditure coincides with the armed forces which are paid with restraint and with delicate security requirements. And yet, it is in those areas that there is theoretically scope for action although you must realize that it is limited in relation to the size of the deficit. But those combating it do not usually enter into such detail. They content themselves with closing their eyes to the inconvenient part of the decision, without committing themselves to much or at all. So the Finance Ministry is virtually unable to save more in current operating expenditure. People are quite free to say what they like but you sometimes find that those who talk most about reducing the deficit are those who later turn up seeking and receiving subsidies.

[Question] Can we contemplate implementing in Spain a program of reducing taxes and the size of the public sector, as they are attempting to do in the United States, to achieve greater economic efficiency?

[Answer] No. This is not possible at all. Expenditure can only be reduced in the three areas I mentioned earlier. In the rest, it is not possible, at least in my opinion. In Spain, we cannot say that we are providing less health service than we are providing and we cannot provide less education than we are providing. Taxes are increasing but this is not sufficient to pay for the cost of education. Past policy was very mistaken regarding secondary education but we cannot say today that we are going to close down secondary schools. Nobody in Spain can do such a thing, which, moreover, I believe should not be done. One reason exists — nobody is demanding this, not even a minority. Expenditure in these areas can be frozen but not reduced. Social demands in this country are still tremendous. I don't know whether they are reasonable or unreasonable, reasonable in some instances and unreasonable in others, because people have little confidence in private enterprise in this country and have confidence only in the aid which may reach them from above. This is an outlook which is outside political ideologies and exists in all social sectors, from employers to workers. And with a social situation like this, there is nothing to be done, neither under democracy nor under any other social system, because it is difficult to again find demogoguery such as that which was practiced in this country under the previous regime. Let's not deceive ourselves. The country wants a larger public sector because it is demanding this every day, because everybody is demanding this, and, moreover, a larger public services sector, not a larger public enterprise sector, because only a few people — among whom, of course, I do not count myself — are demanding that. I believe that it is necessary to convince this country that the free economy is good — and it is necessary to begin to do so with employers — and that quotas, subsidies and protection distort the market; something which some employers proclaim but do not practice.

A program of reducing taxes cannot be implemented in any European country because it is a society which is unaccustomed to the spirit of risk which exists in U.S. society. And people want security. And the public sector provides security. In my opinion, what must be done is to create a greater sense of responsibility among citizens and, hence, the greatest possible efficiency in the public sector.

ABC BACKS PENTAGON VIEW OF USSR MILITARY POWER

PM141041 Madrid ABC in Spanish 1 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Military Empire"]

[Text] The U.S. Pentagon has found itself obliged to publish a detailed document to demonstrate that Soviet military power is real. As Defense Secretary Weinberger said, it is not a matter of an "act of propaganda." It should be added that the aim of the publication of the report "Soviet Military Power" is to counter the widespread viewpoint that Moscow loves peace and Washington seeks war.

Is it possible that there still remain gullible people capable of accepting that dogma of Soviet propaganda after reading the 99 pages of the report? Because to believe that the USSR's military machine is exclusively for "defending the socialist world against capitalist acts of aggression" is not valid as a serious argument.

Poor Poland, preoccupied and immersed in the uncertainty created by the Soviet tanks because 10 million workers are demanding their rights vis-a-vis the empire! An empire which bases its expansionism on weapons of an offensive nature: sophisticated weapons, such as the SS-20 missiles aimed at West Europe, but at the same time at the PRC. Are Mao's heirs also capitalist pawns?

It is an expansionism with military and nonmilitary means, as can be read in chapter 7 of the Pentagon's report, an expansionism which is real and not, unfortunately, science fiction, as one appears to gather from the usual "skeptics." It is not necessary to look very far to see how the USSR is using "military, political, economic and subversive measures to influence world events."

The Pentagon's report has the virtue of exposing with facts and figures the USSR's real intentions. It also seeks to curb a maneuver which is well organized in Moscow and well supported throughout West Europe by the usual loyalists to isolate the United States from its allies. What idyllic prospects await us in a West Europe which is disarmed in the presence of the USSR's military potential? As U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Director Eugene Rostow said in Brussels, Soviet nuclear blackmail would enable the USSR "to win a conflict without even waging war."

The "neutralists," who are paradoxically taking sides against the Western defensive alliance, cannot convince us of their great love of freedom. There is no peace without military balance. And peace is inseparable from freedom. Or do they perhaps crave in Europe the peace of the graveyards and prisons?

This is what awaits the free world if a sympathetic stance toward Soviet military power is maintained while the United States is accused of seeking war in its attempts to achieve the lost military balance.

KIPRIANOU WARNS ALITHIA ON UNILATERAL ACTION

NC121048 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 12 Oct 81 p 1

[Editorial: "We Warn: There Is Danger in Rejecting Waldheim's Initiative"]

[Text] Today, Kiprianou starts his consultations with Waldheim without first conferring with the National Council. In other words, he is doing this without first aligning his views with those of the majority. He has chosen instead to take the initiative as a representative of the minority. He said he will ask for views...later. Thus, immediately after the Cypriot gatherings in Australia, he rushed to the UN headquarters, after delivering a speech full of slogans with the well-known trite expressions.

Last week, the people got tired of watching Kiprianou on television and of hearing him repeat at meetings of Cypriots in Australia that we will not agree. Instead of this, the people expected to hear what we will do with Waldheim's new ideas and if we could accept his new initiative.

The press has published leaks of the new ideas. There have also been some polemics against Waldheim. Some have even referred to ultimatums. The government has remained silent. Kiprianou continued his tune at meetings with Australian Cypriots. AKEL has taken a correct position: It said the proposals must be studied before any opinions are expressed. Numerically, AKEL and the Democratic Rally represent the majority of people and it is well known that the Democratic Rally thinks diligently and responsibly and demands that steps be prepared in advance before political decisions are made.

Such steps to be taken in the center of developments are one thing, however, and fringe sloganeering at the other end of the world is entirely another. The governing minority is once again caught failing to express the majority which wants to think.

Those who think, therefore, state that the highest priority at this moment must be given to how the new developments will be handled — collectively, not with the "this is how I want it" spirit — because the government's mistakes and omissions create the danger of not only failing to utilize Waldheim's initiative, but also of rendering it useless — with extremely serious repercussions.

We warn the people of the danger and call on them to see things clearly before drawing any conclusions, and we enumerate: — it is a fact that the UN secretary general expressed his intent to undertake some initiative for the solution of the Cyprus issue by making certain basic recommendations to promote dialogue well before Kiprianou's departure for Australia. Several weeks passed, however, and the Cypriot Government, acting with its characterisitc indecision, did not make it clear how it will accept or encourage the initiative. Neither the government nor Kiprianou can claim ignorance of Waldheim's ideas in their effort to excuse their inactivity, because the foreign minister has been in New York at UN headquarters for days and he could have informed them. Unless, of course, they were not interested in what was going on because they were too busy with the Australian visit and the organization of its presentation over Cyprus television. Even if the persons in authority did demonstrate such an unforgivable behavior, however, Rolandhis ought to have briefed them out of his duty.

Conclusion: The government and Kiprianou should know what they have a duty not to ignore, and that they are guilty of indecision and inaction.

— It is a fact that the government let it be understood that, if it were to be accepted, the Waldheim initiative should agree with the UN resolutions on Cyprus and with the summit agreements. To this moment, however, there is no indication that the UN secretary general's initiative runs counter to these two prerequisites.

If any such indication had existed, Waldheim should have been discouraged from an open expression of his initiative so that Cyprus would not be exposed internationally for rejecting recommendations cloaked in the prestige of the UN secretary general.

Conclusion: The government had no indication that the content of the Waldheim ideas opposed the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. If it had such indications and it did not discourage the UN secretary general, then it is guilty of unforgiveable neglect.

— It is a fact that Kiprianou decided to visit New York after the Commonwealth conference and the Cypriot gatherings in Australia. What is the purpose, however, of his current visit to New York and his contacts there?

Conclusion: If the purpose of Kiprianou's visit and contacts in New York is the need to briefed, then all the expense was totally unnecessary. Foreign Minister Rolandhis could have briefed him fully, in the same way that he briefed acting president Ladhas who, in his turn, brifed the party leaders on the Waldheim ideas.

Consequently, we have the great question: Did Kiprianou go to New York without consulting anyone in order to convince the secretary general to alter his views?

Unfortunately, there are numerous indications that something of this sort is happening. It is from such a manipulation that the danger stems about which we responsibly warn the people; the danger of rendering the Waldheim initiative useless. This is because if Kiprianou enters into a dangerous process of altering Waldheim's ideas (which could have been discussed at the negotiations table), then he will be forcing the secretary general to start separate consultations with the two sides. Such a process will very likely produce no common ground. In such an eventuality, Waldheim will avoid undertaking his initiative, which appears to have matured into the form of his present ideas. Destroying the Waldheim initiative in such a way will result in making the impasse official. This is a development abhorred by the Greek side and hoped for by the Turkish side.

Final conclusion: Instead of going to New York and instead of starting consultations, Kiprianou should have urgently returned to Cyprus — since he knows and should not ignore the context of Waldheim's ideas — and he should have started urgent consultations within the National Council aimed at adopting the correct decisions on the positions to be taken as well as on the new steps which must be dared.

AKEL LEADER PAPAIOANNOU ASSESSES CYPRUS ISSUE

NC151045 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 15 Oct 81 pp 1, 7

[Excerpts] Munity and cooperation among all the patriotic, democratic forces on the basis of a minimum, jointly acceptable program is the prerequisite for the successful outcome of our liberation struggle.... AKEL is fully prepared for such cooperation provided it is based on a common line and tactics of struggle for a Cyprus solution and on a popular approach to the people's problems.

This was stressed by AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou in his speech last night during a meeting of the Famagusta district party cadres [in Larnaca].

In his speech Mr E. Papaioannou said: According to all indications, the Cyprus issue is entering a new phase. As we have already stressed, we will define our position after having been responsibly briefed on Waldheim's ideas by the president of the republic, who will return from the UN headquarters this week.

We can accept a Cyprus solution only within the UN framework and on the basis of UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

The solution should essentially include the withdrawal of Turkish and all other foreign troops from Cypriot territory, the voluntary return of the refugees to their homes and of property under conditions of safety, the tracing of all missing persons, and the safeguarding by the UN Security Council of Cyprus' independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The internal aspect of the problem, which concerns the structure of the Cypriot federal state, will be solved by the Cypriots -- Greeks and Turks -- through intercommunal talks within the UN framework and on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

The foreign aspect will be resolved at an international conference within the UN framework. Such a conference will also exercise a beneficial influence on the international talks.

We reject any foreign interference in our internal affairs. We unquestionably reject a NATOite, imperialist solution. Cyprus must become and remain truly independent, sovereign, territorially complete, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized. The British sovereign bases in Cyprus must be dissolved, and all the foreign troops withdrawn from Cypriot territory. The British imperialists must understand that they have acquired these bases not with the approval of the sovereign Cypriot people but through blackmail.

The Cyprus issue is not a question of territorial disputes, as British Prime Minister Thatcher most erroneously maintains, but a question of an antioccupation, anti-imperialist liberation struggle. We will not end this struggle until it is crowned with success. The unity and cooperation of all the patriotic, democratic forces on the basis of a minimum, jointly acceptable program is the prerequisite for the successful outcome of our liberation struggle.

Of course, the jointly acceptable minimum program is not everything. What is more significant is the realization of this program. The people are justified in wanting deeds. Words, no matter how nice they are, do not solve problems. It is problems that the people want to solve.

AKEL is fully prepared for such cooperation provided it is based on a common line and tactics of struggle for a Cyprus solution and on a popular approach to the people's problems; provided it secures all that has to be done for the implementation of the program to be agreed upon.

Unity and cooperation should essentially serve the purpose for which it is accomplished; otherwise, it is of no use. We have reached a stage where all the patriotic, democratic forces must sense their responsibilities and contribute toward unity and cooperation, which are so indispensable for the struggle of life or death that our people are waging.

Let all rise to the occasion in achieving patriotic unity and cooperation on a solid and sound basis in the interest of the people and their cause.

AKEL'S FANDIS ADDRESSES PARTY CADRES CONFERENCE

NC141026 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 14 Oct 81 p 1, 7

[Excerpts] The Cyprus problem at present is such that any haste or improvisation in dealing with the Waldheim ideas is impermissible. This was stressed last night by AKEL Assistant Secretary General and House member A. Fandis during a broad conference of party cadres in Nicosia. He said: Under present conditions, it is imperative for every party and every individual to show the highest degree of prudence, objectivity and sense of responsibility.

A. Fandis' assessment of the political problem is as follows: The expression of Waldheim's intention to submit to the interested parties some "new ideas" in order to get the negotiations moving has come at a suitable time.

It comes at a time when every objective observer can see the deadlock in the intercommunal talks and the danger of fresh stagnation of the Cyprus problem.

Under present conditions -- when the consultations at UN headquarters about Waldheim's "new ideas" are at their peak -- any haste or improvisation is impermissible. Under these conditions it is imperative that every party and every individual show the highest degree of prudence, objectivity and sense of responsibility. Such an approach to the "new ideas" and to the developments in general that are taking place at the United Nations by the Greek Cypriot side becomes still more imperative, because we are the side that will not gain by a stalemate or stagnation of the Cyprus problem. We are the side to gain if the deadlock or difficulties are overcome so that a substantive and constructive dialogue can continue. We are the side that believes more than anyone else in the need for the earliest possible solution to the Cyprus problem -- of course, not any solution, but one based on UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

It is on the basis of such an assessment of the Cyprus situation that Waldheim's "new ideas" should be viewed.

When assessing Waldheim's "new ideas,"one more element must be taken into account: When these ideas are presented at the intercommunal talks, they will not be in the form of an ultimatum to the Greek and the Turkish Cypriot sides but rather as "ideas" for discussion.

Despite these facts, some party leaders, and with them the archbishop, without waiting to be responsibly and officially briefed but relying solely on contradictory press reports, have hastened to denounce Waldheim's "new ideas" as "partitionist" and "unacceptable" and to reject them. These party leaders and others have, strictly speaking, declared war on the UN secretary general's intention to submit some ideas for the promotion of the intercommunal dialogue and for the resolution of the Cyprus problem. They have been calling the people to reject them immediately, to reject them a priori, without even being officially and responsibly briefed about them.

Our party has not followed this hasty method. With a high sense of responsibility and with the sangfroid characteristic of its decisions, our party -- after it is fully and officially briefed by the president of the republic -- will carefully study Waldheim's "new ideas," will objectively evaluate them, and will responsibly give its views on their content. And, as always, our party will not hesitate to support any positive points in Waldheim's "new ideas," to criticize any negative points, or to reject anything unacceptable that might be included in them. During the current critical moments for the Cyprus problem, our party, conscious of its responsibilities toward the people, will show determination, courage and resolve to openly declare its stand toward Waldheim's "new ideas" without being influenced by demagogic cries, regardless of their origin.

What criteria will our party use to assess Waldheim's "new ideas?" The supreme law that will guide us will be the interests of our suffering and unsubdued people. The main criteria for viewing and assessing Waldheim's "new ideas" are: Whether they serve the vital interests of the hard and difficult liberation, antioccupation and anti-imperialist struggle of our people; whether they contribute to the struggle for a peaceful, fair, mutually acceptable and viable Cyprus solution; and whether they are in harmony with the UN resolutions on the Cyprus problem and with the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas agreements.

Based on these criteria and apart from any political or closely partisan expediences, without influence from the political developments in Greece where the election campaign is at its peak, we will make our decisions on Waldheim's "new ideas."

During these current critical moments for Cyprus, during this delicate phase of intensive consultations about the Cyprus problem at the UN headquarters, AKEL feels the need to clearly declare again; we will never accept a Cyprus solution which would consolidate the faits accomplis of the invasion and the occupation.

We will never accept a solution that would partition Cyprus or would bring about double enosis. We will never accept a solution which would be contrary to or outside the UN resolutions on the Cyprus problem and the summit agreements. With faith in our rights, we will continue the struggle for a peaceful, fair, mutually acceptable and viable Cyprus solution which will be based on the UN resolutions and the Makarios-Denktas and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreements.

We are not struggling for any one Cyprus solution. We reject a solution which would consolidate or legalize the consequences of the invasion and occupation. We reject a solution which would dictate the presence of the Turkish occupation troops or of any other foreign troops in Cyprus. We are struggling for a really independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus without refugees and missing persons, without walls of separation, and for a common motherland for all its people -- Greeks, Turks, Armenians, Maronites and Latins alike -- for a Cyprus which would be a bridge of peace and cooperation in the Mediterranean, and in the Near and Middle East. This is our party's crystal-clear line for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

So that the serious developments concerning the Cyprus problem are faced in the best and most effective way which will better serve our people; and so that the hard and difficult liberation, antioccupation and anti-imperialist struggle of our people be crowned by success, today it is more imperative than ever to forge a steady and compact unity of all the patriotic, democratic forces of our struggling people -- a unity which must be based on a jointly acceptable minimum program that will define the correct line and tactics of struggle and the necessary measures for its implementation in practice, for the materialization of the joint minimum program. Starting from the belief that the problems of the struggle that we are facing during this critical phase cannot possibly be effectively confronted solely by any one party; starting from the fact that our people feel the need for the broadest possible unity of the patriotic democratic forces; our party, being the primary political force in this country, feels obligated to contribute as much as it can more decisively, to play a pioneering role in the way of promoting and bringing about such a unity.

Our party, being conscious of its responsibilities toward the people, will worthily respond to their expectations and will do everything it can to achieve patriotic unity, desired by our people and as required by the interests of our liberation, anti-occupation, anti-imperialist struggle.

CAGATAY GREETS GREEK CYPRIOTS IN HOLIDAY MESSAGE

[Text] In a message he issued today on the occasion of the Bairam holidays, National Unity Party leader and Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said that the failure to solve the Cyprus problem was due to the stance of the Greek Cypriot side. The message adds: The latest Turkish Cypriot proposals for the solution of the Cyprus problem have created new prospects and hopes. Though the world public defined these proposals as being substantive, comprehensive and acceptable, the Greek Cypriot leader, Kiprianou, is continuing to adopt an intransigent stand. Such a stand violates democratic rights and demonstrates lack of seriousness and responsibility. This situation weakens the chances for achieving results in the intercommunal talks and increases our community's mistrust of the Greek Cypriot leadership.

The Turkish Cypriot community will nevertheless await in good will the return of the Greek Cypriot leadership to a policy based on commonsense, as we are convinced that both communities in the island have a great urge for a lasting peace and settlement. On this happy occasion of the Bairam holidays, the message concludes, we offer our feelings of affection and peace to the Greek Cypriots and expect them to exercise influence on their intransigent leaders to pursue the right course.

BOMB DAMAGES PASOK PARLIAMENT CANDIDATE'S CAR

[Text] A plastic bomb that was planted under the automobile of PASOK parliamentary candidate for Khania constituency Iosif Valirakis exploded at 0600 today, damaging the automobile, which was parked outside the candidate's house in Khania. The Khania police are investigating.

Referring to this incident, Public Order Minister Katsadhimas stated: Following the incidents in Iraklion last Sunday, another equally deplorable incident has occurred; the blowing up of the private automobile of candidate Valirakis, who previously served as deputy. It is obvious that some people are seeking to create, at least in Crete, a climate of tension and anomaly during these last days of the election campaign. However, it must be understood that the state has both the power and the will to face them and to enforce the law in every respect.

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made the following statement: We most strongly denounce the bomb attack on the automobile of PASOK parliamentary candidate for Khania Mr Iosif Valirakis. But at the same time we note that this action, which is definitely an unusual incident during an election campaign, gives rise to suspicion and to most serious concern. It is obvious that ominous forces are on the move, attempting to cause destabilization for the sake of remote, suspicious goals. It is the duty of the state to exert every effort to trace and neutralize the culprits. At the same time, all the parties must remain calm and help the authorities neutralize the disruptive forces.

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON NATO, MIDEAST POLICY

NC122029 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 12 Oct 81 p 15

[11 October Thessaloniki interview with PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou]

[Excerpts] [Question] Kastoriadhis (FINANCIAL TIMES): On PASOK's relations with the Arab people and PASOK's position on the Middle East problem.

[Answer] When I refer to the Arab peoples I refer to what is called the Arab nation. Greece's bonds with the Arabs are very ancient and for us, for PASOK, this is a critical area for the region in which we live, it has a huge potential for development that has not been utilized because of the well-known presence and interventions of the great powers. I believe there will be a conscious support of PASOK, which is struggling in the Mediterranean for a Mediterranean of peace, a Mediterranean without foreign fleets and without foreign bases.

As regards the second question, that is, PASOK's position on the Middle East problem, its position is very simple. There can be no solution unless the PLO officially participates in the negotiations, unless a conference is convened in Geneva where the two superpowers will be present, and third, unless an independent Palestinian state is formed. It is clear that since there will be a Palestinian state, Israel's borders should be guaranteed, but the pre-1967 borders.

[Question] Jacque Esperandieu (PARIS L'ESPRESSO): On NATO and PASOK's position. What precisely will you do with NATO?

[Answer] I think our position on NATO is clear. For us, NATO is quite a different story than for the other European countries which participate in the Atlantic alliance. There is a history. Unfortunately, the 7-year dictatorship was supported by NATO and of course its imposition on 21 April 1967 was based on a NATO plan called Prometheus.

In 1974, Turkey landed military forces in Cyprus and succeeded in imposing its occupation on 40 percent of the island. Then the pro-NATO prime minister, Karamanlis, judged that the least Greece could do was to withdraw from the military wing of NATO. Why did NATO allow one of its member countries, equipped with NATO arms, to attack an independent UN member state? It is difficult for us to understand why Greece returned to the military wing of NATO in view of the fact that Cyprus is still occupied. However, what is truly difficult for a country to "swallow" is that the Atlantic alliance does not defend our country's borders. NATO, like the United States, refuses to guarantee our borders to the east, refuses to give any guarantee, while at the same time it encourages Turkish claims in the Aegean, modernizing Turkey's armed forces to an incredible degree, and laying the foundations of a military industry in Turkey which, in a few years, will be an arms exporter. Finally, I add that the agreement on the basis of which Greece returned to the military wing of NATO, the Rogers agreement, for the first time questions, within the NATO framework, the operational control of the Aegean airspace. That is, while before 1974 responsibility for the Aegean airspace was exclusively borne by Athens, currently the NATO side demands that some division, partition if you want, be made between the Turkish headquarters in Eskisehir and the Greek headquarters in Larisa, which will supposedly be established; that is, what is happening is the exact opposite of what Rallis gives as a guarantee for our return to NATO. First, instead of defending or at least guaranteeing our borders to the east, NATO questions them. Second, what Rallis fears — that if we do not belong to the military wing of NATO then NATO will arm Turkey — is already taking place to the greatest possible degree. The Turkish Army cannot absorb any more than it is currently taking.

In a few words: What business do we have in an alliance that does not protect our borders? Of course, the French have their own sensitivities because they do not belong to the military wing of NATO, but only to the Atlantic alliance. Consequently, they will be in a position to understand our sensitivity more than others.

[Question] (Ersman Nina) (Sweden — SVENSKA DAGBLADET): Does Felipe Gonzalez' presence here for some days now, and soon that of Olof Palme, mean that you have changed your stance and your confrontation with the social democratic parties of the Socialist International, or that they have changed their position toward you, or toward your party?

[Answer] I would like to say two or three things: First, PASOK does not belong to the Socialist International and does intend to do so. The second point is that there should be some distinction between the socialist parties of southern Europe and the social democratic workers' parties of northern Europe. Basically and pointedly, conditions are different in the economic structure and the social structure. I believe that change will come from southern Europe. Undoubtedly the workers' and social democratic parties of northern Europe are progressive parties, but their success is linked with the fact that after the war we had a huge economic development which permitted the development of what we call the "affluent state." This did not happen to us in the south. Currently, in the huge crisis facing international capitalism, we who advocate that structural changes are needed are being vindicated by history. With regard to the northern workers' and social democratic parties, I believe that they will pass through a period of revision, a regrouping of their forces and redefinition of their goals. The fourth point is that I especially appreciate the decision by Felipe Gonzalez and Olof Palme to come to Greece at this critical confrontation.

Their presence is a token that Europe's progressive forces, which play and will continue to play an increasingly significant role in Europe, support PASOK's effort to bring change to Greece. It is an act of solidarity and, if you want, it constitutes the return of an act of Solidarity which PASOK and I personally had offered in their direction. The message is that PASOK is not along in the European area, that it has mainstays, that it has friends who think similarly about their countries. As I said last evening, France is first, Greece second, and Spain third. From that point on, Europe's course is clearly defined toward a socialist transformation.

[Question] Malvin How (New York TIMES): I would like to know whether you believe that currently there is any danger of military intervention.

[Answer] I answer with great joy and absolute certainty that no such danger exists, that the armed forces are absolutely law-abiding. During this period they are shouldering the very heavy task of defending the country's territorial integrity and I am absolutely certain they do not intend to become involved in our country's internal politics. Nothing to worry about.

[Question] Francoise Arvaniti (LA CROIX): Do you believe that France is a socialist country of the north or the south?

[Answer] Certainly of the south.

[Question] Now that prospects have appeared for the rise to power of socialist governments in European states, do you see any change in your positions toward participation in the EC?

[Answer] The reply is that, undoubtedly, a socialist Europe would probably give the opportunity to a economically underdeveloped area like Greece to proceed at a faster pace. However, the basic point is this: What is of interest is the distribution of the community's taxes by region. If through the phrase "socialist Europe" we mean that the rich countries of the north would be ready to transfer their surplus to the south, then of course our decision to remain in the EEC would be justified. However, such a prospect lies in the very distant future. Therefore, our position is what it always was; that our country's accession is a great, important, serious error as regards economic policy. The Greek economy will be hard hit by accession. We do not advocate severance of our relations with the EEC. We advocate the establishment of a special relationship with the EEC that will allow us to implement a development program for a self-centered economy, something that unfortunately cannot be done within the EEC framework. We should not forget what the EC currently is; it is first a customs union so that products can move without customs inside the EEC area. Second, it is a group of states which allows the free movement of capital inside its borders as, in principle — in principle because this has not been valid for Greece for many years, 7 to be exact -- it allows the free movement of the worker potential. These three freedoms have a very negative impact on the relatively underdeveloped countries. You have only to read EEC statistics to see how, as time passes, the rich are becoming richer and the poor, poorer. Consequently, this is what we shall seek. This is an answer of substance. In addition, there is the issue of our immediate policy; that is, the plebiscite. We believe that, like all the other countries, Greece and the Greek people have the right to judge through a plebisicte. Whether this will take place or not and whether it will be soon or late I cannot say at this moment, because this is the prerogative of the president of the republic.

INDONESIAN MINISTER ENDS VISIT, DEPARTS

TA142027 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Indonesian Public Works Minister Purnomosidi Hajisaroso, who was in Turkey as the official guest of Public Works Minister Tahsin Onalp, has left Turkey. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Hajisaroso said that the talks in Ankara were held in a warm and sincere atmosphere and that positive results in the interests of both countries were obtained. He added that they were held to develop cooperation between the two countries.

OFFICIAL REPORTS TRANSPORT PROTOCOL WITH GREECE

TA141802 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Report on the Turkish-Greek highway committee talks in Athens by Turkish Radio and Television correspondent in Athens Ali Kirca -- recorded]

[Text] A decision has been made to begin regular bus service between Turkey and Athens by the end of this year. The joint highway committee, which was formed in accordance with the highway transportation agreement between the two countries, ended its meetings in Athens this morning. According to a protocol signed at the end of the meetings, Turkey and Greece will begin passenger bus services by the end of this year. The basic agreement on the issue was signed in 1970, but it was not implemented. The delegations at the talks were headed by Transportation Ministry Deputy Undersecretary Orhan Buldac and by the Transportation Director General of the Greek Communications Ministry, (Nicolaos Meridiatis).

In a statement to TRT after the protocol signing ceremony, Buldac said there will be some 3,500 transit movements through Greece next year and that Greece will have an equal number of transit movements through Turkey during the same period. According to the protocol, a quota of [number indistinct] has been allocated for Turkish and Greek highway transportation in 1982. However, this quota can be increased according to need.

The delegations also decided that at the committee's meetings in Ankara next year, all aspects of transportation, not only highway transportation, will be discussed. The heads of the two delegations said cooperation in the transportation field will greatly contribute to the rapprochement between the two countries.

GUNAYDIN REVIEWS ECONOMIC TIES WITH LIBYA

NC150717 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 13 Oct 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] Turkey has great interests in Libya, a country that the United States and Egypt are planning to occupy. Economic relations between our country and Libya have increased tremendously in recent years. A $1 billion trade agreement was signed between the two countries this year. Libya has become an important market for our foodstuffs, cereals such as wheat and livestock.

More important than this, Turkish construction firms have won $3.5 billion worth of contracts in Libya in recent years. These firms have invested their funds and their future in Libya. The Turkish construction firms have a chance of importing 40 percent of their building materials from Turkey. It is stated that this will create new possibilities for the industrial branch that produces building materials. In addition to the Turkish export firms, Turkish workers, too, stand to gain from Libya. About 50,000 Turkish workers are currently employed in Libya, earning the wages of at least 200,000 of their counterparts in Turkey. The presence of 50,000 workers also means millions in foreign exchange for Turkey.

Egypt's occupation of Libya would greatly damage the relations existing between Turkey and Libya and would trample on Turkish interests. These facts automatically influence the kind of attitude that Turkey should take toward allegations that Libya's occupation is being planned. Let us hope that these plans are not put into practice, that the tension of war in the region and between the blocs is not increased, and that relations that Turkey managed to establish with Libya under difficult conditions are not damaged.

MINISTER OZAL PRAISES INDUSTRIAL EXPORTS

TA121639 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Oct 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that through the economic program being implemented, Turkey has reached a favorable stage and has been able to mark a considerable increase in its exports. Ozal was addressing a meeting organized by the Antalya chamber of commerce and industry on the subject of the export of fresh fruit and vegetables. Noting that Turkey's exports increased by 58.4 percent in the first 8 months of 1981 in comparison to the same period in 1980, Ozal said that for the first time in August the export of industrial goods surpassed that of agricultural products. Pointing out that this was a significant development, Ozal added that exports were expected to reach $4.5 billion until the end of the year.

Stressing the importance of transportation for exports, Ozal said that the Turkish International Highway Transport[TIR] fleet has experienced important growth lately. Ozal said that new measures were being taken to develop maritime transportation and added that some frieghters would sail between Mersin port and some Italian ports. This, Ozal said, will help develop Turkey's transit trade.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS RESIGNATION TO QUEEN

[Excerpt] The Hague, 16 Oct (AFP) -- Dutch Prime Minister Andreas van Agt offered his government's resignation to Queen Beatrix today, it was announced here.

The queen was "considering" the offer, government information officials said, adding that all ministers had tendered their resignations. Informed sources said here earlier today that the queen was likely to ask Mr. van Agt to patch up differences within the coalition.

The fall of the government, even before it had made its inaugural statement to parliament, followed an all-night cabinet session to discuss the speech.

LABOR PARTY REJECTS CLOSE LINK WITH COMMUNISTS

PM160839 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 6 Oct 81 p 2

["Own" political Report]

[Text] The Hague, 6 Oct -- The Labor Party [PVDA] continues to reject close cooperation with the Netherlands Communist Party [CPN]. While the PVDA Executive sees new trends within the CPN -- toward a more open democratic party, it nevertheless notes that the CPN has still not abandoned some of its old positions.

The PVDA Executive stated this in a report on the relationship between the PVDA and the CPN which appeared yesterday. With this report, the Executive gives content to a resolution from the April 1979 PVDA Congress to look into whether developments within the CPN would make it possible for the CPN to give support to a progressive cabinet.

In the recent election campaign PVDA in its preference for a progressive cabinet left open the question of subsidiary support from the CPN. For its own part, the CPN announced its strong support for a broad progressive coalition without demanding participation in a cabinet. A position in which the CPN would only be able to give subsidiary support to a progressive cabinet was rejected by the CPN.

In its report, the PVDA Executive makes four conditions for cooperation with the CPN:

The CPN must clarify its view of democracy and in doing so must dissociate itself from Marxist-Leninism.

The CPN must make "unambiguous" statements about the communist regimes in East Europe.

In its cooperation with other parties of the left, the CPN must drop its desire for a frontline role and must cooperate on an equal footing. In social actions, it must dissociate itself from collaboration with so-called cover organizations.

In the fight against unemployment, the CPN must accept reductions in individual consumption.

While stating that there is a trend within the CPN toward becoming a more open and democratic party, the PVDA Executive states that this "as yet has not been paired with a conscious and systematic attempt to work through its own Stalinist past."

SCHMIDT MAKES 'GOOD PROGRESS,' MEETS WITH GENSCHER

[Excerpts] Bonn, 16 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Schmidt continues to make good progress on the third day following his heart pacemaker operation. A government spokesman said in Bonn today that Schmidt had a talk with Vice Chancellor Genscher at the military hospital in Koblenz at noon. They discussed the preparations for next week's North-South conference in Mexico, where Genscher will sit in for the chancellor, and for the Bonn visit of Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev at the end of November.

SPD Deputy Chairman Wischnewski and the leader of the SPD Bundestag Group, Wehner, again stressed today that the chancellor had the support of the party leadership and the whole party. Wischnewski emphatically rejected "totally inappropriate and absurd" speculations about a successor to Schmidt. "We have no problem about solving the succession. We have a federal chancellor whom others envy us for having."

JOURNALIST STANDS BY REPORT ON SCHMIDT'S SURGERY

DW151327 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0525 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Heribert Schwan interview with journalist Barbara Harnischfeger on 15 October; place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Prior to his surgery on Tuesday, Chancellor Schmidt's condition reportedly was very critical. Reports by the Baden-Baden Suedwestfunk Network and BILD-ZEITUNG agreed on this. These reports were not officially confirmed in Bonn last night.

You reported last night for both Suedwestfunk and ARD television that the chancellor had been unconscious at times on Sunday and Monday; in short, that he was more seriously ill than could have been assumed from the official releases distributed so far. What did your journalistic investigation bring to light?

[Answer] It brought to light that his physician already during the weekend seriously suspected arrhythmia and there had been telephone contact with the chancellor's personal physician. This man, after all, is a military doctor in the Koblenz central hospital of the Bundeswehr and has been treating the chancellor continuously for the past 10 years -- not just for this illness, of course. What I mean to say by this is that the chancellor is a regular patient there whenever he has some little ache.

This telephone contact resulted in the chancellor's trip to Koblenz Monday afternoon for a diagnosis because the physician refused to bear the responsibility for the chancellor's trip to Mexico for the North-South summit conference Thursday after these moments of unconsciousness, in view of the dangerous symptoms that had occurred, as the physician told me verbatim. The examinations in Koblenz then revealed that it was arrhythmia indeed which had caused the moments of unconsciousness, though I cannot tell you how long they lasted.

Regarding Government Spokesman Becker's statement last night that he knew nothing about moments of unconsciousness nor could he imagine that the attending physician could have said this because this would mean violation of professional discretion and, hence, the source of this information seemed to be unreliable -- all I can say is that Government Spokesman Becker told a Suedwestfunk colleague in Bonn at 1745 on Tuesday that the chancellor had not had a pacemaker implantation, even though this pacemaker had already been implanted by then and even though this had to be admitted 30 minutes later anyway.

[Question] What you simply did was to call the chancellor's personal physician. This brings up the question as to why this physician, Dr Voelpel, told you all this. Is he not bound by the professional ethics and discretion of a physician?

[Answer] I had no qualms whatsoever about asking him yesterday morning after it had become generally known that the chancellor had a pacemaker implantation. After all, it is standard procedure for physicians to issue bulletins when cases of such important personalities are involved. He told me all this without warning me not to report any part of it. It failed to see any reason whatsoever not to report it.

It may be that in retrospect the federal press office would have liked to handle it differently because of political or public relations reasons. I do not know whether the doctor will now be in trouble. But he did make his statements to me quite freely, and I assume that anyone familiar with the symptoms of such an illness knows that you do not get a pacemaker implanted unless there are symptoms which make this necessary.

Becker Response

[Excerpt from press conference by Federal Government Spokesman Kurt Becker in Bonn on 15 October -- recorded]

[Text] I have read -- though I cannot tell at the moment where, but that could be back-tracked -- that something like an asystole had occurred. This is why I asked Dr Voelpel about it, and Dr Voelpel told me that he had discussed with a female reporter the rhythm of the heartbeat and arrhythmia. In doing so, he said, he also pointed out that arrhythmia also involves the serious risk of an asystole. He did not say that the chancellor had suffered from that.

I repeat what State Secretary Lahnstein said about all this in an interview granted to Deutschlandfunk this morning -- grossly exaggerated and parts are completely wrong.

This morning I talked with Mrs Schmidt, and she told me that she was very much amazed by what she had read in some newspapers today.

HANDELSBLATT Commentary

DW151309 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 15 Oct 81 p 2

[Hans Juergen Sottorf commentary: "No Crown Prince"]

[Text] The cardiac illness of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has its inevitable political consequences. Even if the chancellor is able to resume his duties next week, as optimistic forecasts say, questions will remain regarding his personal future. They are -- and how else can it be if a chancellor is sick -- simultaneously questions regarding the fate of the government.

These natural connections are particularly evident due to the Bonn situation which is not quite characterized by stability. The Free Democrats have always stressed that their preparedness to form a coalition with the SPD isn't based on Helmut Schmidt's being in charge of the government. Even if the chancellor is in a position to resume his work in Bonn soon, the 62-year-old Schmidt must ask himself whether the warning signals given by his body should not make him seriously consider giving up the strenuous government office by the end of the legislative period.

During his usual 16-hour workday of recent years, the federal chancellor ignored doctor repeated warnings and the fact that he has repeatedly received treatment in the Koblenz Bundeswehr hospital.

The burden of frequent international meetings is great for leading politicians everywhere. But strangely enough one gets the impression that the hearts of those in Bonn suffer more from it than anywhere else, which may have something to do with the Rhine valley climate which is bad for the circulation -- and not just with the political climate which is also usually sultry. Foreign Minister Genscher, Minister of Economics Lambsdorff, Finance Minister Matthoefer and SPD Chairman Brandt have experienced this prior to Schmidt.

Nobody, not even a physician, can say exactly whether Helmut Schmidt's heart condition and subsequent operation were caused by increasingly frequent coalition friction and growing resistance against his policy in his own party. It would not be surprising, however.

Conditions in the Federal Government and in the chancellors' party are not such that Schmidt's heart condition could remain free of speculation: the Free Democrats are treading water, waiting for the outcome of the SPD quarrels in connection with security, energy and social policies.

SPD personnel policy clarification is still pending. No "crown prince" is in sight who could guarantee the continuity of Schmidt's policy. Hans Apel and Hans Jochen Vogel have maneuvered themselves out of the running for the time being, and Hans Matthoefer has already said no because of his heart problem. Willy Brandt is not saying what he thinks on this matter. It is clear, however, that the leftists of the party and Erhard Eppler, their symbol, are striving for a majority, even if it means a break in the coalition.

Helmut Schmidts' arrhythmia can be eliminated by the pacemaker, but the unrest in the coalition and in the party will die down now even more slowly than it would have before.

SCHMIDT MESSAGE STRESSES NATO ACHIEVEMENTS

LD151412 Hamburg DPA in German 1249 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Munich, 15 Oct (DPA) -- Minister of State in the Foreign Ministry Peter Corterier read a short message from Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to the plenum of the North Atlantic Assembly in Munich today, in which Schmidt stressed NATO's achievement for peace among states that had waged war with one another in the first half of the century. He described constant complaints about the alliance not being fully capable of action as proof of the vitality of the alliance.

Corterier described the NATO dual decision as a "test of the solidarity and capacity for action of the alliance partners" and a model for future arms decisions. He also asked the other NATO states to realize that "the Federal Republic of Germany cannot afford and does not want to be the prime target of Soviet political polemic and pressure." He said that "disappointed love" could also be at the back of anti-American attitudes which are not shared by the majority of the population.

Corterier said that the talks on medium-range weapons between Moscow and Washington, which are to begin on 30 November, should be followed by talks on the limitation of strategic weapons and negotiations on confidence-building measures for the whole of Europe within the framework of a European disarmament conference. Corterier indicated that in view of the falling birthrate perhaps the period of compulsory military service might again be lengthened.

PRESS VIEWS ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY MEETING

DW161205 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 16 Oct 81

[From the press review]

[Text] NORDWEST-ZEITUNG of Oldenburg writes: The Munich meeting of 172 parliamentarians from 14 NATO countries shows that next to the outward threat uniting all NATO countries, there is also internal insecurity characterized by the key word peace movement. The NATO parliamentarians have considerable difficulties in correctly assessing this movement which is not at all limited to the Federal Republic.

GENERAL-ANZEIGER of Bonn notes: Some of the parliamentarians in Munich find it hard to realize it. The peace movement, which is not at all just a German phenomenon, is too often being considered erroneously as some sort of Moscow fifth column. NATO cannot view it that simply. It must do much more work to convince people, it must represent itself as an indispensable supranational instrument for safeguarding peace, world peace, as well as social progress in the sense of Western democratic basic values.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG states: The Federal Government is in a ticklish situation. It faces the difficult task of dispelling the concern of its allies without playing down the significance of the peace movement. The government took a promising step yesterday. The greeting message of the ailing chancellor contained support of NATO and of the dual decision which would hardly be formulated more clearly. State Minister Corterier made it clear that the 250,000 people holding the peaceful demonstration this weekend as well as those who demonstrated their anti-American attitude with acts of violence, are just a small minority in our state. Corterier pointed out that rejection of the dual decision was mainly caused by the fact that NATO's deterrence strategy was not understood. That was an appeal to do some work to convince people, but it was simultaneously also criticism. And rightly so: enlightenment of the public regarding NATO's concept to safeguard peace has been more than poor so far.

AACHENER VOLKSZEITUNG maintains: Pacifism and neutralism are no security policy, particularly in our situation. NATO is still the most successful peace movement of our time and the best guarantee for peace in freedom. These basic ideas are being again announced at the international NATO meeting, equally supported by the Federal Government and the opposition as well as by the absent ailing federal chancellor. That was good and necessary because political sensibility and experience were about to disappear in the great and colorful Bonn peace demonstration which was also one-sidely aimed against NATO.

ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG of Mainz points out: Without the counterarmament threat, Moscow would have little reason to remove its medium-range missile system threatening Europe. CSU politician Franz Josef Strauss, an expert as a former defense minister, explained the meaning of the dual decision that was so fiercely attacked last Saturday by the peace demonstrators: The one who decreases the risk for a possible attacker, increases the danger of war.

GENSCHER TALKS WITH OAU SECRETARY GENERAL

[Text] Bonn, 15 Oct (DPA) -- In the course of an extensive exchange of views, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher today encouraged Edem Kodjo, secretary general of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to step up efforts to overcome Africa's problems. He also stressed the Federal Government's appreciation of the role played by the OAU.

The meeting was mainly concerned with the Namibian problem. Secretary General Kodjo expressed the "satisfaction and gratitude of the OAU for the commitment with which the Federal Government was pursued the search for a solution to the Namibia question since the start of the initiative of the five," A Bonn foreign ministry spokesman said afterwards.

Genscher emphasized that an independent Namibia could count on German economic aid.

Both sides agreed that the forthcoming North-South summit at Cancun would not make concrete decisions but would be confined to an informal exchange of views. Nonetheless, the spokesman said, it is necessary that the Cancun conference gives the green light to comprehensive negotiations.

SCHMIDT CABLES CONGRATULATIONS TO MUBARAK

NC152045 Cairo MENA in English 1950 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 15 Oct (MENA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt sent a cable of congratulations today to Egyptian President Husni Mubarak on his election.

Schmidt said that his talks with President Mubarak on Saturday were fruitful and expressed hope that the two countries would continue to promote their cooperation and friendship. He wished President Mubarak success in continuing the efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East and build up Egyptian economy, adding you can depend on the full support of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Schmidt sent the cable from the armed forces hospital in Koblenz where he had successful medical treatment on Tuesday.

DIE ZEIT CRITICIZES U.S. MIDEAST POLICY

DW151237 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 16 Oct 81 p 1

[Dietrich Strothmann commentary: "Peace on Ice"]

[Text] It is legitimate to ask the following question: Would the situation in the Middle East be any better and less serious now if Anwar as-Sadat were still alive? Was it only his death which brought the peace process to a standstill? The answer: Long ago the Israelis made their evacuation of the last and strategically most important and most densely Israeli-populated segment of Sinai dependent on Egyptian concessions in the irksome and drawn out autonomy talks by following the stubborn motto "piece for peace." The date for the complete pullout, 28 April 1982, was also intended to become a testing date for the durability of the Camp David agreement. In this respect nothing has basically changed since last Tuesday, the day of the assassination in Cairo -- Begin only insists even more stubbornly on his old preconditions.

Another area of conflict: Reagan's nervous search for an anti-Soviet "strategic consensus" between Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia for the protection of the Gulf region which is linked with the AWACS deal between Washington and Riyadh. However, the Saudis are not particularly enthusiastic about this flirtation by the Americans because they consider a solution to the Palestinian problem more urgent than the defense against alleged Soviet lust for expansion. After As-Sadat's murder the Israelis will also not be dissuaded from their belief that their security is directly threatened by the delivery of U.S. AWACS planes to Saudi Arabia -- and even more so in the event As-Sadat's successor Husni Mubarak makes peace with the desert monarchy.

The third case of conflict: Even As-Sadat would have fallen victim to Begin's adamant attitude if he had demanded the full autonomy for the Palestinians and the cutback of Israel's settlement program or even the dissolution of some strategic hamlets along the Jordan River. As matters stood -- and as they stand for Jerusalem especially after the latest events -- no autonomy agreement would have materialized by April, quite apart from the fact that the people affected by that agreement, the Palestinians, would not have accepted it.

Thus it seems that nothing has suddenly become more difficult or even more insoluble after the death of As-Sadat, the bridge builder who has already become legendary. The old impediments and the well-known difficulties in the way of a solution have at best become more plain and visible to everybody: Will this tender peace between Israel and Egypt survive all the dangers in the boiling Middle East kettle? After the single spark of hope which As-Sadat represented was so suddenly extinguished, all that is left is fear -- the worst adviser politics can have.

Fear is also dictating Washington's Middle East policy: Watch out, the Russians are coming! Caution, Libya's rabid Al-Qadhdhafi is reaching for Sudan! Keep your eyes open, the Saudis are wavering dangerously! As a result Secretary of State Haig preaches that the Americans must show the flag: thus President Reagan declared the AWACS deal to be the test case for his political prestige. The military people are calling the shots in Washington, and it is military factors that determine U.S. Middle East policy; bases in Israel and Egypt; joint military exercises to provide a demonstration for religious fundamentalists and Soviet conspirators; arms post-haste to the next candidate for assassination in Cairo, Khartoum and Riyadh.

But where is Reagan's political Middle East strategy and where is his concept for continuing -- or perhaps replacing -- the Camp David process? What are his ideas about autonomy and his concept of transposing the Israeli-Palestinian cease-fire in Lebanon to the entire area of conflict and making the respectable peace plan of Saudi Crown Prince Fahd palatable to the Israelis by adding some of his own ingredients? After 9 months in office (during which U.S. domestic policies held priority) his answer continues to be arms, arms and more arms.

This is no answer for the Middle East -- not for revolutionary Arabs or for those seeking a harmonization of interests, or for Israelis a la Begin, who insist on absolute security. Ronald Reagan will not get peace off the ice that way.

If the present troubles in the Middle East are to be prevented from turning the region into one full of conflicts, Washington must come up with a convincing and balanced concept for a "comprehensive and just peace" such as was pursued as an obligatory goal in Camp David. In this concept military aspects should have a proper, but not exclusive, role. The old rule of thumb applied by Middle East experts would otherwise retain its paralyzing validity, namely, that the only sure thing in that region is insecurity.

CARSTENS TO MAKE STATE VISIT TO ROMANIA 26-30 OCT

LD151144 Hamburg DPA in German 1030 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn -- Federal President Karl Carstens and his wife Veronica will pay the postponed state visit to Romania on 26 to 30 October. The visit had originally been planned for the end of March. The federal president's office announced today that they had been invited by the Romanian party and state head, Nicolae Ceausescu, and his wife Elena.

The official reason given at the time for the postponement was that Carstens had "feverish influenza." It became known, however, that differences had arisen between the two sides regarding the program for the visit. The Romanian side had resisted Carsten's wish to visit Siebenbuergen and the Banat, where many Germans still live. It has now been said that Carstens will visit one of these two regions at the end of October.

MITTERRAND MEETS WITH JAPANESE DELEGATION HEAD

OW150405 Tokyo KYODO in English 0230 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Oct (KYODO) -- French President Francois Mitterrand told Yoshihiro Inayama, leader of a Japanese Government economic mission now visiting France, that he would visit Japan at a convenient time next year to promote further friendly ties between the two countries.

The president stressed in talks with Inayama, an adviser to the Nippon Steel corp, the need for further improvement in the relations between the two nations on a long term basis.

The meeting with Inayama, also president of the Federation of Economic Organizations (Keidanren), was originally not scheduled but was set up Wednesday without advance notice, apparently showing the president's strong interest in Franco-Japanese relations.

The talks took place at the presidential palace here.

In explaining the new French policy of nationalizing big business enterprises, Mitterrand said the French policy is far different from the idea of making private enterprises into so-called state-run businesses because it still retains the principle of capitalism basically.

He denied any possibilities of interference by government agencies in the business activities of major private enterprises which are nationalized.

Mitterrand made the comment in reply to Inayama's questions on the nationalization policy, to which Japanese business circles have shown little understanding.

Inayama told newsmen later here that he had an impression that the French economic policy would not drastically change despite the nationalization policy.

Some quarters in Japanese business circles have been worried about the French nationalization policy because they thought it may pose a risk toward industrial cooperation between Japan and France under the Socialist government.

On his separate talks with French Industry Minister Pierre Dreyfus, Inayama said he formed an impression that the French Government might resort to tough actions, such as import curbs, against Japan, should the bilateral trade imbalance keep on widening.

According to Inayama, Dreyfus noted that the French Government is now preoccupied with unemployment problems and warned that if Japanese exports continue expanding at the present pace, the consequences would be serious indeed.

Meanwhile, Inayama agreed with Francois Ceyrac, president of Counseil National du Patronat Francais, France's influential managers' organization, to establish a non-governmental industrial cooperation committee with Keidanren to discuss bilateral trade and economic matters.

Inayama said the committee will study ways to promote direct mutual investment and technology transfers between the French and Japanese industries.

It will also deal with French criticisms that the Japanese market is closed and hard to penetrate.

FRENCH, CUBAN COOPERATION TALKS END IN PARIS

FL151141 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Cuba and France have just satisfactorily concluded negotiations toward increased economic cooperation between the two, it has been reported in Paris at the end of the sixth meeting of an intergovernmental committee chaired by Ministers Michel Jobert and Hector Rodriguez Llompart. Jobert, the French minister of state for foreign trade, said that his government attaches great importance to relations with Cuba and reaffirmed that France will not join in economic actions against our country.

The final communique said that the meeting took place in a cordial and friendly atmosphere and that the two delegations congratulated themselves on the development and prospects for mutual cooperation.

CHEYSSON EXPLAINS COMMENTS ON AS-SADAT DEATH

PM151619 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 14 Oct 81 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Cheysson Revises Remarks on As-Sadat"]

[Excerpt] Claude Cheysson is adjusting his fire. On Tuesday he revised the remarks he had made 48 hours previously to the Press Club on the [Egyptian] president's death -- remarks which had sparked many outraged reactions.

"Looking at it optimistically," the external relations minister said, "It could be said that As-Sadat's death, which is horrible in itself, with all the consequences it might have in Egypt, removes an obstacle to this rapproachment within the Arab nation."

Tuesday he changed his tone. Following a meeting of the [European] 10 in London, Mr Cheysson, questioned on his controversial statements, specified that, personally he regards President as-Sadat's death as a real tragedy because he was a man who restored Egypt's pride.

And the minister added: "Indeed it would be a posthumous victory for President as-Sadat if the peace process, of which Camp David was an important step, could be continued with the participation of all the Arabs. Moreover that is what President as-Sadat wanted."

"In this context, and since it is obvious that peace must be brought about with all the Arabs, President as-Sadat's death...removes the pretext which many Arabs used as an obstacle to the normalization of their relations with Egypt."

LE MONDE VIEWS MIDEAST PROSPECTS AFTER AS-SADAT

[Editorial: "Carrying on Camp David"]

[Text] Despite all the assurances of continuity given by his successors and allies, a statesman whose policy has left its mark on his day does not die without a vast redistribution of cards in the domestic and international hands. In Egypt itself it is still too soon to know whether President Mubarak will substantially change the regime which he has been called on to lead in tragic circumstances. Developments are already emerging in the Near East game.

For instance, the recognition of Israel, which the president implemented so boldly and courageously, arousing implacable hatred, is gradually being envisaged, in a veiled and allusive manner of course, by some of the Jewish state's more determined adversaries. In Tokyo PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat apparently used the word "coexistence" with reference to that state in circumstances which are, moreover, rather confused. Since his aides are talking of an "inaccurate translation" while taking care not to officially deny the use of this word which has been taboo for so long. In any case this attitude is not that of a man who has been led into complete intransigence by the assassination of President as-Sadat, which was welcomed with indecent joy. While frequently giving the impression since 1973 -- when he came round to the idea of exercising national authority over any small part of Palestinian territory -- that he was back-pedaling under pressure from extremists, the PLO leader has patiently made his position evolve toward recognition of realities, which is the only thing that can bring him to a negotiating table one day.

On the other hand the idea that a settlement without the Palestinian organization is conceivable is, in its extreme form, now held virtually nowhere but Jerusalem. In the plane bringing them back from Cairo former Presidents Ford and Carter, taking advantage of the fact that lack of government responsibilities gives them greater freedom of speech, called for political talks to be opened with the PLO. The Palestinians immediately welcomed this suggestion. It remains to be seen whether it was put forward with Mr Reagan's agreement.

For its part Europe, which is also exploring paths to peace, has just broken its silence and on Tuesday the EEC Council decided to send its chairman, Lord Carrington, to Saudi Arabia at the beginning of November. The ten, who noted a "remarkable similarity of analysis," to quote Mr Cheysson, seem to think, as Mr Mitterrand does, that the "Fahd plan" should be encouraged because it contains some of the main elements of a settlement including implicit recognition of Israel's existence and rights.

Indeed in very different styles, ranging from the brutal frankness used by the French external relations minister to the greatest diplomatic circumspection, everybody thinks that it is an ill wind which blows nobody any good.

The death of the man cruelly described by the Beirut Daily L'ORIENT-LE JOUR as a "peace kamikaze," gives the EEC and Washington the opportunity to seek, very probably in a concerted way, an alternative solution to the Camp David process which is on its last legs. In the eyes of the Western countries, this solution depends on a reconciliation between Cairo and Riyadh and support for many of the Saudi suggesions.

GOVERNMENT WINS SECOND VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

[Text] Rome, 15 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Government received its second vote of confidence in 48 hours today. The Chamber of Deputies voted 344 votes in favor and 46 against with 180 abstentions on the confidence call which came to overcome Radical Party filibustering against legislation for the public financing of political parties.

Today's confidence vote covered that part of the legislation which calls for budget transparency, so that taxpayers can see how the parties are using these funds. The Radical Party, which said that the bill runs counter to the government's anti-inflation efforts, said that it may renounce its quota of public monies.

Late Tuesday the government won another confidence vote in the house with a considerable majority (351 "ayes," 48 "nays" and 170 abstentions). The vote pushed through the first half of the political party financing bill that will index the funds to the cost of living. The money is distributed proportionally according to parliamentary representation.

COMMUNIST PARTY MP ELECTED NEW MAYOR OF ROME

[Excerpt] Rome, 16 Oct (ANSA) -- The Rome City Council has elected a new mayor for the Italian capital, Communist Party MP Ugo Vetere. Vetere, who was elected late Thursday evening with the votes of the Italian Communist, Socialist, and far-left Democratic Unity Party, the city council ruling coalition partners, was born in Reggio Calabria on the heel of Italy's boot in 1924 and has been a member of the Communist Party since 1946.

Vetere replaces Luigi Petroselli who died suddenly of a heart attack on October 6 while attending a meeting of his party's central committee. Petroselli, 49 years old, had been elected mayor for the second time barely one month ago.

Foreign Policy Document Criticized

PM160703 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 8 Oct 81 p 19

[Report on Renzo Imbeni 7 October speech at PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome]

[Text] I approve Ledda's report, Renzo Imbeni said, but I have some reservations regarding the document submitted for the Central Committee's examination.

First I believe it is essential to establish a link between the subjects of peace, disarmament and development and the debate preparatory to the party's regional congresses, partly because, despite the fact that the formulation of our foreign policy line has been progressively clarified and enriched, there are still differing opinions in the party concerning very important issues, such as the USSR's responsibilities in the crisis of the detente process, the stance with regard to NATO (the arms race facilitates the demand for unilateral exits from the politico-military pacts) and on which forces in Europe are well-disposed toward an autonomous peace policy.

Moreover, we must not underestimate the inadequate awareness of the increased danger of a nuclear war. The idea that it is others who decide the fate of peace and war and that we basically can do nothing about it is more widespread than is sometimes supposed. Therefore we cannot take all the fundamental elements of our policy for granted. It is precisely on the basis of this consideration that the document submitted for examination by the Central Committee lends itself to certain objections.

The document displays an insufficient balance of analysis as regards North-South relations, the developed and underdeveloped areas and East-West relations. It would of course be strange if this latter aspect of the world situation were to be glossed over, when it is precisely here that that a number of dangerous tensions have accumulated, which affect the Third World too, with an arms race that is at the root of the broad pacifist movement to which great vigor and incisiveness must be imparted.

Moreover, the document leaves unresolved several problems concerning Europe's role, and contains an apparent lack of harmonization with the innovations that have emerged on our continent in the positions of the political forces, especially the Socialist and Social Democratic parties (the positions that emerged at the British Labor Party conference and the Swedish Social Democratic Party congress are particularly interesting, and the PSI's recent pointers facilitate common ground for research in Italy and Europe) and in broad sectors of the public. But above all the document still falls short in proposals. It is useful with a view to improving knowledge of the international situation and the major world problems, but it is inadequate as a platform for debate within the party or for a dialogue with other political forces and therefore as an instrument of political initiative.

COLOMBO QUESTIONED ON MIDEAST SITUATION

[Text] Milan, 15 Oct (ANSA) -- Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo touched on Egypt, the Camp David accords, the Saudi peace initiative for the Middle East, Libya and a possible Italian contingent in the Sinai, in an interview published today by the Milan daily IL GIORNALE. Colombo has just returned to Rome from London where yesterday he took part in a European Economic Community foreign ministers meeting.

With regard to Egypt, Colombo said that the "ten" must commit themselves to guaranteeing the internal stability of that nation, offering to the new head-of-state Husni Mubarak close cooperation, even on the economic plane, he added. The chief of Italian diplomacy said that the Rome government will push for the full implementation of the Camp David accords, including the part pertaining to Transjordan, Gaza and the occupied territories. "Italy, like its partners, and as we maintained at the Venice summit, is convinced that Mideast peace cannot be achieved if all of the problems, including the central, Palestinian issue, are not solved," Colombo said.

Colombo's judgement of Saudi Prince Fahd's Mideast peace plan was substantially positive, even though, he said, it contained proposals not entirely acceptable to all sides in conflict.

"Fahd affirms the principle of Israel's existence and this is a realistic act that others could and should follow," he went on. Colombo emphasized the need for Israel and the Palestinians to mutually recognize each other to pave the way to peace.

Turning to the reaction of Tripoli leaders to the news of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat's assassination, Colombo said that Italy did not go along with certain stances taken by Libya on problems in the Mediterranean and in African, and that Tripoli's manner of handling relations with Egypt certainly did not contribute towards peace. As to bilateral relations, the foreign minister said that Italy was firm in the safeguarding of its interests, including the welfare of Italian workers in Libya.

With regard to the possibility of sending an Italian military contingent into the Sinai, a move repeatedly requested by both Egypt and Israel, Colombo said that no decision has yet been made on the matter which is still under study. He specified that the Italian response must take three elements into account: The way in which the Camp David peace process is progressing, the stance of other Arab nations with regard to an Italian presence in the Sinai, and the point of view of the EEC in its entirety and not that of the individual member states who may or may not have been invited (or who are not in a position) to join the Sinai peacekeeping force. "We will reply when we have carefully probed these three aspects of the problem," Colombo concluded.

MOZAMBIQUE'S MACHEL CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

Report on Communique

AU152037 Rome ANSA in English 1953 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 15 Oct (ANSA) -- Mozambique President Samora Moises Machel, at the end of his state visit to Rome today, received assurances from Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini on Italy's desire to continue supporting all initiatives aimed at a peaceful settlement for the situation in the Horn of Africa.

A communique from the premier's office reported that Spadolini voiced Italy's concern for future developments in this strategic area, especially following the cooperation treaty announced by Libya and Ethiopia and the break in relations between Libya and Somalia. Machel has often played a key role within the Organization of African Unity in the search for a peaceful solution to the longstanding tensions between Ethiopia and Somalia, the historic enemies in the Horn of Africa.

On the Italian side, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo has held consultations this year with Ethiopian authorities and Somali leaders during visits to Addis Ababa and Mogadisho.

Spadolini, in his talk with the Mozambique head of state today, also referred to difficulties which might be on the horizon in the Mediterreanean following the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat. The two men also discussed economic issues and the trend of relations between the industrialized nations and developing countries. Spadolini reiterated Italy's position in favor of harmonious Third World development and the emergence of a new world economic order.

Talks With Pertini

AU150845 Rome ANSA in English 0834 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 15 Oct (ANSA) -- World peace is in danger and in southern Africa the focus of the present peace crisis is the country of Namibia, according to Italian President Sandro Pertini and Mozambique President Samora Machel, who found agreement on this pessimistic outlook during cordial talks here on Wednesday.

The African leader, who began a three day state visit to Italy yesterday, defined Pertini and himself as "two comrades in arms who have struggled in the same battle to construct a world of peace in which men live free and independent, masters of their own destiny."

In remarks to the press at the conclusion of their talks, it was noted that Machel also warmly thanked Italy, through Pertini, for its political support of the Mozambique liberation struggle. During the Mozambique independence war, Italy extended its hand to the freedom fighters by, among other things, making the hospitals of the northern city of Reggio Emilia available for treatment of the wounded.

Italy has shown that a Western country is capable of supporting a people's liberation cause, Machel noted, adding that his country still counts on further aid from countries like Italy in order to ensure their ability to maintain a "non-aligned" position.

In response, Pertini confirmed that Italy is faithful to the politics of Africa for the Africans. "In every useful quarter, and within the area of its competence," Pertini said, "Italy will work for the positive outcome of negotiations for Namibian independence which seems finally to be proceeding after a long stall due to South African obstacles."

Further Talks

[Excerpt] Rome, 15 Oct (ANSA) -- Conditions in Africa which all point to South Africa as the "major sources of tension" in the southern area of the continent were outlined today by Mozambique President Samora Machel to Italian head of state Sandro Pertini during their second consultation since Machel's arrival here yesterday on a three-day state visit.

Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and the head of Mozambique diplomacy, Joaquim Chissano, also took part in today's talk between the two heads of state. Colombo, for his part, reiterated Italy's condemnation of apartheid practiced in South Africa and the Pretoria government violation of the territorial integrity of other states, as occured in August with the South African invasion of neighboring Angola.

Machel invited Pertini to come to Mozambique on state visit, a gesture seen as a seal to the excellent understanding reached by the two men during their talks in Rome. The Mozambique president went on to warmly thank Pertini for the welcome accorded him and the frankness of their discussions. "I have rarely been able, even with other African heads of state, to deal with the problems before us in such a direct manner," Machel declared.

Pertini and Colombo, in response, agreed on the need for Mozambique to "effectively maintain its nonaligned status for safeguarding international balance and peace."

The two foreign ministers today signed an agreement hiking economic cooperation between Italy and Mozambique. The accord, an extention of one signed by the two countries after Mozambique independence in 1977, covers the priority sectors in bilateral cooperation of energy, livestock raising, natural resources, and the battle against hunger. On the basis of the agreement, Italy is expected to take part in the production of natural gas discovered in Mozambique, the construction of a high tension electric line in the Limpopo region, the planning and building of a colossal irrigation project to bring water to some 30,000 hectares now uncultivated. The irrigation project could be handled jointly with Sweden.

The Mozambique president will wind up the official portion of his visit to Italy today and remain in the country until Monday for visits to a number of cities and talks with business and industry repr sentatives. On Monday he will depart from Milan for Czechoslovakia.

In remarks to the press yesterday at the end of Pertini's talk with Machel, it was noted that Machel also warmly thanked Italy, through Pertini, for its political support of the Mozambique liberation struggle.

SPADOLINI REPLIES TO FRASER ON CANCUN MEETING

AU141949 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 14 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 14 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Government position on relations between industrialized nations and developing countries was reiterated in a letter sent by Premier Giovanni Spadolini to Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser, on the eve of the North-South heads of state and government conference next week in Cancun, Mexico. The Italian premier's letter was sent today in answer to a personal message from Fraser who, on behalf of the prime ministers of the 41 Commonwealth nations, reported the outcome of the Commonwealth conference held in Canberra September 30 to October 7.

After expressing his "sincere appreciation" for the objectives and the general orientation of the Commonwealth nations, [Spadolini] voiced hopes for "more timely efforts" extending down to the regional level to give fresh impetus to the entire North-South issue. The Italian head of government especially urged more substantial progress in such priority sectors as farming and food supply, energy, and financing for the balance of payments deficits of the least developed nations.

PCI'S FIBBI OPPOSES EQUATING U.S., USSR ACTS

PM160829 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 Oct 81 p 9

[Report on Lina Fibbi speech at 5-6 October PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome]

[Excerpt] I would like to make two observations about Ledda's report, many parts of which I approve, however, Comrade Lina Fibbi said. I am referring in particular to the equidistant stance which we denied was ours and which emerges especially in the first part of the report, in which an attempt is made to place the responsibilities of the Soviet Union and the United States on the same level. I believe the USSR has specific responsibilities in the exacerbation of the situation in recent years (the intervention in Afghanistan, for instance). But, having said that, it must be added and explained that they are responsibilities of a different kind. Ledda himself emphasized the importance of the Nonaligned Movement, and it is also true that the USSR has not always realized the value of that role. However, this role is possible not only because the USSR has supplied aid to liberation movements but also because those countries are able to perfrom their own autonomous role.

Furthermore, I consider the answer that Ledda gives to the question of the two imperialisms incomplete. At a previous Central Committee meeting an authoritative answer to the question was issued when Berlinguer said we do not consider the USSR an imperialist country even though we criticize its power politics. In any case, even the Chinese have abandoned the definition of the "two imperialisms" and refer to the USSR in terms of "hegemonism," which is a very different concept. This does not mean attenuating our criticism of the Soviets' responsibilities -- on the contrary, precisely because we consider it a socialist country our polemics with regard to its power politics are all the more serious.

Moreover no indication was made of the different attitude to negotiations on the part of the United States and the USSR. Indeed, whereas the latter committed itself to opening negotiations by sending a message to the major demonstration constituted by the peace march, among other things, Reagan has continued and continues to talk in terms of rearmament, of new nuclear devices that must be built.

REPORT TO PCI SESSION ON USSR, U.S. POLICIES

PM151403 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 6 Oct 81 p 7

[Report on PCI Foreign Policy Studies Center Director Romano Ledda 5 October report to PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission meeting in Rome: "PCI Proposals for World Peace and Development"]

[Excerpts] By submitting for the Central Committee's debate and approval a comprehensive proposal for a start to resolving the tragic problem of underdevelopment, Comrade Ledda said at the beginning of his report, we are indicating one of the decisive problems in the international crisis, on the solution of which many of the prospects for world economic development and peace depend.

Indeed it is our belief that the North-South problem has assumed a central importance in the economic and political problems that are disrupting the international order. It is enough to consider the Middle East crisis and its link with the energy issue to realize the vastness of the problems connected with the just demands for a new international economic order.

Does part of the responsibility for the present international crisis lie with the USSR? This question is being discussed a great deal, including within the party. The answer is in the positive and deserves some consideration, partly because a worldwide public debate is underway on this assessment, even in socialist countries such as China, involving verdicts with which we do not agree.

It is necessary to set aside propaganda that is becoming obssessive. A major campaign is in progress designed to demonstrate that the Soviet Union has overtaken the United States as a military power, thus disrupting the world balance -- not to mention the European one, which I will discuss later -- in its own favor and thus becoming a threat to the world. Well, world strategic balances are quite stable and will probably remain so for a long time. The new factor that has emerged over the past decade is in fact that the USSR has reached military parity with the United States with regard to its overall capacity for intervention in all areas of the world. It is this that the United States refuses to accept, namely "preventing the USSR from being a superpower and trying to make the USSR accept something that we certainly would not like to be: the second-ranked side." This was stated by Cyrus Vance when he resigned as secretary of state in the Carter administration because of disagreements, some of which concerned this point of analysis.

Our Criticism of the USSR

The criticism that we make of the USSR is different and concerns its foreign policy in recent years.

At the end of the Vietnam war the United States experienced a reassessment and a crisis, the emergence of a more cautious and less aggressive attitude of reluctance to undertake direct interventions and the beginning of a reflection on a revision of the U.S. world role. Though in a contradictory, uncertain and confused manner, this was the banner under which the Carter administration emerged, but this subsequently disappeared beneath its vacillations and weaknesses, which failed to withstand open opposition even with the United States.

Well, one is prompted to wonder whether the Soviet Union has understood that aspect of its relations with the United States, and more generally whether it has understood what major scope for political initiative was opened up by the dynamic effects of the U.S. defeat in Vietnam. I have two factors particularly in mind: The importance that nonalignment again assumed and the turning point that occurred in North-South relations, with specific opportunities for starting to build a new world order; moreover, the possibility of imparting a new thrust to a major detente policy that would on one hand surmount the already evident deadlock in the detente process, which has over the years become confined to the military field, and on the other surmount the already clear limitations of a restrictive interpretation of detente itself, as purely a bilateral agreement.

One is also prompted to wonder whether this incomprehension on the USSR's part led to a foreign policy option that placed less and less trust in political initiative -- the latest major initiative to be taken was the 1975 Helsinki conference -- giving priority to the use of force, seeking to gain new positions and to extend spheres of influence; often regarding the military balance of power and military alliances as a substitute for autonomous development and liberation processes. In other words, whether it opted for a line of power politics, of consolidating and extending its own politico-military bloc, as the principle and most reliable tool of international initiative, and thus remaining the prisoner of a logic which culminated in the intervention in Afghanistan, which made a not inconsiderable contribution to the exacerbation of the international situation, to another detente crisis, to serious difficulties for the Nonaligned Movement and to the erosion of relations between the socialist countries and the underdeveloped countries as a whole that were one of the positive characteristics of the post-war period.

Reagan's adventurism

Arguing in historical and political terms, there could have been many reasons for this: Old repercussions of encirclement, the sharpness of the break with China and the fear of a policy aimed at Soviet isolation, the open attempt to exclude the USSR from the Middle East crisis and the erosion of the detente process, which was challenged in the United States from the early seventies. But this must not make us evade issuing a verdict on the USSR's responsibilities in the present crisis. It is with the same objectivity of assessment that we now see in the Reagan administration's aggressive dynamism one of the most worrying and dangerous factors in the international situation. Historical and political reasons can be sought for this too. It is not easy for the United States to accept and understand the revolt by a periphery that no longer wants to be dependent, the loss of world supremacy and the end of a myth of U.S. uniqueness. These are harsh processes that take a long time. The awareness of new relations between the United States and the world will adopt complex forms. Of course it is also necessary to assess how the United States -- but not only the United States -- has perceived and interpreted the Soviet activism of recent years. For one thing there is the fact that Reagan's response to these problems is adventurist and reactionary.

We have already heard certain objections and charges of abandoning the decisions taken regarding Italy's alliances. We confirm clearly that we do not intend to take any unilateral actions with regard to disarmament or our continued membership in the Atlantic pact. We believe that the existing politico-military blocs are still a delicate instrument of stability for both the Eastern and the Western blocs in the present acts that disrupt these balances -- Spain's entry into NATO is one example -- embody more dangers than advantages. We therefore have no neutralist temptations.

But the same time one must consider and debate whether it is right to believe that the blocs must survive forever and that any idea that looks beyond them to a different kind of future must be regarded as a threat; one must consider and debate whether, while remaining within one of the blocs, one should not oppose the bloc logic within one of the blocs, one should not oppose the bloc logic itself, especially if -- as is the case at present -- it is being portrayed again in terms of rigid discipline, the subordination of the minor allies and, both internally and externally, diametric opposition between the blocs.

Indeed, a problem is emerging in both the Western and the Eastern blocs -- in the Western bloc with the complications and disputes in inter-Atlantic relations and in the Eastern bloc with the Polish crisis -- and it is one that cannot be evaded. It concerns the adaptation of the blocs to their diversified internal conditions, the legitimacy of internal disagreement over political and military options -- in other words, what could be called the secularization of the blocs. This applies to both the Warsaw Pact and to NATO. With regard to the latter, I will cite just two examples: In this connection it is not enough to abandon NATO's defensive character. It is necessary also to repel all pressures designed to make the European blocs -- in our case NATO -- extend their initiative beyond the established historical borders. What security would there be for Europe if NATO were to become involved in the Middle East crisis? More generally, what kind of relations would be established between Europe and the southern part of the world? In fact only the recognition of the politico-military blocs as a transient factor in world history and the recognition of their real internal diversification, their geographical delimitation and their defensive character can form the foundation for equal-based relations.

PSI LEADERSHIP DEBATES FOREIGN POLICY QUESTIONS

PM151451 Rome AVANTI in Italian 1 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] East-West relations, ways of achieving guaranteed and monitored nuclear disarmament, Europe's role and Italy's political activity in the Mediterranean were some of the points discussed in the foreign policy debate at the [Socialist] party's Directorate meeting Tuesday evening.

The debate was opened by Party Secretary Bettino Craxi. In the debate on Craxi's introduction, comrades Lombardi, Benzoni and Lagorio spoke and Deputy Secretary Spini closed the discussion.

Lombardi

The party has remained devoid of initiative, uncertain and passive, lagging behind in an international movement which is successfully overcoming attempts, which are even being made in our country, to exploit it. The PSI cannot be limited to or associated with the request for negotiations on arms limitation. It must raise its sights in the knowledge that the so-called arms balance between the two blocs is an unattainable objective, both because of the impossibility of defining what it means -- the definition varying according to the viewpoint -- and because of the irresistible urge to go beyond any balance reached in a constant effort to take a lead which is reflected in a more rapid arms race and not in arms reduction. The Socialists must raise their sights and propose the dissolution of the blocs again in new terms.

Collective action by the European Socialists, which the Italian Socialists could promote, should raise the question of Europe's liberation from the position of being the preferred field for the destructive conflict between the superpowers, and to do so by making the two superpowers equally in an independent Europe incapable of becoming a platform of siege and attack for either.

This action might convincingly have the objective of disengagement from the Western military alliance simultaneously with a similar process in Eastern Europe. Europe's security can be guaranteed not by military measures but essentially by political measures. A withdrawal of Soviet troops from Czechoslovakia and the removal of the Berlin wall, for instance, would be incomparable security measures superior to the deployment of the new missiles. The events in Poland should help us understand that today the section of Europe dominated by the USSR can be won over by such parallel action and could have appropriate political tools to counter and disarm the suspect Soviet protection, if it is clearly demonstrated that the invitation to agreement on nonalignment and disarmament is not being exploited for the purpose of establishing a balance [strumentalizzato a fini equilibranti], and at the same time, if the United States is given an assurance on the genuine nature of a process aimed at making Europe an area of "no danger to America or the USSR."

If all this is to be started and continued coherently, a premise is needed, and this is possibly the most difficult step to take: Europe's determination to dissociate itself from any involvement in U.S. world policy (and obviously USSR world policy) and thus to abandon, as of today, the insistent and rhetorical request for partnership in running NATO, which involves the impossibility of pursuing detente in Europe if detente is not observed at the world level -- a condition which is certainly unrealistic. To this end we must, as of now, exert pressure on the senior ally by reducing NATO's military commitments, given that the conditions in which they were agreed have radically changed and that Europe now, unlike Europe then, would be the most destructive battlefield in a conflict coming from outside the European zone. We should consider, therefore, the consequences of the fact that the territorial delimitation of NATO's commitments, on which Comrade Nenni based acceptance in 1963, no longer has any meaning, and thus the request for a review is entirely legitimate.

Lombardi concluded by explaining the reasons that link such an important political initiative to the real and effective acquisition of a world role for Europe, which is not the role of taking part in the imperial conflict between the two superpowers for domination over Third World development processes but of proposing itself as the Third World's interlocutor, making available its vast cultural, economic and technological heritage, thus helping to damp down the hotbeds of tension which are stirred up and exploited in the Third World by rivalry between the great powers in order to control and dominate its development. If the PSI is to take the initiative in such a policy and win over the other Socialist parties, it must take a leading position on the development policy initiated by Willy Brandt with the ostpolitik and follow it through. That policy was also accused of being utopian, but it was implemented nonetheless.

In the immediate term Lombardi deplored the fact that the hasty decision over Comiso has been taken without reservations, and indeed at the Socialist minister's initiative, thus creating a stumbling block -- mainly psychological -- to the process of initiating real, and not purely diplomatic, negotiations and weakening the position of the other Socialist parties in the allied countries in their efforts not to take premature decisions that are virtually irreversible and in any case too important, precisely as a stimulus to negotiations in which the mutual abandonment of nuclear competition is regarded as a purely hypothetical solution.

Lagorio

Lagorio stressed two points: East-West negotiations and the Libyan problem. With regard to negotiations, he said the European group composed of Italy, Germany and Britain must cooperate closely with the Americans in the dialogue with the Soviet Union to strengthen determination to reach an agreement.

With regard to Libya, Lagorio said it is necessary to reach a political elucidation with Tripoli and to ensure that Libya maintains its international position among the nonaligned countries. To this end diplomatic initiative is useful and so too is the development of all kinds of trade, apart from the weapons trade, because Libya does not need to be strengthened militarily. It is already strong — too strong.

Querci

In his address to the Directorate, Deputy Querci said among other things that "foreign policy guidelines explained by the secretary, which place the PSI on a 'middle path' among the European Socialist and Social Democratic parties, certainly introduce more positive elements than previously presented. They can permit the definition of useful scope for initiatives and dialogue with our country's progressive forces and movements in the field of detente and peace -- on condition, of course, that they are implemented consistently in the party's initiatives. This has not happened hitherto. First and foremost, Querci added, how can one fail to notice a serious contradiction between the secretary's positions and the decision taken by the government to give the go-ahead -- the only one in Europe to do so, apart from Thatcher's -- to the Comisco installations? And does it not all seem even more contradictory since the defense minister is a Socialist? Hence the need, now that U.S.-USSR negotiations are imminent, for our party to promote a vigorous initiative to make the government suspend the decision of installing missile bases in Italy, reserving the right to implement the decision already taken only in the event of the failure of the negotiations or of their acknowledged unfruitfulness.

Spini

Concluding the PSI Directorate session on foreign policy, Deputy Secretary Spini gave a positive assessment of how the development of the debate permitted a drawing together of the party's internal stances and the party secretary's report. Comrade Lombardi, Spini said, has asked the PSI to amplify its overall foreign policy philosophy and has formulated the proposal -- which we should try to take up — of holding a Central Committee meeting on these specific topics.

The PSI, the deputy secretary continued, is confronted with a situation of crisis in the detente policy which is certainly not congenial to it. In fact the PCI indicates certain acts of power politics by the USSR as elements upsetting the international climate, though it attributes the greatest and most grievous blame to Reagan's United States. In this connection one is prompted to observe that if the U.S. voters transferred from Carter to Reagan, this was undoubtedly due at least in part to these disturbances in the international climate. So a strategy must be adopted for dealing with the consequences of international tension and for imparting a new thrust to a policy of peace.

The Socialist International debated this point thoroughly in Paris. Partly to deal actively with the possible negative consequences of this situation on the peoples' liberation process — for instance in Central America (El Salvador) and southern Africa (Namibia) — by reasserting its solidarity with the struggle against neocolonialism and racism. Thus too it condemned the further violation of human rights in Czechoslovakia, where a socialist, Babiek, has been sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment for writing letters to Brandt and Kreisky.

As far as the problem of U.S.-USSR negotiations is concerned, they seem to have reopened at last. Nevertheless, we must beware of underestimating the importance of attempting to influence the expeditious and positive development of these negotiations, possibly on a European level, by means of appropriate initiatives among the governments concerned.

Their outcome, which we believe should lead to the so-called "zero option" (no theater missiles in Europe on either side) is anything but certain. For our part we reassert our rejection of the quest for military superiority on either side and aim to work toward the definition of balances at the lowest level between the superpowers.

Action must be carried out with respect to the Italian Government so that it will take appropriate initiatives and, as far as the party is concerned, relations must be developed with the European Socialist forces, especially the German SPD and President Mitterrand's Socialist Party. Just as we must not watch the negotiations passively, we must succeed in providing a fair and nonunilateral scope for dialogue to the public, which is worried, irrespective of manipulations, about the resumption of the arms race. This is one reason why I decided to express my personal backing for the Perugia-Assisi peace march. In the coming parliamentary debate we should certainly welcome the proposal of not conducting a rigid exchange based on opposing documents, thus worsening the tension that built up during September (sought by others, not us), so as to achieve a closer dialogue on a subject so vital to the country.

FINANCE MINISTER COMMENTS ON WASHINGTON TALKS

PM160717 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Oct 81 p 3

[Excerpts] U.S. financial and monetary policy, which has great impact internationally and also on Portugal, was one of the issues at the Portuguese minister of finance's meeting with the U.S. Treasury under secretary in Washington.

The aspects which could influence the dollar's exchange rate against the European currencies and interest rates were highlighted most by Joao Salguerio and Beryl Sprinkel.

"There was also, obviously, a chance to broach the U.S. policy of aid for Portugal," Joao Salguerio added, "but that was not the intention because we are still reviewing the programs which have been approved in light of the next budget and the next investment program. Only after this is over would we like to exchange views both with international bodies and with the countries assisting us."

Stating that there was no opportunity for very specific negotiations during his 1-week stay in Washington on the occasion of the World Bank and IMF annual meeting, Joao Salgueiro asserted: "We cannot trail behind events. First, we must see what is essentially of interest to us and restore what is of interest to us and not seek to maintain, solely because they came from the past, some programs which are of lower priority for us."

Concerning the receptiveness of Sprinkle, Joao Salgueiro stated: "There seems to be agreement on the idea that upward adjustments in dollar parities will not continue. It is possible that they will remain on a plateau in relation to what it used to be or that there will be a slight fall in the dollar's exchange rates on international markets. As far as we are concerned, that is important to know because this year we had to cope with a rise in the dollar against the escudo of over 25 percent, which represents an intolerable burden for our imports. Thus, the same amount of imports costs another 25 percent yearly. If that continued, we would have a criticial situation. If parities remain unchanged, the situation will be difficult since the imbalance will remain unchanged, but we hope it will not deteriorate further over the next few months."

Concerning the issue of the sums loaned to Portugal by the U.S. Government, which were subsequently canceled after Portugal failed to use them within the envisaged period, the finance minister said that he has no "detailed idea as to why some loans were not fully used."

He concluded: "I believe that there must be several reasons and when there are several projects, there is not always the same reason for all of them. As you know, one of the most difficult factors which the Portuguese economic structure has faced is a certain immobility on the part of the administrative structure, so it is not surprising that this has happened."

COMMUNIST PARTY ORGANIZES MADRID DEMONSTRATION

[D152128 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] An orderly demonstration began in Madrid shortly after 1930. The demonstration was organized by the Spanish Communist Party and is headed by Secretary General of the Communist Party and is headed by Secretary General of the Communist Party Santiago Carrillo and Secretary General of the Workers' Commission Marcelino Camacho. The demonstrators are chanting the slogans: "For Peace and a National Referendum", "End the Nuclear Danger" and "Work Yes -- NATO No". At this point, it is impossible to estimate the number of demonstrators.

EL PAIS CRITICIZES U.S. VIS-A-VIS PACIFISTS

PM150909 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 2 Oct 81 p 8

[Editorial: "Pacifism and White Paper"]

[Text] "Pacifism" is the political doctrine and rule of conduct of those who believe that world conflicts can be resolved without resorting to wars. They attempt arbitration, negotiation, mutual concessions and balance. Under no circumstances do they deserve the indignation of the U.S. defense secretary who is "concerned and angry" about the spread of the pacifist movements in northern Europe -- the FRG, the Netherlands and Belgium -- and their considerable expansion toward other countries. According to him, this is endangering the new military policy. It is clear that if you proceed from an absolute division between bad and good and attribute to the bad all the capacity for evil, the presence of pacifists among the good introduces an element of disturbance.

A policy of rearmament, of revitalizing NATO and of introducing new weapons and launch systems throughout Europe is being implemented by the Reagan administration. Any opposition to the policy appears undesirable on the ground that the fundamental aim is to avert the danger of war. It is combined with an attempt to weaken defense. Therefore, there is only a step from that to describing pacifists as collaborators with the enemy and therefore traitors -- paid traitors.

The path of sophistry is always traveled too readily, especially when it is a matter of achieving a deliberate result and when there are no qualms about disparaging and insulting those who are a nuisance. In Spain, this well-known path is now being traveled in the matter of identifying as "Reds" and, since this is not so terrible, as pro-Soviets, those who do not want to join NATO. All this forms part of the same policy. The Reagan administration has a supreme interest in demonstrating that the only way to curb absolute evil -- the USSR -- is by confronting it with powerful weapons which will deter it.

The Pentagon's white paper is being published at this time with the aim of demonstrating that the Soviet Union has a great superiority in every kind of weaponry over the United States and its Western allies. The figures, tables and details in these 100 pages are illustrated by maps of the world and of certain regions where the magnitude of that Soviet power is shown -- superiority in quantity and quality, not only in matters of conventional warfare -- greater numbers of men under arms -- but also in technology.

Weinberger explains that all this power is a specific threat against the Europeans. NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns -- one of the most determined advocates of Western rearmament -- demands that information campaigns be stepped up to make Europeans "realize the genuine Soviet peril." Mitterrand -- who is more pro-NATO than De Gaulle and his rightwing successors -- explained at his recent press conference that Soviet superiority will prevail until 1985 but that the rearmament effort will secure the balance after that.

Pacifism appears negative in this context. It must be noted that pacifism is not only a private initiative but is based on a 20th century idea which has been developing unceasingly from the first Hague conference to the San Francisco Charter. It is institutionalized in the United Nations and its disarmament committees, in the Security Council, in the SALT and in the CSCE (at present, the adjourned Madrid conference), not to mention the many regional organizations which attempt to contain armed conflicts by means of negotiations and arbitration.

That is, pacifists are not now springing up through spontaneous generation to obstruct the policy of Reagan, Haig and Weinberger but base themselves on doctrines and institutions which are widely reconized in the world -- especially those promulgated and disseminated at the conclusion of World War II. Their new strength at this time stems from a reaction against the dangers of war, which they believe are multiplying. It is an honest doctrine, worthy of full consideration. Their current task is to press European governments by the lawful means of voting in elections to insist on a policy which has already begun: to attempt to bring home to Washington the wisdom of negotiations and the idea that it should exert itself -- as has been written and as forms part of the world's consciousness -- in the search for alternatives to war to resolve world problems.

Hence, they do not deserve the indignation of Weinberger and Haig or Reagan's accusations that they are agents of Moscow, motivated by its pay and propaganda. There is no doubt that the USSR has great interest in those movements' developing because they split the allies. But it is necessary to have lost all capacity for moral conviction to assume that the mere coincidence of a conviction on our part with a strategic advantage for the Soviets should be sufficient for abandoning our own faith in principles. Militarism is an evil for mankind. It is so when the Soviet Union practices it and when the United States preaches it, but it is even graver to watch nations which have been the bastion of moral concepts and concepts of human dignity which are disregarded under the East bloc's totalitarianisms blithely abandon those selfsame concepts. In the last analysis, bombs have no ideology.

PRESIDENT KEKKONEN 'UNLIKELY TO RESUME DUTIES'

LD161050 Helsinki International Service in English 0930 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] President Urho Kekkonen's health has worsened slightly. According to the latest bulletin from the office of the president, released on Thursday, there have been no changes for the better in Dr Kekkonen's state of health over the past few days. The president has suffered from sleeplessness and his appetite has worsened, resulting in a slight weakening in his general condition. The Finnish president has now been on sick leave since 11 September. His leave of absence from the duties of the presidency was recently extended and is now due to last until 10 November. Dr Kekkonen, who is 81, has been suffering from lapses of memory, stemming from irregularities in the blood circulation in the brain.

It is now considered unlikely that he will be able to resume the duties of the presidency. Under the Constitution of Finland, if the president were permanently unable to carry out his duties fresh presidential elections to select members of the Electoral College would have to be arranged.

During Dr Kekkonen's sick leave Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto has been handling the duties of the presidency.

FIRM SUPPLIES FOOD INDUSTRY EQUIPMENT TO USSR

PM151151 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 9 Oct 81 p 16

[Excerpt] Oy Hackmann AB in a short space of time signed contracts with the Soviet Union for deliveries worth more than 80 million markkaa. The latest agreement covers several hundred pieces of equipment in acid-resistant steel for the production and aseptic storage of fruit juices. The value of these deliveries, to take place in 1982-83, totals around 60 million markkaa -- Hackmann's biggest deal ever in the metal sector.

Such equipment has never before been exported to the Soviet Union and the deal is seen as new recognition of Hackmann's expertise in foodstuffs process technology.

"For the last 4-5 years, we have been working systematically on the Soviet market and results now seem to be coming into sight," the company's deputy managing director, Curt Londbom, said.

A few weeks ago, Hackmann sold a complete set of equipment for the expansion of a dairy in Moscow. This order was worth 10 million markkaa.

Hackmann's newest subsidary, Koltek Oy, has a contract for deliveries of stainless steel equipment to the Soviet Union, worth 7 million markkaa. Hackmann already has contracts for food distribution equipment, washing stands and so forth for the Soviet Union, worth 4.5 million markkaa.

FINNISH-SOVIET AGRICULTURAL WORKING GROUP MEETS

PM150907 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 11 Oct 81 p 12

[FINSKA NOTISBYRAN report: "Agricultural Cooperation With the Soviet Union Will Be Expanded"]

[Text] Finnish and Soviet experts are jointly investigating how the production and processing of potatoes, red clover and alfalfa, for example, can be promoted. The research cooperation has been going on for several years and will continue in the next few years. This was agreed when the Finnish-Soviet agricultural working group wound up its meeting in Helsinki on Friday [9 October].

Joint reserach projects are looking into the possibility of large-scale red clover and alfalfa seed production. With a view to improving potato production, comparative tests are being carried out, primarily on Finnish and Estonian potato strains.

The experiments will be expanded next year to include other cultivated plants. To this end, research institutes in the two countries will exchange catalogues of different types of plants.

Around 40 Finnish agricultural experts next year will visit the Soviet Union to acquaint themselves with pea cultivation, crop development, worker protection and sheep farming. Finland will be visited by around 35 Soviet experts who are primarily interested in pig raising and automatic control systems. A Soviet delegation is also expected to take part in a fish breeding seminar in Finland.

This was the Finnish-Soviet agricultural working group's 12th meeting. The delegations held talks and in the last week visited farms, a dairy and an agricultural school.

A cooperation memorandum was signed in Helsinki on Friday. It was signed for the Soviet Union by Estonian First Deputy Agricultural Minister Ilmari Aamisep and for Finland by Agriculture Board General Director Samuli Suomela. The working group will next meet in the Soviet Union in the fall of 1982.

SOVIET DEPUTY HEALTH MINISTER PAYS VISIT

PM151251 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 13 Oct 81 p 7

[Text] A delegation led by Soviet Deputy Health Minister P.I. Gerasimov is paying a week-long visit to Finland. The visit, which ends Saturday [17 October], forms part of the cooperation between Finland and the Soviet Union in the fields of hospital technology and pharmacology.

Thevisit takes place at the invitation of Finnish Medical Board General Director Erkii Kivalo.

On Monday, the two countries' pharmacological cooperation commission met in Helsinki. The delegation also will visit Turku, Tampere and Kuopio. During the visit, a memorandum on economic cooperation between the Soviet Union and the companies Kone Oy and Ajokki Oy also will be signed.

COMMANDER IN CHIEF URGES INCREASED DEFENSE BUDGET

[Text] There must be a tangible increase in the defense budget. Confidence in our defense capability will collapse if its level remains the same as proposed for next year. This statement was made by Armed Forces Commander in Chief Gen Lauri Sutela when he opened the 81st defense training course at the Helsinki Military Academy on Monday [12 October].

"The funds which have been reserved for next year's basic and new acquisitions do not even compare with this year's funds in terms of their purchasing power," Sutela pointed out, speaking at the same time of a zero growth rate in next year's defense budget. The parliamentary defense committee has recommended real-term growth, but in practice we are now going in for a budget which is simply less than that for this year," Sutela stressed.

According to Sutela, this means that we cannot even begin renewing the land forces' equipment as planned if parliament approves the proposed budget. Sutela explained that, it the present level is continued in the future, this means that confidence in defense capability will collapse sooner or later. According to Sutela, this is a sign of a dangerous and irresponsible security policy.

The armed forces commander also directed his audience's attention to the importance of sufficient readiness. The work on a reform of our readiness legislation has come to a halt, he said.

"As for the question of making nonmilitary service possible for conscientious objectors in a way which would benefit Finnish defense as a whole, there is also a useful report in existence. The defense forces also expect that something will soon be done in this area too," Sutela said.

In his speech to the defense training course, Defense Minister Lasse Aikas (Center Party) expressed concern over insufficient protection for the general population. There is still a lot to be done in this connection, he said.

FOREIGN MINISTER DEPARTS FOR GDR 14 OCT

[Text] Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen has just left on an official visit to the GDR. The visit will last 3 days and is taking place at the invitation of GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer. Besides talks with Fischer, Vayrynen's program includes meetings with the GDR head of state and party leader Erich Honecker and Chairman Willi Stoph.

NORWAY

AFTENPOSTEN ON POSSIBLE DEFENSE BUDGET INCREASE

PM151547 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] It has still not been decided whether the incoming Conservative government will propose increases in the defense budget over and above those proposed by the outgoing government. According to reports received by AFTENPOSTEN, the defense budget as presented will now be carefully reviewed to see if the proposed 3-percent increase is a real-term increase. If not, increased spending will be necessary. In the past, the Conservative Party has committed itself to increasing the growth in the defense budget by 4 percent.

In their joint statement reacting to the now outgoing government's long term program, the Conservative, Christian People's and Center Parties committed themselves to a 4-percent defense budget growth. The 3-percent increase proposed by the outgoing government is in line with NATO's target and the commitments which Norway has made within the NATO framework.

According to the comments made in connection with the presentation of the 1982 national budget, the Conservative, Christian People's and Center Parties have given no indication of abandoning the position the three parties agreed on in their joint reaction to the Labor Party's long term program.

The outgoing government has proposed that 10.4 billion kroner be spent on defense next year. If the Storting wants a 4-percent increase, a further 100 million kroner will have to be granted. This sum will have to be taken from other areas of the enormous national budget.

SWEDEN

RADIO REPORTS ARRIVAL OF U.S. DEFENSE SECRETARY

LD152104 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger arrived in Sweden this evening on a 3-day official visit. This is the first official visit to Sweden by a U.S. defense secretary. During the visit, Weinberger will acquaint himself with the Swedish defense establishment, civil defense and weapons industry. Weinberger's reception was not all positive because there were demonstrators at Stockholm airport to meet him. Our Stockholm correspondent Juhani Lompolo reports:

[Begin recording] U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger was received in Stockholm by two sides and in two ways. On the one hand, his Swedish host, Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson, was at Arlanda Airport to receive him with an honor guard. On the other hand, in the center of Stockholm, demonstrators with their posters expressing opposition to the neutron bomb and support for a nuclear free zone, to which the present U.S. leadership is not very favorably disposed, greeted Weinberger. Both sides brought up words uttered by the secretary before his trip, namely, that he does not regard Sweden as a neutral country. This raised the eyebrows of many Swedes who are not used to seeing the basic line of Sweden's foreign policy so blatantly called into question. Many explanations followed this statement. It was described chiefly as a philosphical argument among other things. Weinberger himself tried to patch up what had happened by saying on his arrival that he respected Sweden's neutrality. He will now have an opportunity to find out for himself about the line of Swedish security policy during his visit and to have talks about the problems Sweden has with regard to the U.S. defense industry. As Sweden has sold American computer technology to the USSR for example, American deliveries to Swedish industry have been delayed and stopped. [end recording]

NOTT DEFENDS NATO, TRIDENT AT PARTY CONFERENCE

PM151339 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 15 Oct 81 p 13

[Anthony Looch report: "Overwhelming Support for Nuclear Weapons and NATO"]

[Excerpt] The government rejected the "wishful thinking" of the unilateral disarmers who could not be trusted with the future of the nation's children, Mr Nott, defence secretary, told the [Conservative Party] conference during a debate on defence, at the end of which he was given a standing ovation.

"By denying nuclear weapons on British soil, by giving up all our nuclear forces, or by pulling a division out of the Rhine Army, we would pull the keystone out of the arch of NATO.

"Without the collective defence of NATO, we could become enslaved by the huge might of the Soviet military machine."

The objective of the Conservative Party was to prevent all war. The question was whether this should be done through military strength or weakness; by unilateral gesture or by negotiated contract; through NATO or by denying NATO its central strategy.

The Russian leaders did not give "a damn" about moral gestures by the British, the views of the TUC or Mr Foot's trip to Moscow.

"Unless we are prepared with a clear conscience and without faltering, to stand up against a barbaric system, to stand up against the bullies of this world, these people will be bound eventually to triumph over freedom and democracy, and they will probably do so by blackmail and without even firing a single shot."

Trident was the only suitable system for the modernisation of Polaris. It was also the only weapons system that was invulnerable to a pre-emptive attack because it had the huge area of the oceans in which to hide.

"Trident is the only weapon system open to us which warns a Soviet aggressor that we too, can reach targets in his homeland -- 128 separate targets throughout a large area of the Soviet Union, which could be hit from one Trident submarine.

"That is a potent cause for peace -- not war" (applause).

The Ministry of Defence was also the largest employer in the country, with over half a million people on its pay roll. It would be an industrial catastrophe if the new Labour left ever implemented its policy for dismantling Britains' defences.

The government was expanding the Territorial Army by another sixteen thousand men and increasing local involvement in home defence. It was also looking at ways in which army reservists could be used on a local basis to guard vital military and civilian installations.

Passive resistance as advocated by the unilateralists had not brought freedom for people like the Czechs and Hungarians.

"While we, a Conservative government, protect the nation, Britons never never will be slaves."

PAPER COMMENTS ON UK MEDIA IMPACT IN USSR

PM141347 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 14 Oct 81 p 5

[Nigel Wade dispatch: "Newspaper 'Sold Out' in Moscow"]

[Text] Moscow -- Copies of the British Communist Party newspaper MORNING STAR, which has been carrying advertisements for the BBC's Russian-language radio service, could not be found in Moscow yesterday.

But newspaper-sellers at the city's news kiosks which usually stock foreign communist publications said it was simply sold out. This often happens and does not necessarily mean that the MORNING STAR has slipped from grace in the Soviet Union.

I saw the paper, with a French communist journal, on sale at a kiosk in Murmansk, in the Arctic northwest of Russia, last week.

The Soviet press distribution house, Soyuzpechat, said yesterday that MORNING STAR was still available as usual but always sold out quickly.

Soviet censors are unlikely, however, to view favourably the current BBC advertisements giving times and frequencies of Russian-language broadcasts.

The Soviet press regularly accuses the BBC of being a front for British intelligence services and a mouthpiece for an anti-Soviet propaganda campaign ordered personally by Mrs Thatcher.

Russian-language broadcasts beamed at the Soviet Union by Western radio station have been jammed since the beginning of Poland's political crisis last year.

But the jamming is not completely effective outside the major cities and listeners in scattered towns and rural areas can sometimes still tune into the BBC or Voice of America in Russian.

Many Russians depend on these broadcasts for uncensored information about their own country and developments abroad. The BBC's list of programmes, the frequencies published in MORNING STAR would be of great help to these listeners and would be spread widely by word of mouth.

There are also many English-speaking Russians who like to buy MORNING STAR to read for themselves about events in Britain and abroad. Non-communist Western newspapers are not available to ordinary Russians, so demand for MORNING STAR is all the greater.

PIPELINE DEAL WITH USSR -- The Clydebank engineering firm John Brown today announced the signing of a 104 million pound contract for a Russian pipeline -- a record deal for the company. John Brown Engineering last week won orders to provide 21 turbines for a 3,500 mile natural gas pipeline between Siberia and Western Europe, and today it signed contracts with Machino Import for the supply of additional equipment and spares. The gas will be pumped along a 56-inch diameter pipeline from Urengoy, Siberia, to the Czechoslovak border, where it will join the European gas grid. KIPRIANOU RETURNS FROM VISITS TO UN, AUSTRALIA

[Text] President Kiprianou returned a short while ago from New York, where he had talks with UN Secretary General Waldheim on the Cyprus problem. Earlier, Mr Kiprianou represented Cyprus at the Commonwealth summit conference which was held in Melbourne, Australia. At Larnaca airport, president Kiprianou was met by House of Representatives President Ladhas, who was deputized during Mr Kiprianou's absence, by members of the government, the dean of the diplomatic corps, Soviet Ambassador Astavin, acting High Commissioner for Australia Miss Grimwade, the police and the National Guard chiefs, and by other officials. A National Guard detachment presented arms.

Foreign Minister Rolandhis returned to Cyprus with the president. Mr Rolandhis led the Cyprus delegation to the current UN General Assembly and had contacts on the Cyprus problem.

Statement at Airport

NC151932 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 15 Oct 81

[15 October statement by Cyprus President Spiros Kiprianou at Larnaca airport upon his return from visits to the UN, Australia -- recorded]

[Text] Today I return directly from New York, where I had long talks on the Cyprus problem with the UN secretary general. We had an indepth and extensive discussion on the Cyprus problem and I would say that we exchanged views on all aspects of the problem without exception. I had the opportunity to listen to the UN secretary general's ideas and to express to him in detail our ideas and views. And as I stated earlier, I shall submit the conclusions from these talks, now that I am back in Cyprus, to the Council of Ministers and the members of the National Council in order to exchange views and to define further actions on the question by our side.

At the UN headquarters I had the opportunity to meet with the UN General Assembly president with whom I discussed the question of the General Assembly debate on the Cyprus problem, particularly if developments do not allow the holding of the debate by end of December -- at which time the regular General Assembly session ends -- and whether it would be possible for a debate on Cyprus to be held later. The General Assembly president assured me that this is possible and as far as this would depend on him, he would support it; that is, if no substantive developments and substantive progress take place in the meantime, the Cyprus problem could be debated during a reconvening of the present General Assembly or at a special General Assembly session during the first months of 1982.

I also had talks on this issue with the chairman of the nonaligned contact committee -- the ambassador of Algeria -- who assured me that the nonaligned countries which, as is known, constitute the vast majority of the UN member states, fully support these positions and would support any request or application by us for a debate on the Cyprus problem even beyond the regular UN General Assembly session.

This time my stay in New York was only for a few days, but I had the opportunity to communicate with the Greeks there and to convey the Cypriot people's thanks for their contribution and support in the struggle we are waging for freedom and justice.

As is known, I went to New York from Australia which I visited for the Commonwealth conference of heads of state and government. The conference was very interesting, many interesting questions were debated. Of particular significance to us is the interest in the Cyprus problem this year which was greater than during the two earlier times, and the resolution included in the final communique which is better than the previous one.

In general, apart from the debate which took place and which was very good -- it is possible that the negative attitude of British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher may have contributed to the holding of a good debate -- and apart from the communique which is absolutely satisfactory; during my private contacts with the Commonwealth heads of state I noted that the Cyprus problem is alive, they have not forgotten it. They wait to see what the developments will be, and when we seek their support -- at least that of the vast majority -- we will have it.

During my stay in Australia there were many demonstrations by the Cypriot communities, and by the Greeks in general -- in Melbourne where the Commonwealth conference was held and in Canberra, Sydney and Adelaide. I had the opportunity to note the great interest in and love for Cyprus by the Cypriots and, in general, by the Greeks in Australia. Geographical distance has not separated them from Cyprus. They feel very close to Cyprus; they love Cyprus; they think of Cyprus; their hearts beat for Cyprus; and they struggle for Cyprus. Indeed, the results of their struggle for the Cyprus problem within Australia are very positive.

In general, I can say that this visit to Australia -- my first -- has given me the best impression in every respect.

Melbourne Interview

NC091330 Nicosia ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Melbourne communique on Cyprus, which is the best and most constructive ever issued by a Commonwealth conference, gives the Cypriot Government and the Greek Cypriot side increased support for dealing with future developments in the Cyprus problem. Specifically, it strengthens significantly the position of President Kiprianou in his upcoming meetings with UN Secretary General Waldheim in New York, where Kiprinaou will arrive tomorrow noon (Cyprus time). This emerges from the text of an interview President Kiprianou gave in Melbourne to John Dickey of London's DAILY MAIL. The relevant passage of the interview is as follows:

Question: "Are you departing from the Commonwealth conference with increased support for putting your cause before UN Secretary General Dr Waldheim?"

Answer: "Most certainly. I believe that as far as we are concerned, the Commonwealth's communique on Cyprus this year is the best and most constructive one that a Commonwealth conference has ever issued, even better than the one it issued in Lusaka."

In his interview with John Dickey, President Kiprianou stressed that the mention of unity in the final communique is certainly significant if a solution is to be found for the Cyprus problem. "I attach great significance to the fact that the Commonwealth unanimously endorsed the concept of unity for Cyprus. Of course, there are many other very positive and constructive elements, such as the issue of nonintervention -- in other words, the termination of interventions in Cyprus and the issue of fundamental freedoms."

Then, in reply to a question as to what he means by fundamental freedoms, which the Commonwealth considers so important for a solution, the president of the republic said: "In the case of Cyprus, fundamental freedoms always mean specifically the freedom of movement, the freedom of settlement, and the right of ownership, in addition to human rights. These are very substantive freedoms that must be guaranteed if a federal solution to the Cyprus problem is to be found."

Following is the remainder of the interview:

Question: "The communique also speaks about territorial integrity. Certainly this precludes a partitionist solution. There should be a correct solution guaranteeing Cyprus' territorial integrity.

Answer: "Territorial integrity and all the other points of the communique mean a solution that will guarantee the state's unity. Consequently, if a federal system is to come into existence, it should be one guaranteeing the state's unity and at the same time the fundamental freedoms that I have already explained."

Question: "In a way, the communique expresses some pessimism, given the fact that it mentions that the intercommunal negotiations have not led to a solution. The Commonwealth expresses uneasiness about this, but certainly this is not a negative phenomena. It could give an impetus, provided the other side fulfills certain conditions. What is your opinion? Are these conditions imperative for the achievement of the progress that we hope will be achieved?"

Answer: "Certainly the communique stresses one thing: That so far no progress has been achieved. This is a fact. If any progress is to be achieved toward a solution of the Cyprus problem -- and in this regard we attach great significance to the communique's phraseology, which speaks of implementation of UN resolutions and the summit agreements -- certain things must be accepted by the other side. First of all, the other side must accept a true federation that would guarantee the fundamental freedoms that I have already explained, the state's unity, Cyprus' territorial integrity, etc. It also means that the other side should give up, once and for all, the philosophy of partition -- an absolute prerequisite if there is to be progress toward a solution. Without unity it is impossible to have a solution of the Cyprus problem, not only because this would be unacceptable to us but also because any partition would mean the destruction of Cyprus."

Question: "Mr President, the communique also mentions that you have drawn the attention of the other heads of governments to your proposals for Cyprus' complete demilitarization and disarmament. In your opinion, what would this actually achieve? The withdrawal of all Turkish troops?"

Answer: "Yes. Complete demilitarization and general disarmament in Cyprus are a necessary element in many respects. The Turkish Cypriots put forth the argument that they want some kind of partition for security reasons. Partition is not the answer to the security problem, if such a problem exists, although I do not believe it does. The answer to the security problem lies in cooperation between Greek and Turkish Cypriots, and they cannot cooperate if they are separated."

Question: "Would that mean that there will not be Greek troops?"

Answer: "Certainly. There should not be any troops. My solution to the security problem, if it exists, is Cyprus' complete demilitarization and general disarmament and the presence, on the island, of an international police force under UN auspices for as long as necessary in order to safeguard the security of all Cypriot citizens."

New York News Conference

[14 October press conference given in English by Cyprus President Spiros Kiprianou at UN headquarters in New York -- recorded]

[Text] First of all, I must say it is a great pleasure for me to be in these familiar surroundings of the United Nations and to be in a position today to meet the representatives of the press. I am in New York for just 2 or 3 days this time. The purpose was to have some talks with the secretary general of the United Nations on the Cyprus problem.

I have come from Australia where there was the meeting of Commonwealth heads of state and government and I must say that I am very pleased with the results of the conference, in particular with regard to the Cyprus problem. The Commonwealth conference was very emphatic on certain very vital issues with regard to the Cyprus problem and I believe it has strengthened our position internationally.

In New York we had a full exchange of views with the UN secretary general on Monday and Tuesday with regard to the present position of the Cyprus problem. I explained to him fully our views and we had a very thorough exchange and discussion in depth.

As you know, 7 years have passed since the coup and the invasion of Cyprus and no progress at all has been made towards a solution to the Cyprus problem despite the repeated resolutions of the United Nations, both the General Assembly and the Security Council, and despite the high-level agreements which together with the UN resolutions contain all the necessary elements for a viable solution to the Cyprus problem. We have done whatever we could to achieve progress but no progress has resulted. Many people are wondering why this is so. The stumbling block to progress is the fact that, in my view, the necessary political decision has not been taken in Ankara to abandon the philosophy of division; and there can be no progress towards a solution of the Cyprus problem as long as the philosophy of division is pursued in one way or another, under disguise or not, by the Turkish Government. Our aim is to secure, to ensure a fully independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, united, nonaligned Republic of Cyprus; a completely demilitarized Cyprus; with its unity and the inalienable rights of all its citizens restored.

Cyprus is asking for that which all other independent countries in the world are entitled to enjoy. The people of Cyprus are demanding to be allowed to enjoy exactly the same rights with all the other peoples in the world. There may be questions of the internal structure of Cyprus, but with good will these could be easily resolved if the concept and the philosophy of division were removed and abandoned. Of course, as I said before, if Cyprus is to become a happy island and a place of peace — our ambition is to turn Cyprus from a place of strife into a place of peace -- there has to be a viable solution and to be viable it has to be a just solution.

Cyprus is located in a very sensitive area in the eastern Mediterranean, and a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem, in conformity with the UN resolutions, would not only benefit the people of Cyprus as a whole -- Greek and Turkish Cypriots, Armenians, Maronites and Latins -- but would also be a contribution to the international cause of peace and security in that very sensitive area of the world.

Despite the fact that no progress has been made up to now, we are always ready to do whatever we can to achieve progress. We are in favor of the dialogue, but the dialogue cannot be allowed to be pursued indefinitely, thus allowing the other side to promote the results of the invasion. I must declare quite categorically that we can not under any circumstances legalize the results of the invasion in any way. Thank you very much.

[Question by unidentified correspondent] On behalf of the UN correspondents association whom it is my honor and privilege to represent, I have a question to ask but you have answered most of it. I change my question: Both parties have submitted proposals to each other and some progress has been made, so the reports say. What is the real stumbling block preventing the parties from reaching a conclusion? And the second part of my question is: Would you consider the Turkish side as a legal partner in the future solution of Cyprus?

[Answer] As for the first question or comment, I think it's wrong. There has been no progress, despite the fact that proposals have been put forward from both sides. In fact, the two sides have not come closer together because the recent proposals put forward by the Turkish side were minimal and negligible on the territorial aspect. As for the constitutional proposals, they were a repetition of previous proposals, which exactly present the philosophy I described in my opening statement, namely, the philosophy of division; in fact, of two separate states.

With regard to the second part of your question, I would say that what we are endeavoring to establish a true federal system in Cyprus, a biregional federal system. It is not a question of partnership, it is a question of having the necessary provisions so the areas which will be the component parts of the federal system will be working and functioning in such a way as to ensure a true federation. In other words, the central government, the federal government, will have sufficient powers as to ensure the unity of the state. We are not against the idea, for example, of following what is going on in the United States in terms of a federal system. I know the word partnership has been used for a long time, but partnership has been interpreted as meaning equality in everything. Naturally, one cannot disregard percentages and figures and the realities of Cyprus. Therefore, it is not a question of partnership. One might say it is a question of good cooperation and smooth functioning of the state in conditions of true federation.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE (PIO) in English on 14 October in a release provides the following question: "Asked whether we had given the green light to the UN secretary general's proposed initiative, Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] The only thing I can say is that I had a thorough exchange of views with the secretary general on the present position of the Cyprus problem. I am aware of the fact that the secretary general has been and is considering the possibility of some more active role in the negotiating process. But it is not for me to say what his final decision is going to be in terms of procedure or of substance. The only thing I have done is to explain fully our views on the present status of the problem. Certain things were discussed which I cannot disclose, and my intention is to discuss these specific things with my associates in the Cyprus Government and the National Council, and at a later stage give our final positions to the secretary general.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked whether recent increased U.S. military presence in the area created a better climate for the solution of the Cyprus problem, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] Let me put it this way. The Cyprus problem is a unique problem. So far it has not been influenced by any events in the area. But I cannot really support the view that the increased presence of the United States would facilitate a solution of the Cyprus problem.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Answering a relevant question, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] It is not a question of preventing a solution to the Cyprus problem. I believe that the less the tension in the area the better, in every respect, for Cyprus and for the entire area.

[Question] Mr President [words indistinct] a special session to discuss the problem of Cyprus exclusively or [words indistinct] with the Namibia issue?

[Answer] Actually, this is what we have in mind in case developments are such that the Cyprus problem is not discussed during the regular session of the General Assembly until the 15th of December. Our aim is to ask for a resumed session or for a special session sometime early next year, if, of course, there is no substantial progress in the meantime. Despite all the consultations that have been going on, I must say I have not, at least at this stage, sensed anything and have not seen any signs on the horizon suggesting the likelihood of substantial progress.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked whether granting equality to the Turkish Cypriots would bring down the barriers and allow economic and perhaps political progress, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] One has to take into consideration the fact that we are trying to create a federal state from a unitary state.

Cyprus has never been a federal country in its entire history. We have already made the great concession of agreeing to a federal state in order to accommodate the Turkish views on that. This does not mean that one should forget the percentages of population, which are 82 percent Greek Cypriots and 18 percent Turkish Cypriots. You can have required autonomy for the two areas which will be the component parts of the federal structure, but as far as the federal central authorities are concerned, it would be unjust to have equality. Apart from the fact that it would not work, we would have a new Cyprus problem. This is a sui generis situation, because we are going to have a federation based on ethnic criteria which has not been the case in other parts of the world. There may be federations in other parts of the world where independent states are united into federation, but here you have to break up Cyrpus into two parts in order to create federation out of no federation. So, one had to take into consideration the realities of Cyprus and the smooth functioning of the state. You cannot equate the 82 percent of the population with the 18 percent of the population in everything. There may be safeguards in certain respects for the Turkish Cypriots, but to speak of equality is tantamount to accepting the results of the invasion.

[Question] [Words indistinct] in the U.S. policy since Kissinger. [Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked about U.S. policy on Cyprus, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] To be quite honest we have not had the chance yet to discuss at high level the Cyprus question with the new U.S. administration. I can disclose that I am going to have a meeting with President Reagan later in the year, before the end of the year, to discuss the Cyprus problem, and I shall then be in a better position to draw a conclusion.

[Question by unidentified correspondent] [Words indistinct] Commonwealth conference, Mrs Thatcher's definition of your problem as a disputed territory, apart from this diplomatic inexactitude, what has [she] contributed to bring the solution nearer? [Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked about Mrs Thatcher's reference to Cyprus as a question of disputed territory, President Kyprianou said:"]

[Answer] Well, Mrs Thatcher spoke of Cyprus and Namibia as disputed territories and we explained to her that neither one is a question of disputed territory. It is a question of restoring the rights of the people which have been violated as a result either of colonialization or of invasion, and I think this view was unanimously accepted. That is why the final communique of the Commonwealth conference speaks of the necessity of ending all foreign intervention and interference in the internal affairs of Cyprus; for the restoration of the human rights and the fundamental freedoms of all the people of Cyprus. It also speaks specifically of the unity of Cyprus, and underlines the solidarity of the Commonwealth with the government and the people of Cyprus. It speaks of the demilitarization of Cyprus. Most important, it speaks of the necessity to achieve progress toward the solution of the Cyprus problem by implementing the UN resolutions and the high-level agreements. In other words, I want to emphasize that Mrs Thatcher's reference to disputed territory was not accepted by anybody.

[Question] Mr President, regarding your answer to the question on the more active role of the secretary general, did I detect a lack of enthusiasm in your answer?

[Answer] Decisions, I think, are not taken as a result of enthusiasm or lack of enthusiasm. I think one has to study carefully the situation and express his views on the substance of what has been discussed.

[Question] Mr President [words indistinct] you are anticipating a debate not this year but perhaps next year at the General Assembly, and the fact you say Waldheim is working on something would seem to indicate that if you have some hope there will be a settlement between now and sometime next year [as heard], what exactly do you expect to get from the secretary general and how soon could that be?

[Answer] Well, we have to allow some time to see whether some progress can still be achieved in one way or another within the framework of the intercommunal talks. If we reach the conclusion that no progress is possible within the context of the intercommunal talks, I did not and I do not exclude the possibility of raising the Cyprus problem during the regular session and before December. What I meant before was that we have taken the line that if developments are such that a delay in a General Assembly debate is justified, we are going to seek debate in a resumed session or in a special session.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked about the missing persons question, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] A lot of effort has been made with regard to this question. There were talks recently in New York and in Nicosia about that. As you know, a committee has been established on the question of missing persons. There were certain procedural difficulties. I believe that every effort will be made by the secretary general and the representative of the International Red Cross to get this committee functioning.

[Question] [Words indistinct] some areas in which the two communities could not be absolutely equal. Could you explain in more detail which areas you are speaking of?

[Answer] I mean in the federal organs of the state, the executive, the legislature, the public service and so on. One has to take into consideration the realities of Cyprus. I am talking about numerical representation. I must at this stage make one point clear. The territorial aspect of the problem is very important in the sense that there should be a reasonable percentage of territory under Turkish Cypriot administration within the federation. The question of the numerical strength would not be ignored in that respect either. Again it is not only the territorial aspect which is important but also the constitutional aspect. It is essential to ensure the unity of one independent and united Cyprus. Therefore, although we agree on federation, we would like to see a federation which would function and take into account the realities of Cyprus and at the same time the rights of Cypriots. Let me make it clear in this sense. The Greek Cypriot refugees -- because as you know the invasion resulted in almost 200,000 refugees who were uprooted from their homes -- insofar as the return of these refugees is concerned, in a proper arrangement of the territorial aspect of the two provinces, we would like to see most of these refugees return under Greek Cypriot administration, without preventing the others from going back to their homes under Turkish Cypriot administration; just as nothing should prevent Turkish Cypriots from going to live in the area under Greek Cypriot administration. We want freedom of movement, freedom of settlement and the right to property like you have here in the United States. For example, I am sure there will be no difficulties if someone would like to leave New York state and go and live in New Jersey or in California. I don't think he would have any problem of moving about or freedom of settlement.

[Question] Mr President, have you lost a good friend in the person of President as-Sadat? Also, does his untimely death affect Cyprus per se or the region in general, as far as you can evaluate it?

[Answer] As you know, we don't have diplomatic relations with Egypt. Diplomatic relations with Egypt were severed by the late President as-Sadat as a result of the Larnaca airport incident, if you remember, when Egyptian commandos landed there and tried to make an operation to which we objected. He severed diplomatic relations with Cyprus. Despite that, despite the fact that we have no diplomatic relations, one cannot but be sad for the death of any leader, and that includes President as-Sadat. Above all, I must say that we have nothing against the Egyptian people. Our differences were with President as-Sadat personally.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked whether there was a possibility of a return to armed struggle if the truce created as a result of the intercommunal talks was badly damaged, Mr Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] Our sincere desire and aim is to continue our efforts through peaceful means. We shall do whatever we can, whatever is in our power, to prevent repetition of any armed conflict. We believe that the answer to the Cyprus problem is a peaceful solution.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked if it is possible for a Cyprus consciousness, instead of Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot consciousness, to be created, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] We are all for it and we believe that the people of Cyprus, whether Greek Cypriots or Turkish Cypriots, must owe their first loyalty to the state of Cyprus as citizens of Cyprus. We are doing all we can to contribute in that direction. I will give you an example. As far as higher education is concerned, we contemplate now to establish a university. Even without a solution to the Cyprus problem, we aim at making such a university a university which can be attended both by Greek Cypriots and by Turkish Cypriots.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked if rotation of president is acceptable to the Greek Cypriot side, he said:"]

[Answer] That cannot be acceptable because rotation of the presidency may be all right for Switzerland, but it is not all right for another country which is as politically-minded as Cyprus and the Cypriot people. Our idea in this respect is that there should be a president and vice president, as before under the Zurich and London agreements, now in the system of federation.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Replying to a relevant question, President Kiprianou said:"]

[Answer] The territorial proposals of the Turkish side are really so minimal that, for example, Greek Cypriots who would return to Greek Cypriot adminstration under the recent proposals of the Turkish Cypriots, would be 16,000 out of 200,000. This is minimal, a very small percentage, and our information is that this line was drawn from military criteria, not political criteria. Definitely, this is not enough. Definitely, this is not a just arrangement.

One has to take into account many considerations, but one cannot forget the numerical strength of the two communities. I am not suggesting that land ownership as a criterion because in such a case the area under Turkish administration would be 16 percent. As you know, we propose 20 percent, although their percentage is 18 percent. However important the territorial aspect is, it is not only territory that must be taken into consideration. There must be an overall solution to the Cyprus problem. In this respect, I must stress that we also attach great importance to the priority which was included in the agenda prepared by the UN secretary general at the beginning of the talks regarding the resettlement of Famagusta, which is also in conformity with the agreement I have reached with Mr Denktash and which should not be abandoned.

[Question indistinct. Nicosia PIO version says: "Asked how he viewed the federal government, Kiprianou replied:"]

[Answer] The power of the federal government should be sufficient to ensure the unity of the state and a real federal system.

UN REPRESENTATIVE GOBBI RETURNS FROM NEW YORK

NC160935 Nicosia THE CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 16 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] The UN secretary general's special representative, Hugo Gobbi, flew back to the island last night from consultations in New York and immediately set in motion arrangements for a meeting of the intercommunal talks for 1600 this afternoon. This was stated by the UN spokesman Keith Beavan replying to questions last night. Gobbi had been in New York since the end of last month. He was present at all discussions which Waldheim had with all the parties concerned.

NICOSIA 2-DAY CONFERENCE OPENS ON MADRID CSCE

[Text] A 2-day conference opened in Nicosia this morning with the participation of representatives from Cyprus and eight other nonaligned and neutral countries of Europe. The conference will discuss questions connected with the Madrid Conference on European Security and Cooperation. The group will study ways in which it can contribute to the success of the Madrid conference; fresh proposals will be examined for the improvement and expansion of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act.

Speaking at the opening of the conference, Foreign Ministry director general and head of the Cypriot delegation Pelayias stressed that the strengthening of peace, security and cooperation of the people of Europe will finally depend on the success of the Madrid conference. Mr Pelayias added that for Cyprus, where the principles of the Helsinki Final Act are still being flagrantly violated, the success of the Madrid conference, with substantive results in all fields, would be a source of satisfaction and encouragement that the efforts for the implementation of the Final Act will be continued.

CAGATAY HITS 'INCONSISTENT GREEK CYPRIOT' STANDS

TA151220 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Excerpts] In a news conference he held in Lefkosa [Nicosia] today, Prime Minister Cagatay said that the Turkish Cypriot community would not tolerate indefinitely the difficulties caused by the failure to solve the Cyprus problem resulting from inconsistent Greek Cypriot policies. Cagatay said that even following the Turkish Cypriot proposals submitted to the Greek Cypriot side on 5 August 1981, the Greek Cypriots still insisted on their intransigent and unconciliatory stand through policies of embargo and usurpation.

Recalling that the Turkish Cypriot community was living through a period which demanded self-sacrifice, Cagatay said that the community's economic problems were caused by the fact that political problems were still not solved. Cagatay said the Greek Cypriot side was trying, on the one hand, to bring the Cyprus problem into the international forums and, on the other, to create the impression that the solution of the Cyprus problem was not urgent.

Warning the community to be on the alert in the face of Greek Cypriot plots, Cagatay said that these plots were aimed at our communal destruction. Noting that it was very difficult for a community to exist without its rights, revenues and links as a state, Cagatay said that this situation was one of the main reasons for present difficulties.

Cagatay said the Greek Cypriot side was trying to obtain through social and economic pressures and a political embargo what it could not get by force of arms.

Cagatay continued: Our community wants the solution of the Cyprus problem based on a bizonal, bicommunal, nonaligned and independent federation. We favor a solution through the intercommunal talks and oppose all search for a solution based on unrealistic factors. We do not see any better alternative to the solution of the Cyprus problem. The Turkish Cypriot community will not tolerate indefinitely the difficulties caused by the failure to solve the Cyprus problem because of inconsistent Greek Cypriot policies.

I would like to stress that if we are forced to take a crucial decision in order to ensure our survival, we will not hesitate to do so. No one should blame our community for making a decision to protect our rights and liberties and to preserve our national entity.

On domestic issues, Cagatay said the formation of a Turkish Cypriot central bank that would guide our economy and would create new opportunities has not been realized because of political difficulties. Cagatay added that the introduction of the Turkish lira has created some difficulties which were reflected on our daily lives and the community's economy.

More on News Conference

TA151346 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Answering questions from correspondents during a news conference in Lefkosa [Nicosia] this morning, Turkish Cypriot Prime Minister Cagatay said the Turkish Cypriot community had up to now defended its existence and had taken the necessary decisions. If such a defense necessitated the [unilateral] declaration of an independent Turkish Cypriot state, this would also be one of the possible decisions to be considered. Asked about the reactions to such a declaration, Mr Cagatay said that the situation in the Middle East and the conditions and realities in Cyprus would be carefully considered.

ENVOY TO NEPAL -- Cyprus High Commissioner to India Nikolaidhis presented his credentials to King Birendra in Katmandu as the republic's first ambassador to Nepal. Accepting the credentials, King Birendra reiterated his country's support for Cyprus and assured Nikolaidhis that this will continue until a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem has been found through talks between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots. The king of Nepal referred to his visit to Cyprus and said that the talks he had had with President Kiprianou and the government had proved useful for the further development of understanding between the two countries. [Text] [Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 9 Oct 81 NC]

ENVOY EXCHANGE WITH AUSTRALIA -- Dr Prokopis N. Vaneziz, a distinguished scholar and author, is to be the new Cyprus High Commissioner to Australia. His appointment was announced last night. Dr Vaneziz, now acting director-general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, is expected to go to Canberra next January. It was also announced last night that Miss Mary McPherson is to be Australia's High Commissioner to Cyprus. She will be based in Nicosia. With his base in Canberra, Dr Vaneziz is expected to be accredited to a number of other countries in the region, including China. He will replace Dinos Mousioutas who is reportedly moving to UN headquarters in New York. [Nicosia THE CYPRUS WEEKLY in English Oct 9-15 81 p 3 NC]

RALLIS STRESSES COUNTRY'S POTENTIAL FOR YOUTHS

[Text] Speaking this evening on ERT [Greek Radio-Television] television, Prime Minister and New Democracy Chairman Rallis specifically addressed the young people, stressing that our country's potential is unlimited and that already much has been done in our country. But, he stressed, much more should be done so that we may reach the level we envision. Giving special emphasis to the things that should be done in the future, Rallis said that New Democracy's goals are; the economic, social and cultural equalization between the center and the provinces, the symmetrical progress (?that is,) of the whole and the individual as self-existing and respectable units, the readjustment of taxation to the conditions which inflation has created, the curbing of tax evasion, the completion of a state of law and social prosperity, the promotion of the sectors of administration, health and education.

We call on you, Rallis said, to continue together an effort that has produced tangible results so that we may achieve greater progress and greater prosperity by correcting mistakes and improving methods. We do not promise miracles, because there are no miracles. We shall implement everything we promise.

Then he stressed that the opponents of New Democracy do not put forth positions but negations, and he concluded: I am sure of your vote. I believe that on Sunday we shall celebrate together a triumphant victory.

PAPANDREOU ATHENS INTERVIEW ON POSTELECTION PLANS

LD151337 Paris L'UNITE in French 10 Oct 81 pp 8-9

[Jean-Paul Liegois interview with PASOK Leader Andreas Papandreou in Athens: "Everybody Calls Him Andreas"; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] How do you view the possibility of your victory [in the Greek elections on 18 October]?

[Answer] We know that the task awaiting us is vast and difficult. We have a country to rebuild and revive. That is why the Greek people's participation in this enterprise is crucial. That is why our action will be carried out in an atmosphere of self-management and with self-managing structures. It will be implemented through an increase in the number of cooperatives. It will be a driving force in the collectivized sector of industry. It will be extended to all the country's civic life; decentralization will probably be the first measure which I will have passed by Parliament.

[Question] At each meeting I have heard you repeat: "Power to the people is not just an election slogan. From 19 October 1981 it will become a reality." How?

[Answer] Well, it will immediately become a reality precisely through decentralization. In Greece, under the present system, there are two levels of political power locally; on the one hand the mayor and his councillors, who are elected; on the other hand the prefects, who are appointed by the government. Initially the prefects will remain. But at the same time we will create 10 or 11 regions throughout the country. And later the representatives of those regions will be elected by the Greek people. Consequently, the country's economic development plan will be decentralized. There will be a national plan but it will henceforth express the diversity of the regions' needs. The content and implementation of that plan will be controlled by the people's votes. There will be no socialism in Greece without this participation by the people, this decentralization.

[Question] You mentioned "socialism." Is this not a relatively new word in contemporary Greece's political vocabulary? How is it understood by the Greek people?

[Answer] I admit that it was difficult to use that word in Greece after the civil war. People could not and dare not use it; too much blood was attached to it. This question was raised as recently as 1964 and people said: "Let's not talk about socialism, let's talk about democracy." In 1974 we decided to take the risk. That was because we wanted to make things clear and avoid being confused with certain so-called "democrats." Subsequent events proved us right. Today the Greek people seem to like the word "socialism," because they have realized that it is Greece's last chance.

[Question] If PASOK wins the elections on 15 October 1981 it will, you say, be a "historic event." Does historic mean irreversible?

[Answer] I hope so. Since we believe in pluralism, there will probably be alternation, there will probably be parties other than PASOK which will govern Greece one day. But I do not think that we would go back, regress and return to an oligarchical, harsh and authoritarian regime.

[Question] Is there a "Papandreou effect" in Greece like there was a "Mitterrand effect" in France? Will 18 October 1981 be for the Greeks what 10 May 1981 was for the French?

[Answer] It will be the same thing; the same joy, the same relief, the same hope. I was in Paris on 10 May; it was a festival of liberation. The same will happen on 18 October in Athens and throughout the country. Throughout Greece the people will sing and dance.

Athens Rally Speech

[Text] PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou addressed a gathering at Sindagma square in Athens this evening. He severely critcized the domestic and foreign policy of New Democracy and explained his party's government program on national issues, with special reference to NATO, the bases, Greek-Turkish relations and the Cyprus issue. Papandreou also referred to the economic policy he will implement and to PASOK's program for regional development, health and education.

Starting his speech, Papandreou stated the time has come for change and liberation, both economic and social. The time has come, he said, for us to lay the foundations for a new Greece. Continuing, he stated that the transformation of New Democracy from a radical-liberal party into a conservative party of the European type with the participation of fascist and monarchist elements, which do not recognize and do not respect the peoples mandate in the plebiscite of 1974, was a disservice for the country because it will place them in the position of the opposition which does not respect the peoples' sovereignty.

He then criticized New Democracy for the dangermongering it has expanded throughout the country. Instead of dangermongering, Papandreou stated, New Democracy should tell us how it plans to solve the vast problems with which the nation and our people are faced. In the coming election there is a confrontation between democracy and authoritarianism, the one-party system and the multi-party system, truth and lies, honesty and corruption. Together with our people we will lay the foundations for a new Greece of which entire generations have dreamed. The lot has fallen to PASOK to bring about this change.

Referring to economic policy, Papandreou underlined that New Democracy has led the country to the threshold of bankruptcy. The deficit in the foreign payments balance has reached 300 billion [drachma] and for 2 years we have been faced with recession and now with unemployment. Inflation has also reached a level of more than 25 percent. He added that New Democracy finances profiteers and the middlemen and has blocked credit. There is also stagnation in the public investments sector. PASOK will settle accounts and tell the people what it is taking over.

Papandreou said that, with the help of the people, PASOK will lead the country to a flowering economy with full employment. It is our purpose to increase productivity and have a just distribution of income. We will combat tax evasion, which is estimated at 150 billion drachma this year. The rich in Greece do not pay a penny while the people bear the burden.

Papandreou then described as sheer propaganda the New Democracy allegations that PASOK will freeze savings, and tax interest, that it will tax emigrants savings in foreign exchange and housing, and that it will confiscate property. The people know their savings have been destroyed by inflation and that our goal is a home for every Greek.

Papandreou then referred to the movement's policy for the reform and modernization of the banking system, protection and development of small and medium businesses, adding the PASOK government will protect the income of the working Greek.

Papandreou stressed that PASOK will responsibly deal with the issues of the new generation. We will especially deal with the education and unemployment of the youths. He stressed PASOK will abolish the pan-Hellenic entrance examinations, cut down military service and establish a "new generation" ministry to promote these sectors.

Papandreou said PASOK will recognize the national resistence movement, will abolish personal dossiers and the unfairness of preference in voting for deputies. He added that PASOK will deal with environmental pollution through direct measures.

Referring to the problem of Cyprus, Papandreou said the government policy demonstrates confusion. Greece, he said, left NATO in 1974 because of Cyprus and returned to NATO although Cyprus remained under Turkish occupation. The PASOK chairman stressed: Despite Rallis' statements, the alliance refuses to guarantee our eastern frontiers in the same way that it refuses to define a ratio in connection with the grant of military aid to Greece and Turkey. I wonder, he added, how Rallis can talk of guarantees of our territorial integrity when the Rogers agreement questions the control of airspace under NATO.

On Greek-Turkish relations, he said that negotiations are meaningless if their subject is what Greece will cede to Turkey. We make an offer of peace and cooperation between the two peoples. We claim absolutely nothing. At the same time, however, we must make it clear we will cede nothing from our fatherland's national sovereign territory.

On U.S. bases, he said, we will start negotiations and our first goal will be a schedule for their withdrawal. We will also remove -- without negotiations -- the nuclear warheads situated in our country.

Concluding, he said the new Greece will be born out of the scorched earth which is being handed over to us by the rightwing. This will be a Greece which will express the hopes of the generation of the national resistance movement, the faith of the generation of the implacable struggles, and the dream of the generation of the Polytechnic. On 19 October, PASOK will be in the government and the people will be in authority, and Greece will belong to the Greeks.

NSC PASSES LAW DISBANDING POLITICAL PARTIES

TA161242 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] The National Security Council [NSC] has disbanded political parties. The National Security Council statement on the issue is as follows: The National Security Council adopted the bill on disbanding the political parties, the activities of which it has banned in its Communique No 7, at a meeting it held on 16 October 1981. The head of state will make a statement to the public on the law on the television program "Insight Into the News" which will be broadcast after the 2030 news program. The law is as follows:

1. All political parties which were established before 12 September 1980 and whose activities had been banned by National Security Council Communique No 7, their central, provincial, district and other branch organizations, their women's and youth auxiliaries, their representations, clubs and other affiliated organizations established under different names have been disbanded.

2. The movable and immovable properties -- including money -- of all the disbanded parties and their auxiliaries are transferred to the treasury at the time when this law goes into effect.

3. The duty to manage all money and stocks and the movable and immovable property at the Cankaya mansion belonging to the founder of the Turkish Republic, Ataturk, which was given to the RPP -- which was the only political party at the time -- in accordance with the will of Ataturk will be fully executed by the head of the State Secretariat from the date this law becomes effective.

4. The liquidation in connection with the transfer to the treasury of properties belonging to the political parties will be carried out -- at the latest within a month -- by the Finance and Interior ministries in accordance with the procedures specified in a directive to be prepared by the two ministries jointly.

5. The trustees to the political parties which were appointed in accordance with the articles of Law No 2325 will act jointly with other officials in the liquidation procedures. The duties of the trustee of a party whose property has been liquidated end automatically.

6. The provisions of the National Security Council communique that was issued on 2 June 1981 are still valid unless changed by the National Security Council.

7. The political parties Law No 648 issued on 13 July 1965 and its amendments have been abolished.

8. This law will be effective the day it is issued.

9. The Council of Ministers will execute the provisions of this law.

NAP LEADER TURKES PLEADS NOT GUILTY AT TRIAL

TA151641 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Ankara, 14 Oct (AA) -- During today's session at the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] trial, NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes pleaded not guilty, telling the martial law prosecutor that he was wrongly accused in the past too of being fascist. "I have always opposed all kinds of dictates exploiting men, I have strived and worked against these. I have defended this idea but I have become a target for communists, divisionists and their collaborators, Turkes said, complaining that they had received "no apologies when 15-20 youths affiliated with NAP were detained for some time following the murder of political science student Mustafa Kuseyri, whose killer turned out to be one of his own friends. Some people had shouted during that time, "Turkes murderer."

Turkes said the indictment quoted his books in a "fraudulent and lying manner." The indictment included statements he never made, Turkes said.

Move on Trial

TA151643 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Text] The presiding judge and another judge conducting the trial of Alpaslan Turkes and his colleagues announced today that they were retiring from the trial. This decision must be approved by the Military Court of Appeals. This was pointed out in the judges' announcement as well.

In this morning's session, one of the defense lawyers, Nadir Latif Islam, was arrested because of certain remarks he made against the prosecutor.

CUMHURIYET REPORTS ECEVIT TRIAL PROCEEDINGS

NC160747 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 14 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Text] Ankara -- Former Republican People's Party leader Bulent Ecevit has been put on trial on charges that in four separate speeches he insulted the moral identity of the government. The court has decided to refer the dossier to the martial law command to determine, in view of the amendments made to Law No 1402, whether Ecevit should be tried by a civilian or a military tribunal. The indictment was read before the Fourth Criminal Court in Ankara, which held its first sitting yesterday.

It has been argued by the prosecution that in a speech on 20 October 1975, Ecevit uttered the words "tyrannical government;" that on 12 February 1976 he charged that the annual program was falsified; that on 18 April 1976, addressing a peace and freedom meeting, he uttered the phrases "every form of reaction is acting hand in hand," and "the fascist government," and that in his speech on 18 August 1976 he said, "this is a vulgar and mean treachery." The prosecution maintained that all these utterances constituted an insult to the moral identity of the government and demanded that in accordance with sections 159/1 and 173 of the Turkish penal code, Ecevit should be sentenced 4 times to penal servitude from 4 to 24 years.

When interrogated, Ecevit maintained that three of the four speeches were connected with written statements to the press and that according to the press law, these charges should be dropped under the statute of limitations. Referring to his speech at the peace and freedom meeting, Ecevit said it was a repetition, in a mitigated form, of his speech in the National Assembly and that in accordance with Article 79 of the constitution, he could not be held responsible for it. Ecevit further argued that it was not his intention to insult the moral identity of the government and that his speeches were in the form of warnings.

Following Ecevit's interrogation, the prosecutor suggested that the dossier be sent to the martial law command to decide, in view of the amendments made to Law No 1402, which court should try the case. Ecevit's lawyers did not share this view, giving the date of the events as a reason. The court has referred the dossier to the martial law command asking for a ruling as to whether this case should be tried by a civilian or a military tribunal. The case has been adjourned to a later date.

SCHMIDT LEAVES HOSPITAL AFTER HEART OPERATION

NC171936 Paris AFP in English 1930 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 Oct (AFP) -- West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today checked out of Koblenz military hospital and returned to Bonn after undergoing heart surgery on Tuesday to be fitted with a pacemaker.

The operation to install the device, which regulates the heartbeat, came a few days after Mr Schmidt fell ill with what was initially described as a fever.

Mr Schmidt's first meeting is set for tomorrow, when he and members of the Social-Democrat and Free Democratic coalition are to examine ways of making a 6,000 million mark (2,000 million dollar) shortfall in the 1982 budget.

Cuts Workday

NC172008 Paris AFP in English 1954 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 17 Oct (AFP) -- Doctors today pronounced the 62-year-old Mr Schmidt fit, but the chancellor has already announced that he will cut an hour off his usual 16-hour work day.

Mr Schmidt had canceled all his appointments last week and at the advice of his physicians called off plans to attend next week's North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico.

His hospital stay also triggered a lively debate on the government's handling of his condition, with several newspapers alleging that his health was a lot more worse than officially reported.

Some newspaper reports said that he passed out four times before his operation.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY APPROVES 'ZERO SOLUTION'

LD161352 Hamburg DPA in German 1239 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Munich, 16 Oct (DPA) -- The parliamentarians of the NATO countries regard the so-called zero solution -- the "reciprocal elimination" of nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe -- as the "ideal aim" of East-West armament negotiations. At the end of its week-long annual conference the North Atlantic Assembly in Munich today passed a resolution to this effect which admitted, however, that this aim would be difficult to achieve.

The assembly urged the governments of the member states to continue to pursue both objectives of the NATO dual decision -- the modernization of arms and negotiations on arms control -- "with equal emphasis." The dual decision was a strategy to "achieve military stability and secure peace in Europe."

[Text] Bonn, 16 Oct (DPA) -- The political and economic situation in the African Republic of Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia) and the transition of Namibia (South-West Africa) to independence were at the center of talks held in Bonn today between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Zimbabwean Foreign Minister Witness Mangwende.

A further subject of the talks, according to the Foreign Ministry, was the imminent North-South summit meeting in Cancun. Mangwende is in the federal capital for the opening ceremony of his country's embassy.

[Text] Jerusalem, 19 Oct (AFP) -- West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will visit Israel in February, the Foreign Ministry told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE here today.

The visit was arranged when Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir met West German Deputy Foreign Minister Hildegard Hamm Bruescher, who was here for yesterday's funeral of General Moshe Dayan. No dates were given for the visit.

INDUSTRIALIST VIEWS GAS DEAL WITH USSR

LD161352 Hamburg DPA in German 1036 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Duesseldorf, 16 Oct (DPA) -- Agreement on the section of the German-Soviet gas-pipeline deal relating to natural gas is now "purely a question of a Russian decision." Klaus Liesen, chairman of the Ruhrgas AG Board of Management, told a news conference in Duesseldorf that his firm is willing to extend a guaranteed minimum price and a price review clause to the Soviet Soyuz Gazeksport enterprise.

Liesen refused to comment on the chances for success of the negotiations now underway. However, he thought it very unlikely that the other partners involved in the European natural gas negotiations could accept the total amount of 40 billion cubic meters to be supplied annually without Ruhrgas.

Liesen emphasized that a delivery price holding its own in the energy market is essential for the successful conclusion of the deal. If the deal is completed, the share of Soviet gas in the amount of gas directly available on the German market will rise to 30 percent during the second half of the 1980's as against 17 percent at present. Seventy percent will dome from domestic, Netherlands and Norwegian sources. The USSR has established reserves totalling 26,000 billion cubic meters.

LAMBSDORFF ISSUES WARNING TO JAPANESE ON EXPORTS

LD161450 Hamburg DPA in German 1324 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 16 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Minister von Lambsdorff and the Federation of German Industry [BDI] have warned Japan of a growing tendency in Europe to stop Japanese exports by introducing national import restrictions. On the occasion of a 3-day visit by the Association of Japanese industry, "Keidanren" to the Federal Republic, both Lambsdorff and BDI Honorary President Sohl urged Japanese industry to pursue a moderate export policy and open its own market more readily for exports from the Federal Republic and Europe.

In a 60-minute talk with Keidanren Chairman Yoshihiro Inayama, Lambsdorff today described the proportion of finished goods among Japanese today described the proportion of finished good among Japanese imports as far too small in comparison with other developed industrial countries. On the other hand, European industry must show greater readiness to meet the requirements of the Japanese market.

The Japanese chairman said that after his return to Japan he will propose that the export pressure on Europe be moderated. He too regards this as a major problem. At the same time, Inayama stressed the need for the continuation of a free trade system. Export problems cannot be solved by government action but only by industry itself. German firms should make greater efforts to enter the Japanese market. There is certainly a demand in Japan for good and attractively priced foreign products.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON FRENCH-U.S. RELATIONS

NC190920 Paris AFP in English 0911 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Oct (AFP) -- External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson today affirmed France's "attachment to the values defended by the Atlantic Alliance."

He said that France's views on the arms race and Afghanistan were the same as those of Washington and "that is why the Americans consider us at present as their most loyal allies."

President Francois Mitterrand is currently in the United States.

In an interview with the Socialist daily LE MATIN, Mr Cheysson said: "In our relations with the Americans, one could have the impression of remarkable contradictions."

"There is complete agreement on East-West relations, but some reciprocal annoyances and misunderstandings in a whole series of sectors, and some differences over economics, which could one day lead to a serious crisis.

"...We have explained with absolute frankness our attachment to the values defended by the Atlantic alliance. Certain people, a long way from Europe, seemed to think that because we are Socialists we were not attached to these values, when in fact our Socialism is fundamentally humane," Mr Cheysson said.

"We French are living in the era of Jaures, not that of Lenin."

(Jean Jaures, assassinated in 1914 because he did not support France's entry into the war, is looked on as the "father" of French Socialism).

Mr Cheysson said that his government had no illusions about the Eastern bloc arms buildup which he described as "frightening".

He added "The Soviet Union's defence budget has risen regularly by seven percent annually for the past 10 years."

But he said that France became concerned when Americans "artificially introduced the subject which obsessed them -- the East-West relationship."

Mr Cheysson said that there were certain world problems -- he specified southern Africa, Latin America and the Middle East - which were "conflicts between neighbours and have absolutely nothing to do with either Moscow or Washington."

Labelling problems under a general East-West confrontation leads to a situation where the real problem is not solved, the minister said.

ROCARD DENIES PLANNING TO RESIGN FROM GOVERNMENT

PM161317 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Oct 81 p 8

[Unattributed report: "Mr Rocard Denies Rumors of His Possible Resignation From the Government"]

[Text] On Wednesday evening [14 October] Mr Michel Rocard denied on French Television that he has any intention of resigning from the government. "I am not subject to moods," he said, "and if I had any difficulties people would know about it." He added: "I have submitted a plan, which is the government plan. There are always some ministers who are not pleased with arbitrations."

I myself did not win all mine. But the plan I am submitting expresses interministry coherence and governmental cohesion."

Referring to the problems of the faction he leads within the PS, he expressed regret that "some people within the PS have set themselves up as judges and have 'issued decrees.'"

"All this," he said, "is just a bad time we are going through. I think that at its Valence congress the party will remember that it is in government and that at this time there is no more serious matter for all Socialists than to close ranks, rally around the president of the Republic and ensure that they are capable of interpreting intelligently a difficult situation and responding in an innovative manner."

CHEYSSON URGES 'BRIDGE' BETWEEN EGYPT, ARABS

[Unattributed report: "Mr Cheysson: A Bridge Must Be Established Between Egypt and its Arab Brothers"]

[Text] Mr Claude Cheysson, Minister of External Relations, was questioned in the National Assembly on Wednesday 14 October on a statement he made in connection with the death of President as-Sadat. [Note: On 11 October, on Europe 1's "Press Club," Mr Cheysson said, in particular: "If you want to be optimistic you could say that As-Sadat's death, terrible in itself, and with all the consequences it could have for Egypt, removes an obstacle to inter-Arab rapprochement."] These remarks appeared "shocking," "tactless" and "ill-timed" to Mr Jacques Baumel (RPR, Hauts-de-Seine), who exclaimed: "Let Colonel al-Qadhdhafi be the one to spit on graves!"

"President as-Sadat's death," Mr Cheysson stated, "creates a very great threat to the evolution of peace, since there can be no peace without Egypt. Only when Egypt is restored to the Arab countries will the Camp David process be able to result in an all-embracing settlement. Will that be possible? It all depends on what happens in Egypt. In any event we assure President Mubarak of our total support.

"It is, indeed, necessary to establish a bridge between Egypt and its Arab brothers before negotiations can open involving representatives of all the region's peoples, including the PLO, which represents a fighting force. If, as we hope -- and we are prepared to work toward it -- the Camp David process continues and Egypt is strengthened, rapprochement among all the Arabs will be possible. That is all I said.

"In the last 48 hours," the minister went on, "there have been many indications of an improvement in relations between the Arabs and Egypt. The best tribute one can pay to that champion of peace, President as-Sadat, is to hope that they will all meet at the negotiating table, whereas he himself was alone there for too long, and you criticized that."

INTERIOR MINISTER TO ATTEND DAYAN FUNERAL

[Text] Paris, 17 Oct (AFP) -- Interior Minister Gaston Defferre will represent the French Government at the funeral of Israeli General Moshe Dayan, who died yesterday, it was announced here today.

The delegation accompanying Mr Defferre will also include Jean-Claude Colliard, a top aide of President Francois Mitterrand.

COLOMBO CALLS FOR BALANCE OF FORCES IN EUROPE

AU171511 Rome ANSA in English 0808 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- Membership in the Atlantic alliance makes no sense unless there is a responsible acceptance of mutally agreed upon policies, according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Addressing the first day of a Christian Democratic Party congress on peace and security, the head of Italian diplomacy said that foreign policy cannot be conditioned by domestic policy since the nation's fundamental interests are at stake. He took the view that international problems must be approached with an eye to Italy's best interests.

For him there was no doubt that at present there is an imbalance of forces in favor of the Warsaw Pact nations and that therefore "the security that guarantees peace" is lacking. He said that through the decision to install Euromissiles and the offer to negotiate with the Soviet Union, Italy sought to help re-establish a new balance that would lead to the withdrawal of new Soviet arms and the renunciation of missile installation in Sicily, now set for 1984.

The DC convention will wind up today with an address from Party Secretary Flaminio Piccoli.

DC DAILY QUESTIONS MALTA-USSR TREATY ASPECTS

AU171514 Rome ANSA in English 0813 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Christian Democratic Party today voiced "perplexity" over the recent friendship and cooperation treaty signed by Malta and the Soviet Union.

The DC daily "POPOLO" said that while the treaty raised no problems on a strictly juridical plane, things were less clear on a political level.

Recalling the terms of the Italo-Maltese accord, "IL POPOLO" noted that while ratification procedures were underway in the Italian parliament, Malta's Dom Mintoff stipulated a commercial agreement with the USSR which places at the disposition of the Soviet merchant fleet, fuel tanks in the old military structures of the port of La Valletta.

The DC daily said that two aspects of the new Malta-USSR treaty bore looking into. The first was that in the seventh paragraph of the text it seems that the concept of consultations has been broadened, in that there is reference to contacts to coordinate respective positions, to remove eventual threats and to stabilize peace.

The paper stressed that Soviet positions are not known for either their neutrality nor their non-alignment, and that this reference to a coordination of positions could appear equivocal.

The Italian Foreign Ministry has already asked La Valletta for clarification, the paper said.

Secondly, the situation in the Mediterranean is such that extreme seriousness and clarity is required when it comes to choices and stances, the daily continued.

"We are certain that the Maltese Government has carefully evaluated all of this" although the understanding with Rome does not touch upon, nor intends to limit in any way, the island's political freedom. The Rome government intends to make every effort to see to it that the Italo-Maltese treaty is implemented, as it represents, from every point of view, a fundamental choice in the history of the island with beneficial prospects for further and wider understandings in the entire region, the daily said.

SPADOLINI CALLS FOR BROADER NORTH-SOUTH TALKS

[Text] Milan, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- Premier Giovanni Spadolini today stressed the need for a more open broader dialogue between the North and South (the industrialized and the developing worlds).

In a speech he delivered today at the private "Bocconi" University of Milan, Spadolini noted that peace seems farther away than ever, and not only in the Middle East. He said that Italy has pledged to work for an intelligent strengthening of the Atlantic alliance and to enlarge Europe's role through a vast European initiative whose basis was laid during recent encounters with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. These efforts seek to accentuate the role of Europe in the search for a new line of overall negotiations between East and West, he said.

The new world economic order must also pass through a stage of greater North-South dialogue, he continued.

Spadolini stated that concrete steps were being taken to combat world hunger.

Today most of the industrialized nations seem bent on resuming the road to development, eliminating those imbalances that headlong economic growth over past decades had made possible, he concluded.

'EUROPE IN NORTH-SOUTH CRISIS' CONFERENCE OPENS

Delegates Criticize Reagan

AU162001 Rome ANSA in English 1949 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Florence, 16 Oct (ANSA) -- The majority of delegates participating here today in the international conference on "Europe in the North-South Crisis" have criticized United States President Ronald Reagan for his expressed intention of cutting back the exchange between rich and poor in the world economy of the free market.

The conference, which opened today, is being attended by the president of the Socialist International, Willy Brandt, the president of the Executive Commission of the European Economic Community (EEC) Gaston Thorn, the vice president of the European Parliament, Mario Zagari, the secretary of the Italian Socialist Party, Bettino Craxi, and numerous experts from Asia, AFrica and Latin America.

Speakers at the conference today maintained that the "predatory phase of development" must be ended. The speakers also confirmed their support for the policies outlined by Brandt in a book published last year on the issue, and expressed their agreement with development collaboration which maintains full respect for the independence of the emerging countries.

The conference was organized by the International Politics Study Institute, and comes on the eve of the North-South summit conference to be held next week in Cancun, Mexico.

Willy Brandt Comments

AU171508 Rome ANSA in English 0824 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Florence, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- Willy Brandt, president of the Socialist International, has said that he is less pessimistic than he was some time ago with regard to relations between rich and poor nations (so-called North-South ties).

In Florence for an international conference on Europe in the North-South crisis, Brandt told a news conference Friday that he would not be going to the Cancun summit to be held on October 22 and 23. Heads of state and government of industrialized and developing countries will be on hand for the meeting in Mexico but even if no decisions come out of Cancun, Brandt said, suggestions should emerge that can be followed up later on.

During the same press conference, Italian Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi stressed the urgent need to defend peace, to work for peace and to organize for peace. To this end, he said it was necessary, among other things, to organize international cooperation to speed up efforts to create a new, fairer world economic order.

Colombo Remarks

AU172006 Rome ANSA in English 1946 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Florence, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- The fact that Italy has not been invited to the Cancun summit in Mexico was called a "political error", by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today.

The heads of state and government of industrialized and developing nations will gather for the meeting Wednesday, October 21 to discuss "North-South" ties.

Colombo was addressing a conference organized in Florence to debate these very ties, with special emphasis on Europe's role.

He said that when he asked why Italy was not invited to Cancun, he was told that it was due to the difficulty of dosing out the number of representatives from the industrialized and developing worlds. The organizers said that it became unfeasible to invite all seven of the most industrialized countries. Nevertheless, Colombo said he still felt that the organizers had made a political mistake, given the particular sensitivity Italy has shown and the political choices she has made. Moreover, the foreign minister went on, the fact that only one of the seven most industrialized nations was excluded made it appear a slight to Italy's pride and dignity.

The absence of Italy at the Cancun summit and the political line that the U.S. intends to pursue at that meeting were the two chief topics discussed in Florence.

Colombo plumped for an approach to the North-South dialogue that was different from the American one. In this latter period, he said, the U.S. has not come out for an overall negotiation, but on the contrary, has exalted a free market philosophy and bilateral relationships.

Europe's position was and remains different, he said. At the Ottawa summit some progress was made in narrowing this divergence in that in the final communique the U.S. agreed to move in the direction of an overall negotiation.

Colombo also made reference to the various marches for peace that have been staged recently in Comiso, Perugia and Assisi (all in Italy) and in Bonn. The foreign minister warned against confusing "an authentic culture of peace" with "the rhetoric of peace." "If young people who demonstrate in Europe against missiles not yet installed should want to demonstrate against those already in place, they would have to look to those missiles currently pointed against Europe," he said.

Many of the speakers at the Florence conference saw the arms race as one of the hindrances to any constructive dialogue on development. Among those who took part in the debate on Europe's role in the crisis in the North-South dialogue were Willy Brandt, president of the Socialist International, president of the European Economic Community's Executive Commission, Gaston Thorn, and Arthur Schlesinger, one of the advisors to the late U.S. President Jack Kennedy.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON NATO ENTRY

PM160851 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 6 Oct 81 p 7

[Jaime Arias interview with Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca: "Perez Llorca Regards NATO Entry as Certain" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] To what extent is the operation of Spain's joining NATO a matter within the province of your ministry and to what extent is it within the province of the Defense Ministry?

[Answer] It is a decision of the entire government, which requires parliament's authorization. As for what might be termed the more direct handling of the matter, in my opinion it is shared 50-50 between the Foreign Ministry and the Defense Ministry.

[Question] If the proposal to join does not succeed -- an eventuality not to be discounted -- has a serious and reliable foreign policy plan been determined which will enable our country to cope with that?

[Answer] If that eventuality occurred -- which at present seems to me unlikely -- the responsibility for subsequent conduct should rest with those who caused this to occur. It seems to me indelicate to anticipate a policy that might even be determined by other people.

[Question] If the proposal is accepted, what will the immediate and medium term steps be? [Apparent line drop] treaty with the United States, talks on Gibraltar?

[Answer] The Spanish Government will inform the alliance that it is in a position to receive its invitation. The invitation will come. The government will use parliament's authorization and deposit the instrument of accession to the treaty, and so Spain will become a full member of the Atlantic alliance. At the same time, the purely military negotiations would begin.

We hope that the dialogue with Britain over Gibraltar will gain a more positive dynamic in that matter.

The fact that Spain will cease to be outside the Atlantic alliance must facilitate the resolution of that historical problem.

As for relations with the United States, they would fit within the multilateral framework. So we will negotiate with the United States a simpler agreement complementary to the aforementioned bilateral treaty.

[Question] Have the consequences been gauged? Domestically, won't the divergence of opinion between pro- and anti-NATO forces, albeit rather artificial, prevent the consolidation of the concerted foreign policy which our country so greatly needs? Internationally, the Soviet Union has not concealed its displeasure and has even hinted at retaliation. Is it known what our relations with countries which are allies of Russia -- such as Cuba, for instance -- could be like? Could they undergo substantial changes?

[Answer] Spain's foreign policy, which is European, Western and Atlantic according to the prime minister's definition, cannot be subordinated to external or internal vetoes.

Those who say that they are opposed to our joining NATO should realize that what is largely involved is extricating Spain from the not very successful role which it is now playing in the Western world.

We will not be extricating our country from neutralism in order to align it with one side. Spain has been aligned with the West de facto since 1953. But it will be obvious to anybody who does not demagogically wish to close his eyes that it is more honorable and advantageous for our country to be established on an equal basis with an alliance, NATO, in which the entire fate of the West and hence our fate is determined without our being able to make our voice or opinion heard, than merely to maintain our agreement with the United States, which creates an unequal relationship, in which Spain, outside the alliance, takes no part in decisions which affect it. Nor can we subordinate our decision to any external veto. We have rejected a Soviet memorandum because we deemed it an act of interference. Spanish foreign policy is decided here in Spain, and we cannot allow the Soviet Union or anybody else to attempt to limit the exercise of our sovereignty.

We do not believe that our relations with Russia's allies will deteriorate at all. Even our ties with the Soviet Union, once these moments are over and some diplomatic gesture is made, perhaps within a campaign with broader aims, need not suffer. Doesn't the Soviet Union have excellent relations with countries of various situations and sizes which are within NATO and does not question their membership? Why should we be different? I believe that realism will prevail.

[Question] In return for these setbacks, what will the advantages be?

[Answer] There will be no setbacks. There will be an independent and sovereign Spain in the place which benefits it as a consequence of history, geography and its democratic status, with greater means for defending its own interests, more useful to those who are its friends and more respected by everybody by not being isolated.

[Question] On the basis of our entry into NATO and the EEC, will we finally succeed in building a clearly defined foreign policy in other fields and in cooperation with other nations on an equal basis?

[Answer] Of course.

[Question] Socialist France, which unreservedly supports Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance, cherishes hopes of being able to realize its long-standing dream of a Mediterranean and Latin policy, which is inconceivable without the frank cooperation of Spain and Portugal. What is our stance on the matter?

[Answer] I do not feel authorized to define French policy. I will tell you that it is Spain's intention, within the alliance, to maintain the closest cooperation with the countries which you have mentioned and, in general, with the Mediterranean countries.

[Question] Our NATO membership could jeopardize in theory the possibility of a specifically Mediterranean policy because of the rejection which it would provoke in principle among the north African countries. However, France, which is Atlanticist, is striving to improve its relations with those coastal countries. Will we also be able to reconcile those interests? Have we seen how the land lies in the Islamic and African countries in this respect?

[Answer] I have already said that Spain's entry into NATO has a very specific aim of normalizing our defense relationship with the Western world. I believe that it will not, nor has it any reason to affect other areas of our foreign policy, in which it is the government's intention to maintain the existing guidelines. I am referring within a broad context to overall relations with the Arab and African world and more directly as regards your question, to specific relations with our north African neighbors, with which we will continue to promote the desire for sincere friendship and effective cooperation.

Not only will we maintain the coordinates of our Mediterranean policy, but I believe that joining NATO will enable us to be heard better and promote in this respect the interests which we share with the other members of the Mediterranean area and the rest of the coastal countries.

In fact we have begun a series of contacts with the north African and Arab countries, among others, to inform them within the context of our constant dialogue, about the principles governing the government's decision to join NATO. I believe that this will help to clarify our stances in view of biased, interpretations which might be put forward by other parties concerned in this with respect to that initiative.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RESOLUTION ON NATO CITED

PM161403 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 9 Oct 81 pp 3-4

[Unattributed report: "Way Clear for Entry Into NATO"]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 8 Oct -- The resolution approved yesterday by the [Congress of Deputies] Foreign Affairs Committee, if accepted also by the full house, which will probably debate this matter 28 October, will clear the way for the government to begin negotiations with NATO.

The text was approved by the Union of the Democratic Center and the Democratic coalition, which were supported in some paragraphs by votes from the Catalonian minority, and voting against it were exclusively the PCE, the Socialist, Andalusian and Basque groups and, on occasions, the Catalonian minority, abstained.

Throughout yesterday -- the third and last day -- the debates continued with the repetition of the same arguments, although a greater prominence was noted on the part of Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez, who saw all the amendments put forward by the opposition rejected one after another.

This is the text of the approved resolution:

The Congress of Deputies, conscious of the desirability of Spain becoming integrated into the political, economic and defense structures of the Western world,

Convinced that Spain's accession to the North Atlantic Treaty will strengthen our national defense, promote the modernization of our armed forces and help to guarantee our security and our territorial integrity,

Believing that neutralism, as a stance inhibiting Spanish foreign policy, would be rejected. And in fact even those who are opposed to Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance are in favor of bilateral agreements, as at present, while improving them, if possible, but these are clearly inadequate at the present time.

And emphasizing that Spain is not and cannot be a satellite country, nor can it accept a limited sovereignty, decides:

1 -- To authorize the government under the terms laid down in article 94:1 of the Constitution, so as to enable it to seek the consent incumbent on the state in relation to accession to the North Atlantic Treaty, by depositing the corresponding instrument of accession.

2 -- To advise the government that in the negotiations which will take place within the Atlantic alliance it pay special attention to the following points:

(a) That, in view of the threats which the process of international detente is undergoing and are evident in the difficulties encountered by the Madrid SCSE, it is now more necessary than ever to secure a guarantee of defense for Spain.

(B) That in order to specify the nature and manner of our participation in the alliance's military structure, the need to guarantee the security of the entire national territory, both inside and outside the peninsula, should be taken into account.

(C) That the recovery of Spanish sovereignty over Gibraltar is essential, as is the strengthening of defense and sovereignty over the whole of Spain both inside and outside the peninsula.

(D) That the political and economic negotiations with the EEC should be accelerated in parallel with the negotiations within the Atlantic alliance.

3 -- To request the government, following accession to the North Atlantic Treaty, to publish the document, on which everybody will be able to rely without making public contradictions, in order to clarify the position as regards Spain's participation in the alliance's military structure, the degree of that participation and its relationship with the membership of the alliance's political organization and all other issues which may clarify the real degree of defense responsibilities.

4 -- To set up an ad hoc parliamentary committee comprising members of the foreign affairs affairs and defense committees of both houses to monitor the above-mentioned negotiations.

ETA MILITARY BLAMED FOR KILLING OF GUARD

NC172059 Paris AFP in English 2047 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Madrid, 17 Oct (AFP) -- A civil guard was shot dead today at Santurce, in the Biscay region of northern Spain, breaking a three-month lull in terrorist killings -- the longest such respite since 1977.

Although responsibility for the killing was not immediately claimed, it was preseumed to be the work of the ETA-military wing of the Basque separatist movement.

The guard, Santiago Gonzales, was shot by four men using the same caliber bullets as those generally employed in ETA-military attacks. The men escaped in a stolen car.

Sources here said they believed ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] military had mounted the attack to prove that the fall-off in violence did not mean the organisation had been weakened, as was claimed recently by Interior Ministry officials.

Some observers attributed the relative truce to opposition by some Basque separatists to a policy of all-out violence, but police attributed it to their success in destroying the terrorists' support and information networks.

Earlier this week the head of Spain's anti-terrorist unit, Manuel Ballesteros, warned that ETA-military could be expected to launch a major attack in Madrid, simply to confirm it still existed.

PCE PRESENTS PETITION ON NATO ENTRY REFERENDUM

LD161738 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] The PCE Referendum Committee for Peace delivered to the general registry at the Ministry of the Prime Minister's Office a petition with half a million signatures collected throughout Spain by the PCE, asking for a consultative referendum on Spain's entry into NATO. Communist Deputies Horacio Fernandez Inguanzo and Antonio Palomares, Central Committee members (Marcos Sana) and Vicente Cazcarra, and Secretary of the PCE Parliamentary Group Enrique Curiel delivered the petition. Enrique Curiel spoke to us about it:

[Begin recording] (?We delivered) half a million signatures to the government, thus fulfilling the commitment we made when we launched the campaign on the grounds that Spain's entry into NATO is a political decision of special importance which indisputably requires the democratic consultation of the Spanish people. JORGENSEN LEAVES FOR JAPAN, PRC VISITS

[Text] Copenhagen, 17 Oct (AFP) -- Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen left Denmark for Japan today en route to an official visit to China, the Foreign Ministry said.

During his 11-day stay in China, Mr Jorgensen will meet with a number of prominent officials for talks to focus on East-West relations, disarmament issues and Danish-Chinese relations, especially in the area of trade.

The prime minister is to arrive in Tokyo tomorrow (Sunday) evening and will have talks with Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki before flying on to Peking on Monday.

He is to meet on Monday with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Foreign Minister and Vice Premier Huang Hua. During his four days in Peking, the Danish leader is expected to meet with Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping, the 76-year-old deputy party chairman.

For the rest of his time in China, Mr Jorgensen, who is accompanied by his wife and ten state and Foreign Ministry officials, will make an extensive tour of the country, including the Great Wall, Guangzhou, and Yenan -- the headquarters of the Chinese communists after their Long March in the 1930's.

COMMENTS ON U.S. DEFENSE SECRETARY'S VISIT

LD161308 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] We first must establish that there is great American resistance to a continution of deliveries of advanced military equipment for the Swedish fighter plane Viggen and its possible successor JAS. The reason is supposed to be that the U.S. administration no longer trusts Sweden after Data-SAAB exported in secret, it was said, American electronic equipment to the USSR. You may remember that story. This is now one of the most important matters to sort out during the visit by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger in Stockholm, Staffan Ekendahl reports.

U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger already met the Swedish defense minister, the commander in chief of the armed forces, the king and the foreign minister, in that order, during the morning. The Swedish side has a very important topic to discuss, persuading the United States to continue to deliver advanced electronic and hydraulic equipment for the Viggen and for a possible future JAS.

After reports were received last year that Data-SAAB had secretly gone on to export American electronics to the Soviet Union, the United States changed its attitude to Swedish military orders. Already concluded agreements are being fulfilled but no new contracts have been concluded since then.

Data-SAAB's sale to the Soviet Union involved equipment for an airport in Moscow which, in the opinion of the Americans, may be used for military purposes.

At present, the American administration is unwilling to grant any further export licences for equipment for the later production of the Viggen fighter and for a JAS project. It is very urgent for the Swedish defense establishment to make Weinberger rethink this case. But from the American viewpoint, there are also other aspects to this matter. Members of the Swedish Armed Forces suspect that there is an American political interest in making Sweden give up the production of the JAS and buy the American F-16 instead because if Sweden starts to use an American fighter system, the United States will have a better hold over the Swedish defense's future structure. In that way, Sweden will be more closely tied militarily to the United States and NATO. Such a development would of course undermine Swedish neutrality and, for that reason, this is the most important issue to be discussed during Weinberger's visit.

Government 'Satisfied'

LD182042 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Text] The official visit to Sweden of U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger ends today. Our staff has compiled an account of what happened during this visit. It seems, at least, to have been a success for the Swedish defense industry. Staffan Ekendahl reports:

The Swedish Government is certainly satisfied with Weinberger's 4-day visit to Sweden. It succeeded in making Weinberger and his closest associates understand the content of the Swedish policy of neutrality and security. American opinion is greatly bewildered about what Sweden's nonaligned policy, aiming at neutrality in war, really means. But, after having said last Sunday that there is no neutral Sweden, Weinberger has now begun to say that Sweden has a well-thought-out philosophy of neutrality. Weinberger also praised Swedish defense will and, as he says, the modern and effective equipment of the armed forces.

As for the political questions discussed, for instance the question of a nuclear-free zone, the neutron bomb and the arms race, both sides expressed views already known.

What now seems to be the most concrete result of Weinberger's visit is that the deadlock in industrial-technical cooperation seems to have been broken. For the past couple of years, the Americans have not agreed to sell any advanced equipment to the Swedish defense industry because they thought that earlier deliveries had ended in the wrong hands, in other words, in the Soviet Union. But on Friday evening, Weinberger said that the United States intends to allow General Electrics and Volvo Flygmotor together to build the engine for the planned Swedish JAS and it was also announced today that Sweden will be able to buy the Sidewinder air-to-air missile for the fighter version of the Viggen aircraft. Within the armed forces and the military industry, it is thought that is was worth making a good impression on the American secretary of defense. The deadlock of a couple of years was partly ended within 4 days.

KIPRIANOU CONGRATULATES PAPANDREOU ON VICTORY

KIPRIANOU TO VISIT ATHENS FOR TALKS 23 OCT

NC190505 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Speaking to the press last night, PASOK Chairman Papandreou referred to the Cyprus issue. The Cypriot people, Papandreou underlined, know that we are their supporters, that we understand their problem and that we are not prepared to accept faits accomplis. However, he added, the exact policy to be developed will rely upon the desire of the Cypriot people. For this reason, he added, I will meet with the president of the Republic of Cyprus, Kiprianou, in Athens next Friday before I make any other statement. With Kiprianou we will jointly consider the proper strategy for the Cyprus issue.

President Kiprianou last night communicated by telephone with Papandreou, whom he congratulated on his election victory, wishing him every success in his task. Papandreou thanked President Kiprianou and stated he will stand by his side for the fulfillment of the Cyprus cause.

Answering a question on whether he will visit Cyprus, Papandreou stated: Most certainly I consider it a great opportunity to be near the suffering Cypriot people and to assure them of the support of the Greek state and the Greek people.

LISSARIDHIS COMMENTS ON PASOK ELECTION VICTORY

NC191024 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 19 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] "PASOK's victory is not only the victory of the Greek people who have voted for change and a completely independent national policy; it is also a victory of the struggling Cypriot people." This was stressed by chairman of socialist party EDEK Dr Vasos Lissaridhis to O ANEXARTITOS in an exclusive statement.

Lissaridhis added: "PASOK's position on the Cyprus problem is a militant position rejecting the gradual surrender and indirect recognition of the occupation's faits accomplis. It is a position for an essentially independent, unitary and sovereign Cyprus and the Greek people have endorsed this line.

"We, the socialists of Cyprus, greet this victory of the brotherly PASOK Party as a victory of the world's progressive foreces and as our victory. The deep and close bonds of our parties, our common history, and struggles of our parties will constitute a strong basis for a just solution of the Cyprus problem."

Additional Comments

NC191017 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 19 Oct 81 p 10

[Text] Last evening the chairman [Dr Vasos Lissaridhis] of the socialist party EDEK stated to the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY: PASOK's triumphant victory has huge dimensions not only for the Greek area but worldwide. It constitutes a qualitative change of historic significance in the balance of forces in the area.

For Greece, it means that the Greek people are essentially taking their fate into their own hands in order to consolidate a substantive national independence, change and course toward socialism. For Cyprus, it means certainty, support of the struggle for national survival and salvation. PASOK's line on the Cyprus problem --identical to the EDEK line -- rejects the gradual indirect legalization of the occupation's faits accomplis and persists in a solution of essential independence, sovereignty and unity for Cyprus. Cyprus's Hellenism knows that instead of pressures for the acceptance of NATOite plans it will have support in the struggle for vindication.

We celebrate the victory of the brotherly socialist movement in Greece as our victory in the common struggle for socialism.

NORTH'S CAGATAY ON GREEK ELECTION RESULTS

TA191143 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has described the results of yesterday's general elections in Greece as an important development. Speaking to journalists this morning, Mr Cagatay said that future developments would be followed very closely in making assessments of the situation. He stressed that it was not a realistic approach to evaluate the situation depending on past statements made by Mr Papandreou. He stated that it would be much better to see the developments following Mr Papandreou's taking over power in Greece before making any assessments.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUME ON GOBBI'S RETURN

NC161634 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Shortly after 1400, a new meeting, which is still continuing, began at the Ledra Palace Hotel within the framework of the intercommunal talks. In the morning, Greek Cypriot representative at the talks Ioannidhis had a meeting with UN Secretary General Special Representative in Cyprus Gobbi. The meeting was attended by adviser to the talks, Mrs Stella Souliotis.

In a statement before the meeting, Gobbi said that today's meeting was not connected with his talks in New York and that it concerned a routine meeting. Gobbi rejected reports by the Turkish Cypriot press which criticize him for partiality.

Greek Cypriot representative to the talks Ioannidhis stated before the meeting that the agenda of the talks would be adhered to during the meeting. He also said that he personally sees nothing significant and that today's meeting can be considered a routine meeting.

Turkish Cypriot representative Onan stated that during the meeting he expected to be briefed on Waldheim's ideas or proposals. He also said that the statements which were made in New York and Cyprus were not constructive and helpful and added that he would like to hear the views of the Greek Cypriot side to the proposals the Turkish side had submitted.

A UN communique mentions tht during today's meeting the four subjects on the agenda were taken up successively as had been agreed on 19 August. The communique adds that a general discussion and a sincere exchange of views was made. The next meeting will take place on 27 October at 1600.

HURRIYET ON RESULTS OF KIPRIANOU-WALDHEIM TALKS

[Ziya Akcapar report]

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] -- What was expected has happened. Kiprianou has promised UN Secretary General Waldheim that he will reply to his proposals for a solution as soon as he has discussed them with the Greek Cypriot Council of Ministers and the National Consultative Council. Thus, the Greek Cypriot leader, who believes that from the Greek Cypriot point of view the wisest policy is to "play for time," is successfully pursuing his policy of delaying tactics against the UN secretary general. Kiprianou's policy of delaying tactics has been approved by the other Greek Cypriot leaders, who are watching the situation in Cyprus with caution and vigilance. However, Waldheim has called Kiprianou to a second meeting. It is maintained that at this meeting Waldheim will urge Kiprianou to say that "he agrees in principle with his views."

The first meeting between Waldheim and Kiprianou yesterday lasted for 2 hours. At this meeting Waldheim explained his proposals for a solution to Kiprianou. Later, Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis and the secretary general's assistants as well as other officials joined the meeting. During the later part of the meeting the technical details of the proposals were discussed. It is being argued that despite all the efforts exerted by the UN secretary general, Kiprianou has refused to commit himself on any of the aspects of the talks.

NORTH'S DURDURAN COMMENTS ON KIPRIANOU REMARKS

TA162105 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Communal Liberation Party leader Alpay Durduran replied to allegations made by Kiprianou to the effect that if the two sides had equality in Cyprus then a new Cyprus problem would emerge. Durduran said: The new Cyprus problem mentioned by Kiprianou will not emerge because the federation is based on ethnic criteria. It will emerge if the federation is not based on principles that take the ethnic differences as criteria and if the central administration does not abide by these principles and does not serve all the communities. A federation cannot be established by ignoring the ethnic problem.

O AGON DECRIES CRITICISM OF UN OFFICIAL

NC160955 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 16 Oct 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "Orchestrated Intransigence"]

[Excerpts] The sudden explosion of personal attacks against Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, in the Turkish Cypriot press is not a good omen for future developments. The Turkish newspapers' complaints stem from the fact that Gobbi is extending his stay in New York for consultations on Waldheim's ideas and for contacts with members of the Cypriot Government.

The fact that criticism stems from this point is an indication of bad faith. This is because, on the one hand, it was natural for Gobbi to be in New York so that he could be briefed on the consultations; on the other hand, it was natural for him to have consultations with members of the Cypriot Government at a time when the Turkish Cypriots were also in New York and making similar contacts. The fact that this criticism was published in at least two newspapers but in the same context and with the same warnings -- that is, that the Turkish Cypriots view Gobbi's contacts with suspicion and consider them as proof of UN partiality -- leaves little doubt that these reports are instigated and that the campaign is well orchestrated. In the last analysis, the campaign against Gobbi must be interpreted as an insistence by the other side on its intransigence and unacceptable positions.

Rallis Concession

[18 October Statement by Greek Prime Minister and New Democracy Leader Yeoryios Rallis--recorded]

[Text] The other day I told you that I was certain of a New Democracy victory. I fear that my forecast has been completely overthrown by the results which we have received. This is not a victory of New Democracy. It is a victory of the opposition. I would like to make the following statement: In a democracy the people decide, and the Greek people have decided. Its mandate is respected by all. I do not believe this was the best choice. I wish, however, the people will not be sorry for it. We hand over to the chairman of PASOK a strong Greece. New Democracy, from the position of the opposition, to which it was placed by the people's vote, will continue to carry out its duty to the nation and to democracy.

Election Victory Statement

[18 October statement by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou; place not given -- recorded]

[Text] Greek women and men: I am deeply touched tonight. I am primarily touched by the great confidence you have demonstrated in me. At the same time, I also feel the heavy responsibility which my aides and I now take up to fulfill the task of change. It is a fact that you believe in what I also believe; that change today is a condition for the nation's survival, for the prosperity of our people. I truly feel proud that this position, this prospect for our country was approved in such a strong, loud, clear and democratic way by the greatest majority of the Greek people.

As I have told you in my numerous speeches both in squares and on television, as of tomorrow, 19 October, hard work starts. I reiterate what I have already told you -- that if the program for the great change is to be fulfilled, if at long last the expectations of our people are to be fulfilled -- it will be necessary to have your immediate and active participation in the program for change.

We will proceed with firm steps, always seeking your consent, a broad people's consent, of every measure we adopt and we will make change tangible. Change will show its face very soon and very directly. I would like to stress that there will be close collaboration by all state representatives. As we stressed in the past, we will in no way lead the country to any form of adventure.

Our goal, our policy, will be the people's prosperity, national pride and social justice. We are determined to fulfill our program to the letter, because you have given us what we asked for -- we asked for a strong, self-supporting majority in the Greek Chamber of Deputies so that we might be able, without any hesitation, without delays, to proceed to the fulfillment of our program.

I thank you from the depths of my heart that you have given us this opportunity. I want to assure you that we will remain on the bastions of this struggle for the new Greece which we all expect, a Greece which will belong to its people, a Greece for which its people will care. Tonight we celebrate the victory, first of all the victory of the democratic institutions which won on 18 October 1981. We celebrate the victory of change. I would like to ask you, in your celebrations and your happiness, not to forget that PASOK is a government of all Greeks, that PASOK now asks our people for conciliation -- to forget the past. All together let us march forward toward the vast, great and important task of erecting the new Greece.

Greetings to you. I thank you and you must know that I will respect the convenant of honor I made with you over so many years.

Remarks to Supporters

NC182240 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2147 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Statement by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou on 18 October at his home in Kastri, outside Athens -- recorded]

[Text] Friends: "People, PASOK to power" is now a reality with the will of all the Greek people. [chanting: "People, PASOK to power"] I would like to express my great, deep appreciation for the confidence by which we were elected by the people, with a vast comfortable majority so that we can implement our program. To honor our contract with the people. [chanting] I would like to assure you that I have a sense of the great responsibility you have placed in me, and I wish to assure you that I will stay at the bastions of this struggle until our vision of the great change is carried out.

It was confirmed tonight that democratic institutions are functioning in Greece, and this is probably a great achievement for our people. I would like, my friends, to say tonight that we are celebrating. But this is a victory for all the Greek people and PASOK, and the government is the government of all the Greek people -- reconciliation, love, cooperation, reconstruction of new Greece. [chanting: "People, PASOK to power"] This popular commandment is tonight a reality and I would like particularly to thank the struggling youths, and particularly to thank the women who have, indeed, played a decisive role in this great, historic confrontation.

Prime Minister Rallis phoned me a short while ago. He phoned me a short while ago and congratulated me on my victory. And after thanking him, I requested of him that we have a constructive dialogue in Parliament for the benefit of our people and country. [applause]

We will go ahead in concord, we will struggle for the realization of our vision -- for a Greece where the people will be sovereign, for a Greece which will belong to the Greeks, for a socialist Greece. [chanting, "Greece should belong to the Greeks] We will lay the foundations for a national course, a national proud and socially fair course. Right from inside my heart I thank you. I will do everything possible to respond to your confidence.

Greetings, and we start work as of tomorrow. The people have been called to participate actively at all levels, in all social organizations, so that we may lay the foundations of the great change together, to meet the expectations and visions of so many generations together. Greetings, and I greatly thank you. [applause]

Statement to Newsmen

[Statement by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to Greek and foreign newsmen at his home in Kastri 18 October -- recorded]

[Text] This is an hour of great emoiton for me and my associates. Struggles lasting many years have been vindicated tonight with the great confidence that the people have demonstrated toward us. As we have been saying for years, our goal is change -- change within a democratic framework. Every step we take will have the people's broad consent. Our vision, national independence, people's sovereignty, social liberation -- that is, socialism -- will be carried out, step by step, within the framework of objective possibilities.

On this occasion, I would like to assure the people that we will abide by the contract of honor that we have signed with them. It is clear that the people, with their great sensitivity and following so many dozens of years of struggle, have chosen a new course, the course toward great change. This change will be tangible. Every citizen will directly feel it within a few days' time.

We have a difficult task, because the economy that we are taking over is really very weak. This is due to the nonexistent and unstable policy of the government that we are succeeding.

Tonight Prime Minister Rallis congratulated me. I thanked him and told him that I shall be waiting for him in Parliament for a constructive dialogue for the benefit of our people and the country.

I would like to stress that the PASOK government is the government of all the people; it is a government that wants to forget the past and to build on the basis of the reconciliation of our people. We are beginning a new era, and all of us must join hands in order to advance together and to safeguard our national independence, territorial integrity, democratic institutions and social progress. This is our promise tonight. I believe that the Greek people's verdict is of historical importance, and I pray that we may prove worthy of these great people.

CONDITIONS FAVORABLE FOR GENERALLY QUIET ELECTION

Government Statement

NC181920 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1825 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Interview with Greek Minister of Interior Yeoryios Dhaskalakis by Greek Radio-Television -- recorded]

[Text] [Dhaskalakis] The elections were held in absolute order and calm throughout the country. The voter turnout was very high because the weather was good. [Passage indistinct] and consequently an extension of the voting time because judicial representatives or the members of the election commissions were late in undertaking their duties. In any case, at this moment I think we are gathering the latest results from the extended voting and after voting has ended in all stations in the country in the next few minutes -- an extension which as I said was due to this delay by judicial representatives -- at 2030 the results will be broadcast.

[Question] The thing I think interests the people who are listening is in 10 minutes we can say [question incomplete].

[Dhaskalakis] That is, in 10 minutes we shall give the results, specifically, half an hour earlier than we had anticipated.

[Question] What caused the delay?

[Dhaskalakis] The delay was caused because the judicial representatives did not arrive at their posts in time and we were compelled to replace the judicial representatives with reserve judicial representatives, take judicial representatives from other nomes and send them to other nomes. Furthermore, we had to fill certain election commissions with reserve personnel and appoint secretaries in some areas where they did not exist.

[Question] Mr Minister, were the elections throughout Greece conducted smoothly?

[Dhaskalakis] The elections throughout Greece were conducted smoothly, quietly and in order. [end recording]

Armed Forces Alert

NC171538 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 17 Oct 81 p 1

[Excerpt] According to the law, the election campaign ended at midnight and today there is a ban on gatherings, speeches and so forth. Already, since 0700, the country's armed forces have been on the alert due to the elections. The alert will be lifted through a new order by the National Defense Ministry, most probably next Tuesday. Meanwhile, the men allotted to guard polling stations have taken up duty since morning, judicial representatives have arrived at their seats and everything is ready so that tomorrow at sunup the Greek people can exercise their right to vote. The last election manifestation was yesterday's speech by New Democracy Chairman and Prime Minister G. Rallis before a popular gathering in Constitution square. Once again, G. Rallis revealed A. Papandreou to be lying -- in connection with the alleged recognition of a Turkish Cypriot state by the EEC -- and expounded his party's program stressing that "it is up to you either to keep everything we have achieved through decades of efforts or blow it up in the air on 18 October."

Shooting Incident

[Text] An attempted murder was reported early today to the police by PASOK election candidate and former deputy Stathis Panagoulis. According to the report, a few minutes before 0130 an unknown person knocked on the front door of the candidate's home -- a single family dwelling on Aristofanous St, number 5 at Ellinikon [suburb of Athens] -- but before any of the residents could open the door, the unknown person opened fire. The result from the shot was that a pane of glass in the front door was shattered, but the bullet did not strike any of the residents.

Stathis Panagoulis immediately notified the police who started searching the area without having any available facts on the perpetrator of the attempt. It is not known how this person made his escape. One of Panagoulis' neighbors who heard the shot told the police that immediately after the shot he heard the noise of a motorcycle driving away. The suburban security forces are conducting an investigation.

'Terrorist' Acts Alleged

NC171749 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 17 Oct 81 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "Show of Desperation"]

[Text] In a recent statement, the government spokesman says "the government has taken all necessary measures to preserve law and order during yesterday's (last) day of the election campaign, during the election and after it."

All indications, however, point to the fact that the New Democracy leadership, faced with its certain election defeat, has recalled the methods of ERE [National Radical Union] and attempts -- to the degree that this is possible -- to implement them in an effort to cultivate a climate of intimidation and insecurity to terrorize a section of the electorate. In many parts of the country, groups of rightwing braves, acting with the tolerance or even support of state officials, have undertaken a series of terrorist acts during the past 3 days (a systematic destruction of election posters and banners of the KKE and of PASOK, attacks against KKE representatives and other democratic citizens, knife attacks, and so forth). In Ipiros we even had the appearance of hooded terrorists -- perhaps in an effort to prove the correctness of the statement of the Ipirote minister of national defense, E. Averof, that "in Greece we have men."

Over and above these terrorist acts, the government often describes as "usual incidents," and before the echo of the statement of the government spokesman died out, an all-night campaign by organized gangs of rightwing thugs was being organized and directed from a central Athens New Democracy election center. Riding in dozens of automobiles, they rode through central Athens streets, disrupting traffic, destroying posters and placards of the democratic parties and threatening and brutishly insulting everyone and everything. The calm of democratic citizens prevented the clashes which the "men" of the rightwing were trying to provoke.

These events and the way in which the government faced the entire situation are an additional proof that the rightwing's apparatus is systematically trying to promote a plan for creating disturbances at the last moments of the preelection campaign to create confusion and to intimidate a certain hesitating portion of the electorate. Terrorism is one of the "cards" used by the leadership of the rightwing in face of its desperation over the loss of its government authority. This is why it is necessary for all democratic forces to strengthen their vigilance and to keep their abolute calm in face of every provocation of the junta-fascist provocators, because such thuggery is only proof of weakness and not of strength.

Sweden's Palme Visit

NC171631 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 17 Oct 81 p 2

[Text] Chairman of the Swedish Social Democratic Labor Party Olof Palme gave a closemouthed reply to all those who for weeks had attempted to exploit his presence here and to get him involved in our country's domestic affairs -- in other words, in the preelection confrontation -- on PASOK's side.

"I consider the elections here in Greece to be a great celebration, a great rejoicing for democracy, the ideals and the rights of democracy. It is for this reason that I am extremely happy to be here at this moment, and I can rejoice with the Greek people over the victory of this democracy," he stressed upon his arrival in Greece.

The Swedish political leader, who, it is believed, will soon become his country's prime minister once again, speaking to press representatives on his arrival at Ellinikon Airport yesterday, specifically stressed the following:

"Many have said that perhaps this moment which I chose for my visit is not the most suitable one, because it could be considered an intervention in Greek domestic affairs and in the Greek election. I do not believe this is so. I believe the Greek people are competent and responsible and that they can, on their own and freely, choose those they want to choose on Sunday.

"I am, however, extremely proud because we are united with Greece through very strong ties -- ties of friendship -- and because we were united during the struggle against dictatorship. I believe that we united our souls, we united our hearts during this struggle against the dictatorship. I believe that all the Greeks who were in Sweden at that time taught us very many things about the struggle for ideals and democracy and about democratic freedoms."

Palme came to Greece accompanied by his wife as the guest of a newspaper syndicate. Today, the Palme couple will leave for Crete on holiday for a few days. Earlier, Palme gave a press conference to representatives of the Greek and foreign press.

Chairman of the West German Social Democratic Party, Willy Brandt -- who was already "programmed" by newspapers close to PASOK to attend last Thursday's gathering -- only sent a telegram to Papandreou in which he also stressed "that the Greek people are the ones to decide in the forthcoming election and that the result -- no matter which it may be -- will be respected by all foreigners."

Political observers remarked that after the reactions of Palme and Brandt, the entire attempt by certain circles to get the two socialist leaders involved in Greek domestic affairs has not only failed but that in the end it was turned, like a boomerang, against those who instigated it.

PARTY LEADERS COMMENT ON ELECTION RESULTS

[Text] At 2230 today Mr Yeoryios Mavros made the following statement:

With today's vote, the people have given an overwhelming majority to PASOK and have expressed their confidence in Andreas Papandreou. A new chapter in our contemporary history is beginning. The rightwing partisan state has come to an end, and the road is now open for the restoration of a parliamentary government and for the introduction in the country of institutions that are basic for the future of democracy. The heritage to the new government from the rightwing is heavy both in the economic field and in the field of national issues. The new government must enjoy the support of all of us so that the country may be led out of the present crisis and so that national security and the integrity of Hellenism may be safeguarded.

KKE Secretary General Florakis made the following statement: The Greek people have achieved a great democratic victory; they have taken the parliamentary majority away from the rightwing. They have secured an overwhelming majority for the forces of change and have strengthened the KKE. Basic prerequisites have been created for a new democratic course toward change. The election results convey a clear popular mandate for substantive change. The KKE has increased its strength, it has decisively contributed to the defeat of the rightwing through its strength in the polls and in all its struggles, and it will make a decisive contribution to the cause of unity of all the people for a real change in our country. Speaking to Mr Andreas Papandreou over the telephone, Mr Florakis expressed to him the warm congratulations of the KKE.

EDIK [Democratic Center Union] Chairman Zigdhis made the following statement: Nemesis has mercilessly punished those who, with such absence of a sense of responsibility, have imposed polarization and division on the nation. I pray that PASOK may prove worthy of the confidence of the majority of the Greek people whom it has conquered with its vision for change. In any case, EDIK is proud of its struggle against polarization and will continue its vigilance in order to safeguard normal political conditions and the country's international position.

KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman Pesmazoglou addressed a message to PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou which offered warm congratulations and best wishes for fruitful work for the benefit of the country.

Progressive Party Leader Markezinis stated: Those who were in power until yesterday have sought polarization through the dishonest 17 percent elections system [whereby only those parties that received 17 percent of the electoral vote could qualify for the second distribution of seats], and they have paid for it. The Progressive Party has not been taken by surprise.

Despite the lack of television and press coverage and financial resources, the members of the Progressive Party are proud, because they have waged a good struggle; and the struggle is continuing.

EDA [United Democratic Left] Chairman Iliou made the following statement: The sweeping elections victory of the forces advocating change -- with PASOK as the main force -- opens a new era for the people and for our country. EDA is proud because with the elections strategy that it charted a year ago, it has contributed to today's triumph of the movement for change. The rightwing has left behind it chaos and disintegration in almost all fields of our national life. The new democratic government of change that will be formed tomorrow will be faced at the beginning by the difficult work of reconstruction and reorganization and then of the creative development of our country. EDA will support every effort by the new democratic government for a fresh, creative national course.

PAPANDREOU GIVES VIEWS ON CYPRUS PROBLEM

NC190605 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0500 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Interview with PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou by Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation correspondeont Kostas Serezis on 18 October -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Chairman, what will be your first steps for the Cyprus problem?

[Answer] I believe that first of all I must send warm, militant, national greetings to our Cypriot brothers. I believe that the first step is meeting as soon as possible with President Kiprianou. After this meeting we will be in a position to define the exact nature of the policy that we will pursue. I indeed look forward to this meeting with the Cypriot president with whom I am linked with long, close relations.

[Question] In the past, Mr Chairman, you visited Cyprus -- if I am not mistaken, in 1964 and during Makarios' funeral. Do you plan to visit Cyprus again as prime minister?

[Answer] Definitely. I consider it a great honor to be near the suffering people and to assure them of the full support of the Greek state and of the Greek people.

[Question] Let us depart a little from the Cyprus problem, Mr Chairman. Could you tell us if you have your government ready?

[Answer] Of course, and I am ready to swear it in. I believe that we will be asked to do so tomorrow.

[Question] Would it be a little risky to ask you to announce[words indistinct].

[Answer] I cannot do this [words indistinct]. In any case, the president of the republic must know about it first and then [words indistinct].

[Question] Thank you very much, Mr Chairman, and congratulations.

EVREN EXPLAINS REASONS FOR ABOLISHING PARTIES

TA161504 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Speech by head of state Gen Kenan Evren; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] Turkish nation: All political parties in our country have been abolished as of today. It is possible to explain the situation and reasons that led the National Security Council to make this decision as follows: The very dangerous situation in which our country found itself prior to 12 September 1980 is still before the eyes of everyone and lives in our memories with all its freshness. The Turkish citizens, who lived through such extremely bitter times for years, who lost their security of life and who lost hope for their future, approved and supported, by a big majority, the assumption of power by the armed forces on 12 September 1980. In keeping with the conditions of the time, the parliament and the government was abolished, but because of our belief in democracy the only step taken regarding the political parties was to suspend their activities.

However, we expected the political party members and administrators, who bore great responsibility in creating the terrible situation in Turkey, to abide by the wish of the great majority of the nation and to realize the necessity of helping the present administration, or at least not being an obstacle to it or undermining it until a new constitution and law on elections and parties were drawn up and until normal elections were held. Unfortunately it was observed that these political party members and administrators carried out politically motivated activities by means of speeches and articles, behaved politically and they even started to fight among themselves over who would assume power. In short, they continued their behavior of pre-12 September 1980 as if nothing had happened in the country. As a result, the National Security Council adopted decision 52 and put it into force in order to insure the peace and security needed by the Turkish nation.

I stress the following point again before the entire Turkish nation: The National Security Council has never considered entrusting the administration of the country to one party or one person. Because we believe a single-party or single-person dictatorship can lead the country in undesirable directions, I have always pointed out in all my speeches that a free, democratic and parliamentary system would be established once again on secure foundations, that a completely degenerated administration cannot be repaired in a short time and that consequently we needed a reasonable amount of time. We are aware that a parliamentary democracy is a system that exists through political parties. Political parties are inalienable elements of democratic political life. Consequently, as in every democratic country which has adopted a system of political parties, the fate of our nation depends on the political parties' power, views and line of thought, and especially on their administrators' competence and honesty.

Political parties should not be establishments that weaken the state's power, that divide the state or turn the citizens into members of hostile camps. Political parties can conduct legitimate competition among themselves within the framework of the constitution and the law, by acting in line with their programs, in order to insure that state affairs and all public activities are conducted in a better way and to insure that all citizens regain their peace, security and prosperity. In other words, political parties must compete to bring a civilized service of quality to the citizens without ever causing irreconcilable differences, resentments or divisions among them.

Let us listen to our consciences now: Which of the parties and their administrators who played a major role in the nation's fate fully grasped the meaning of this duty until 12 September 1980? Which of them realized that the state structure had cracked and was beginning to collapse and was able to make personal or party sacrifices for the nation's peace and prosperity and for the state's permanence? Let us seek the answer to the following question, again listening to our consciences: Which party and which party leader set aside its or his political zeal after 12 September 1980 and preferred to wait for the restoration of the state order which had collapsed?

On the contrary, using the press and other means, they continued to slander each other, to carry out their rivalries, to organize secret meetings, to spread false reports and to try to poison innocent citizens against the current administration. They even promised positions and benefits to their supporters, as if they would assume power after the first elections were held. In this way, they made it clear that they were sticking to their habits of the period prior to 12 September 1980. The administrators of these political parties are so full of hatred for one another that no one should have any doubts that if political activities had been permitted, they would have continued along the path they knew from the point they left off on 11 September 1980.

My dear citizens, a democratic parliamentary system based on political parties will definitely be established in Turkey. However, not with these existing parties. A democracy set up by parties that caused the situation prior to 12 September 1980 is bound to collapse again, just as a house collapses if it's built with the debris of a previously collapsed building. We believe that, just as you need new material to build a sturdy building, we need new parties established in accordance with the new constitution and new law on political parties in order to establish a free, democratic parliamentary system. Consequently, and in keeping with the will of the nation, we decided to abolish the existing parties. Furthermore, we felt the need to resort to this path so that the consultative assembly could function in peace and tranquillity, safe from all influences. After the nation approves the constitution to be drawn up by the constituent assembly, a law on political parties will be drawn up. The necessary political parties will be set up in accordance with that law and the nation will go into normal elections with these parties.

My dear citizens, we have carried out step by step the promises we made to the nation since 12 September 1980. Thank God we carried out all our promises on time. Had the existing parties and their leaders been able to show the understanding displayed by the nation, had they been able to purge themselves of the hatred and enmities of the past, had they refrained from complaining to foreign countries about certain problems we could have solved among ourselves and had they refrained from trying to exert pressure on us through certain establishments in foreign countries, then maybe we would not have felt the need to make this decision. Those who were not able to do these things must go, and new parties must be established by drawing lessons from the past.

To summarize: A decision to abolish the political parties was taken to insure that new parties can remove the circle of cadres established by sterile cliques of persons who have been constant past failures and so that parties can function with persons who have no direct or indirect responsibility for the past mistakes, violence and corruption; to prevent the partisan activities that had spread to the entire state mechanism and that were based on personal interest; to enable the constulative assembly to function in peace and tranquility, free from all influence; to leave behind the political parties which could not agree even on the most vital national interests and to start a free democracy with future-orientated parties not responsible for the bitter mistakes of the past and which are far from ideological and dogmatic perversions and which can unite around Ataturkist principles.

We hope that the parties to be established will adopt the Ataturkist principles. Will draw lessons from the mistakes made since 1950 and will not lead Turkey once again to the military coups of 1960, 1971 or 1980. My dear citizens, this is utterly in your hands and is your responsibility. If you act carefully in the establishment of the new parties and in the future elections and if you elect parties and persons who will not bring back the dark situations of the past, then Turkey will always move speedily toward the better, the more beautiful and the more advanced. I extend to you my love and my respect.

[Text] Members elected to the consultative assembly will be able to apply to the special registration office at the Grand National Assembly building to receive their membership cards. The office will be open from Monday, 19 October to Thursday, 22 October, from 0900 to 1800. Members are requested to bring their indentification cards and three passport photos to complete their registration. Meanwhile, it has been announced that memberships vacated due to death, resignation or other reasons specified in the law concerning the establishment of the consultative assembly will be elected directly by the National Security Council.

DEFENSE MINISTER LEAVES FOR NATO MEETING

TA181651 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Excerpt] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has left for England by air to attend the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting to begin tomorrow. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Bayulken said issues concerning the nuclear policy of the alliance will be reviewed. Bayulken said the defensive power of NATO, which is a defense alliance, should be preserved and thus its deterrence should be kept at a convincing level. Speaking about Turkey's attitude on nuclear arms, Bayulken said: Our general attitude is to reestablish the nuclear balance without entering into an arms race and to seek sincere and realistical solutions that will create the possibility of a maximum reduction of these arms.

COMMERCE MINISTER LEAVES ON VISIT TO IRAQ

TA182019 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Text] Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk left for Baghdad this evening as the guest of his Iraqi counterpart. In a statement before his departure, Canturk said he will hold talks on the issue of developing trade relations between the two countries. Noting that Turkish-Iraq trade relations have developed greatly in recent years, Canturk added that exports to Iraq in the first 8 months of last year, which totaled $87 million, were increased fourfold during the same period this year. Pointing out that Iraq is second on the list of countries to which Turkey exports goods, Canturk said: Developing our trade relations with friendly and fraternal Iraq and our other economic relations is one of our major goals. Canturk will return on 22 October.

TURKEY, POLAND INITIAL CONSULAR PACT IN ANKARA

[Text] A consular agreement between Turkey and Poland was initialled in Ankara today. Foreign Ministry Law Department Director Orhan Kulin and Polish Foreign Ministry Consular Department Director Stanislaw (Pihla) signed the agreement. Kulin said the agreement, which envisages some facilities for citizens of both countries, is significant for the development of relations between the two countries. He expressed his conviction that it would contribute to friendship between the two countries.

CHANCELLOR CANCELS TRIP TO CANCUN SUMMIT

AU161930 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1830 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Like Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky today canceled his trip to the North-South summit in Mexico for health reasons. Kreisky's role as cochairman at this conference will be taken over by Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. The Austrian delegation will be headed by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr.

Kreisky's cancellation followed his physicians' advice. The treating physician at Vienna's Rudolfspital, where the chancellor was examined briefly today, Prof Anton Neumayr, stated that the tiring trip and a stay in the subtropical climate of the host city of Cancun would be too great a risk after Kreisky's serious influenza. The chancellor also has suffered from severe bronchitis and has been administered antibiotics as a preventive measure. He is still convalescing and is supposed to take care of himself.

QUEEN ATTEMPTS TO SOLVE CABINET CRISIS

NC171159 Paris AFP in English 1152 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] The Hague, 17 Oct (AFP) -- Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands was holding consultations here today in an effort to resolve the government crisis caused by the resignation of Premier Andreas van Agt's centre-left coalition.

Political sources said Queen Beatrix would endeavour to patch up the coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists and the Democrat 66 Party that resigned yesterday after only a month in office when the partners failed to agree on economic and social policy.

Christian Democrat cabinet members led by Mr van Agt had opposed Socialist demands over budget spending on employment.

Christian Democrat parliamentary leader Ruud Lubbers and liberal Democrat 66 leader Laurnes Brinkhorst advised the queen to appoint a Socialist mediator to settle the crisis, the sources said.

However, Socialist parliamentary leader Wim Meyer has called for the appointment of mediators from each of the three parties. But all groups advised the queen to appoint a financial expert as mediator, the sources said.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES 1982 BUDGET

[Georg Possanner report on interview with Defense Minister Otto Roesch in Vienna -- date not given]

[Excerpts] Vienna -- Defense Minister Roesch and the military have breathed a sigh of relief. The increase in the 1982 budget allotments for the army by more than 1 billion schillings announced by the finance minister will give the army the necessary funds to buy at long last modern equipment for the territorial reserve units, to fully pay for the U. S. M-60 tanks and to place an order with the Austrian Kapsch Company for modernizing the army's radio equipment. As far as interceptors are concerned, Minister Roesch is staking his hopes on the budgets of the coming years, he told DIE PRESSE in an interview.

Roesch succeeded in inducing Finance Minister Salcher to raise defense expenditures from 12.3 billion schillings this year to 13.4 billion schillings next year, an increase of almost 10 percent. This year, there were not even enough funds for adequate equipment for the militia soldiers. This will now change.

Roesch has no illusions about interceptors, stating that no funds are available for them at present. For the time being, he says, the army can make do with the "Saab 105 OE" planes -- if they are used economically, they will not have to be retired for about 6 years at the latest.

Should new interceptors be ordered, Roesch pleads in the interview for the purchase of the French Mirage -- and not only for financial reasons (the American competitor F-16/79 would cost 1 billion schillings more); for reasons connected with the policy of neutrality, after having bought tanks and artillery in the United States, one should avoid buying planes there as well.

Contrary to earlier hints, Roesch declares in his DIE PRESSE interview that he intends to stay in office as head of the Defense Department until 1983, but no longer under any circumstances. As far as his advocacy of Austrian arms production is concerned, Roesch declares that he will certainly not alter his position as an election tactic: "Young people do not vote anyhow," he says.

VIENNA PEACE DEMONSTRATION SET FOR 22 OCTOBER

[Summary] Vienna -- A politically nonaffiliated committee issued an appeal for a large peace demonstration in Vienna on Thursday, 22 October. "The appeal states that the NATO decision about the deployment of cruise and Pershing II missiles as well as the threatening deployment of neutron bombs constitute a new step in the arms race. Austria's neutrality would not, however, protect us from the terrible effects of a nuclear war in Europe." The demonstration will start at 1700 hours on 22 October at the Stafa department store in Vienna's seventh district. "The concluding rally will take place at the Amerikahaus in Vienna's first district, behind city hall."

The committee has adopted a number of slogans for the demonstration, including: "no production of neutron bombs, no deployment of neutron bombs in Europe, for early negotiations between the United States and the USSR aimed at mutual renuciation of the deployment of new nuclear weapons and reduction of the existing weapons systems, against the intensified threat by the United States to the liberation movements in the Third World," against any rearmament of the Austrian Army, against any arms exports to fascist and authoritarian regimes, for an Austrian initiative promoting the international endeavors against the danger of a nuclear war."

[The paper lists the 29 signatories of the appeal, including two prominent Austrian Socialist Party functionaries, Josef Hindels and Josef Cap.]

GDR COMPLYING WITH TERMS OF PRISONER EXCHANGE

LD200139 Hamburg DPA in German 1442 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 19 Oct (DPA) -- Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said today that the GDR had so far absolutely adhered to its agreements with the Federal Government in connection with the release of Guenter Guillaume, the spy in the chancellor's office. He was commenting on a SPIEGEL report that the GDR authorities had so far freed only nine prisoners in exchange for Guillaume.

Becker pointed out that the agreement with West Berlin was comprised of several arrangements: the exchange of agents, the release of political prisoners from the GDR and the reuniting of families. The exchange of agents has now been concluded with the release of nine persons. The agreed release of political prisoners as well as the reuniting of families, would take place over an extended period. The GDR had not disregarded the timetable.

In view of the political prisoners to be released, Becker refused to give concrete figures. Thirty-four prisoners had been mentioned including the nine agents.

POLICE MAKE ARREST IN ATTACK ON U.S. GENERAL

NC191649 Paris AFP in English 1458 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Karlsruhe, West Germany, 19 Oct (AFP) -- West German police have arrested a 27-year-old woman, Helga Roos, suspected of involvement in last month's rocket attack against U.S. General Frederick Kroesen, the prosecutor's office said here today.

Officials said Ms Roos had been part of the Red Army Faction (RAF) or "Baader-Meinhof gang" since the summer of 1980.

She was arrested after an RAF hideout was discovered in the woods overlooking the route regularly covered by Gen Kroesen, the commander of U.S. ground forces in Europe, officials said.

They said the fingerprints of two of West Germany's most wanted terrorists, Brigitte Mohnhaupt and Christian Klar, were also found at the hideout.

Gen Kroesen escaped with only minor injuries when his armour-protected car was attacked between his home and the U.S. military base at Heidelberg on 15 September.

BRANDT CONGRATULATES PAPANDREOU ON VICTORY

NC200834 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Chairman of the German Socialist Democratic Party Willy Brandt has sent a telegram congratulating Papandreou on his exceptionally (?surprising) victory, mentioning that it concerns one more step toward safeguarding democracy in Greece. In the telegram sent on behalf of the ruling party Brandt added: For your neighbors in Europe, the continuation of close cooperation will be in the interest of peace and it will also be of special significance for the future.

In addition, an official spokesman in Bonn stated that the West German Government is ready to cooperate in a friendly European spirit with all democratically elected Greek governments.

PAPER VIEWS REAGAN STATEMENT ON LIMITED NUCLEAR WAR

DW200933 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 Oct 81 p 2

[Thomas Kielinger commentary: "Practically No Limitation"]

[Text] Whenever an American politician, such as President Reagan this weekend, thinks out loud about the threat of an "armed conflict" in Europe, certain ears are cocked and suspicion is being voiced. Ah ha, say the adversaries of nuclear deterrence, war is supposed to be limited to Europe and the Americans want to exert deterrence only with regard to their own territory.

Remarkable infamy is being used here to turn a strategic equation upside down. Battlefield and medium-range weapons certainly are instruments for limited wars and naturally NATO's deterrence has included for a long time the scenario of a limited nuclear war -- not for waging it, however, but for preventing it.

Has the knowledge of strategic connections deteriorated to such a degree already that the nonsense has gained ground that by deploying TNF arms, the Americans want to buy their country free from a nuclear risk? Do people believe that the 300,000 GI's stationed in Europe have been planned by Washington to be mere cannon fodder?

Because of the fact that the medium-range weapons stationed in Europe can launch a crippling strike against the Soviets in case of an attack from the East, such an attack has not taken place so far. The president must, naturally, answer a theoretical question, by saying that theoretically every conflict could be limited. Any other answer would be nonsense. In practice, however, the American medium-range missiles in Europe mean an indissoluble linkage to America. If these missiles and thus the risk for Moscow did not exist, a European war would seem feasible for the Soviets -- and then the security of West Europe would certainly be as valuable as that of Afghanistan or Poland.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE COMMENTS ON REAGAN, CANCUN

DW191245 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 17 Oct 81 p 12

[Commentary signed NT.: "Reagan's Preface"]

[Text] Following Reagan's Philadelphia speech some people now may fear the worst for Cancun. Yet the "North-South summit" in Mexico would fail to live up to its purpose if the talks there are not frank. After all, its purpose is not to chant the old formulas over and over again but to find new starting points. This may be expected to result first of all from a debate that contains controversy. A real thunderstorm has frequently cleansed the atmosphere immediately. The Cancun meeting is not a conference on development aid at which it is necessary to decide on figures and technical details; what it involves is a round of political discussions from which the organizers anticipate political impluses. At stake is an improvement in the climate between industrial states and developing countries, the creation of more confidence and the reduction of tensions. This can be achieved only if all participants speak their minds. Reagan has started doing this even before Cancun because time will be limited there. But he is also receptive indeed to the views of others nad surely will learn something there. We must not forget that the U.S. government which he heads is still in the process of gathering experience -- in particular with regard to North-South policy.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON CANCUN CONFERENCE

DW201033 Hamburg Norddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0630 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Unidentified reporter's interview with Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher in Cancun; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Genscher] We believe that the green light must be given in Cancun with regard to opening the door for worldwide negotiations between industrial and developing countries. I don't say this just on behalf of myself or the Federal Republic, this became very clear early last week in London. I pointed this out there to make sure that the statements by the German foreign minister in Cancun will simultaneously reflect the views of the Governments of England and France as well as of the European community.

[Question] Paying lip service in matters of development policy doesn't suffice any more. Within what framework, do you think, should the worldwide negotiations be continued in the United Nations?

[Answer] These negotiations must, naturally, take place within the framework of the United Nations.

[Question] There will probably be resistance in the United States?

[Answer] You ought to take a very close look at the speeches by the U.S. secretary of state to the United Nations as well as the speeches by the American President. They did not rule out these worldwide negotiations. Naturally, I assume that the United States will not remain unimpressed by what its European partners think and want in connection with these problems.

[Question] The Soviet Union has now disengaged itself completely. Do you still hope that a state from the East bloc might eventually cooperate at some time?

[Answer] At the Vienna preparations for the Cancun summit, we supported the idea that the People's Republic of China as well as the Soviet Union should be invited -- and if the Soviet Union wants, also some other Warsaw Pact country. The People's Republic of China responded to the invitation and will thus live up to its international political responsibility. We regret that the Soviet Union refuses to participate. There is no doubt at all that North-South relations cannot be merely West-South relations, they must be North-South relations. In other words, the communist states must also live up to their responsibility.

I believe that one must be aware of the fact that we live in a world that has become smaller and where people depend on each other. In other words, help for the states of the south, for developing countries, is not some sort of sacrifice or gift to these countries, as some people believe. It also serves the interests of industrial countries for the great social task -- namely overcoming famine, need and poverty in the Third World -- to be solved. It is a world peace task in the truest sense of the word.

The challenges set here with regard to the whole world are basically the same as the industrial states had to face by the end of the last century once they realized the urgency, no part of the world -- in this case the communist world -- can exclude itself.

I do not want to indulge in hypes or wishes; all I can say is that we must repeatedly approach the Soviet Union with the expectation that it ought to live up to its responsibility regarding this problem.

CHEYSSON: LIMITED NUCLEAR WAR 'NOT IMPLAUSIBLE'

NC201130 Paris AFP in English 1119 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Mexico City, 20 Oct (AFP) -- French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson today called United States President Ronald Reagan's statement envisaging limited nuclear war in Europe "not implausible."

Mr. Cheysson, who is part of French President Francois Mitterrand's delegation on an official visit here, told reporters that "It is not implausible (to think) that there would have been a statement of this type to justify production of Euromissiles in response to Soviet SS-20 missiles."

The Soviets, he said, were "capable of neutralizing with one blow the entire European (defense) apparatus" with the SS-20 missiles, which cannot reach the U.S.

"And then, we must ask a question as to the credibility of a response at the supreme level," Mr Cheysson added.

"Would the Americans use it while the Soviets are using weapons that cannot reach them?" he said, adding that the SS-20s had ended a qualitative nuclear balance in Europe and that the Euromissiles were "indispensable" to restore that balance.

Once NATO nations decided "irreversibly" to deploy those weapons, U.S.-Soviet negotiations on arms reductions could begin.

PREMIER INTERVIEWED ON GREECE, POLAND

LD192216 Paris Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Interview granted by French Premier Pierre Mauroy to correspondents J. Sequi and Y. Bon Sergent, in the "Subjects Concerning You" program -- Live.]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Pierre Mauroy, good evening. You have just been watching the "Magazine" program with us. It is almost superfluous to ask you your opinion of the main headline of this magazine -- the victory of Mr Papandreou and of the Socialists in Greece. You must be feeling satisfied.

[Answer] Of course. We had 10 May, we had 21 May, the victory of Francois Mitterrand, the victory of the left in France. What more could I wish for a people, especially for Greece? Greece is now experiencing a great victory for the Socialist Party, a victory for Papandreou, a victory that is quite remarkable. For Greece, for what it represents, bearing in mind the serious difficulties it had in finding the road to freedom after the war, it was difficult to find democracy. And now, after a period of stable democracy, the Socialist Party is the one to have an absolute majority of seats. And consequently, although the experience will of course be different from ours, it opens up an era for cooperation between Greece and France that will be enhanced.

[Question] Can one talk about a French example, and an infectious Mitterrand effect?

[Answer] No doubt. One cannot of course explain in this way that the victory, the merit for this victory, belongs to the people of Greece. It is the people of Greece who have assured it. But I imagine that links between France and Greece are such that maybe it did play some part. In this victory, coming at the time it did and under the conditions in which it developed, and especially the way in which the election campaign took place, there are some links which are evident.

[Question] You will also have seen news on the appointment of General Jaruzelski as, at one and the same time, prime minister, head of the government and head of the party. Does this worry you?

[Answer] If you put the question like that then of course it could give rise to concern. But Poland, unfortunately, is going through a crisis, a grave crisis. The changes that are happening in Poland do not seem to have overcome that crisis. There is clearly some disarray. But I note that this General Jaruzelski is the general who opened up the dialogue with Solidarity and who, to judge by the first statements he made, wants to keep up a dialogue with Solidarity. I think that this is just a hurdle that will enable this noble country to regain relative stability, to return to the prosperity that it has lost and above all enable it to bring about changes in this difficult situation which it is now facing.

TURKISH TERRORISTS THREATEN FRENCH DIPLOMATS

LD191206 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] French diplomats in Bonn have received threats to their lives from a Turkish terrorist organization.

The threats were made last week and come from an organization calling itself "Army for the Protection of Turkey's International Rights." This terrorist group is fighting in particular against the Secret Army of Armenian Liberation. It was this secret Armenian army that organized the taking of hostages at the Turkish Consulate in Paris some weeks ago. The Turkish terrorists threatening the French diplomats in Bonn intend to exert pressure on the French Government to induce it to act against the Armenian militants living in exile in France. This, at least, is what the German paper DIE WELT alleges.

CROATIAN NATIONALIST KILLED IN CAR EXPLOSION

NC191048 Paris AFP in English 0431 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Cachan, northern France, 19 Oct (AFP) -- Militant Croatian nationalist, Mate Kolic, 42, was killed today when his car exploded as he switched on the ignition, police said.

But police said that they did not discount the fact that he was not killed by a bomb but by domestic gas containers which he often carried in his car. His wife Branca, 41, who was also in the car was only slightly injured.

Mr Kolic, a central heating engineer, came to France in 1958. Recently he told friends that he felt his life was in danger.

MITTERRAND PLANS 2-DAY VISIT TO ALGERIA 30 NOV

FOREIGN MINISTER COLOMBO COMMENTS ON POLAND

AU191555 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 19 Oct (ANSA) -- The "growth of outside pressures brought to bear on the situation in Poland" was decried here by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in a comment on the Sunday shakeup in the leadership of the Polish Workers' Party Central Committee.

Speaking about the resignation of Stanislaw Kania and his replacement by Premier General Wojciech Jaruzelski at the head of the Central Committee, Colombo said that Italy is following these developments with admiration and sympathy for that great people.

"We are following developments in Poland with bated breath and we strongly hope that the avenue of dialogue, understanding and realism will still be pursued in Poland, despite everything," the foreign minister said.

Colombo was briefed only last week on the situation in Poland in the course of consultations here with Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek.

FOREIGN MINISTRY VIEWS NEW GREEK GOVERNMENT

AU191952 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 19 Oct (ANSA) -- Sources close to the Italian Foreign Ministry expressed here today a strong hope that the new Greek Government, whatever problems it means to confront in the European Economic Community and the Atlantic alliance, will not question its full participation in the European construction or its solidarity in the context of the West.

These sources explained that the close connection which exists between restabilizing the Athens democracy, which they welcome as a victory for all free men, and Greece's full re-integration in the EEC and Atlantic context, cannot be forgotten.

The sources noted that the Foreign Ministry is pleased to recognize that Greece's membership (in the EEC and the Atlantic alliance) has brought the community an inestimable contribution with its great cultural and political traditions and the dynamism of its present policies.

Party Leaders' Comments

AU192000 Rome ANSA in English 1923 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 19 Oct (ANSA) -- Italy's leftwing political parties today expressed congratulations and satisfaction for the outcome of general elections in Greece on Sunday, which saw a victory for the Greek Panhellenic Socialist Movement led by Andreas Papandreou.

"Italian Socialists enthusiastically welcome the great success of Panhellenic Socialist (PASOK) and the coming to power in Greece of the orders of liberty, progress and social democracy," the secretary of the Italian Socialist Party, Bettino Craxi, declared today in a telegram addressed to Papandreou.

Communist Party speaker of the lower house, Nilde Jotti, expressed her "congratulations and best wishes" to the Greek socialists in a similar telegram adding her "profound satisfaction and renewed faith in democratic forces which, as a constant point of reference, have guided the sister nation Greece toward the target of liberty and social progress in a climate of peace, collaboration and reciprocal respect which is essential for all the Mediterranean peoples."

The Proletarian Democracy Party, a grouping to the left of the Communists, wrote that the "victory of PASOK in the political elections in Greece is a victory of the left alternative to the conservative government and to the reactionary politics and concession to the American administrations of the (opposition) New Democracy Party in Greece" in a press statement released today in Rome.

The tiny Italian Social Democratic Party also expressed its "sincere congratulations for the great victory" of the Greek socialists in a telegram to Papandreou from party Secretary Petro Longo. In his telegram, Longo also sent his "best wishes for the difficult and noble accomplishment of bringing Greece toward socialist democracy."

IRAQ'S HAMMADI HOLDS TALKS WITH COLOMBO 19 OCT

[Text] Rome, 19 Oct (ANSA) -- Iraq is fully satisfied with the progress of economic and commercial relations with Italy and is disposed toward increasing its petroleum sales to this country on the basis of "long-term and stable" contracts, it was disclosed here today in remarks to the press at the conclusion of talks between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and Iraqi diplomacy chief, Sa'dun Hammadi. The Arab minister, who arrived in Rome this morning for a three day visit, met Colombo at Villa Madama, the seat of official government receptions, late in the morning where the two participated in a working lunch.

Besides these assurances, the two foreign ministers also discussed the principal themes on the international scene with particular reference to the Iran-Iraq war and the present Mideast crisis. Iraq presently supplies Italy with 8 percent of its petroleum needs (160 barrels a day), and over 50 Italian companies work in the Persian Gulf state.

Colombo emphasized to the press that Italian groups are interested in concluding new contracts, in particular the construction of railroad lines and a thermonuclear center at (Medain) worth one billion dollars. A decision regarding this contract will be made next month by the Italian-Iraq economic commission, it was noted.

Increased bilateral cooperation between the two countries would be warmly supported by Italy, ministry sources noted, with an eye toward adjusting the balance of payments in Italy.

During the talks, the press learned, Colombo expressed Italy's and Europe's concern for the year old conflict between Iraq and Iran. Italy has maintained a position of full neutrality on the issue, and has expressed its hope for a negotiated solution which would bring peace to the Gulf area, an element which it considers important also for regular supplies of petroleum.

It was noted that the Iraqi minister replied that his country also wants peace but that efforts in this direction "have not found a response on the Iranian side."

In the context of the Mideast crisis, Hammadi accused the United States Reagan administration of viewing the regions problems from the cold war point of view. One cannot however fight the Soviet influence, he continued, "by ignoring the sentiments and the interests of four and a half million Palestinians, 150 million Arabs, and a billion Muslims." The Arab diplomatic head added that this is where the interest in a more active European role enters into the question.

The Italian minister, according to press remarks, assured Hammadi that a peaceful solution to the Mideast crisis is the objective of the European community and emphasized that since Israel already exists, the road towards peace must necessarily point towards a reciprocal recognition between Israel and the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO).

Colombo also reiterated that the European community took a clear position on the Mideast problem during last summer's summ't conference in Venice. That position, Colombo noted, outlined the necessity of making the Camp David agreements the point of departure to promote a wider peace process which could take other Arab countries and the PLO into account.

In this context, Colombo expressed his agreement on recent Saudi Arabian initiatives which he said should be seen as a contribution to the negotiating process. The Iraqi minister, it was noted, did not express his opinion on these initiatives, although he said they would be examined during an upcoming Arab summit conference slated to take place at the end of November in Morocco.

Colombo and Hammadi will be received tomorrow by Italian President Sandro Pertini, and are then scheduled to hold talks with Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria.

JAPANESE ECONOMIC MISSION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

OW200209 Tokyo KYODO in English 0148 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Rome Oct 19 KYODO -- Italian State Participation Minister, Gianni De Michelis revealed Monday that his government wants to dispatch to Japan a governmental mission to discuss bilateral industrial cooperation. He told a visiting Japanese economic mission that Italy wants to correct the imbalance in bilateral trade through promotion of industrial cooperation, as well as cooperation between Japan and Italy in third country markets.

In reply, Yoshihiro Inayama, head of the Japanese mission and president of the Federation of Economic Organizations (Keidanren), welcomed the dispatch of such a mission. He stressed that industrial cooperation is a good method to correct the trade imbalance in Japan-Europe trade.

The mission, which arrived from Bonn on Sunday night in the course of a three-week tour of West Europe, also met on Monday with President Alessandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria.

President Pertini expressed welcome to the mission, saying personnel exchanges will lead to opening the way for negotiations on merchandise. He revealed he hoped to visit Japan at an early opportunity.

The other Italian officials, in their meetings with the mission, said Italy hopes to correct the trade imbalance with Japan by expanding Japan-Europe and Japan-Italy trade through promotion of industrial cooperation. Japanese sources said the Italians did not imply to take such measures as restrictions of imports from Japan.

Premier Spadolini evaluated the fact that Japan had shifted its economic policy to the one laying stress on promoting domestic demand.

Inayama was scheduled to leave Rome on Tuesday to attend a meeting with American businessmen in New York. Other members of the mission will leave Rome for Ireland, the last country to be visited, on Wednesday.

MOZAMBIQUE'S MACHEL CONTINUES TOUR, SEES PERTINI

AU162012 Rome ANSA in English 1942 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Bologna, 16 Oct (ANSA) -- Recalling a 1973 visit to Italy's northern Emilia Romagna region when he was still the head of the Mozambique Liberation Front fighting for its independence, Mozambique President Samora Machel today expressed his gratitude for the sympathy and support which he received from this area.

Paying a visit to the region and the city of Bologna, at the conclusion of a three day state visit to Italy, Machel was received today by the Italian scientific research minister, Giancarlo Tesini, and again expressed his desire to extend collaboration relations between his country and Italy.

Machel's visit to Bologna coincided with a meeting this morning between Mozambique Energy and Industry Minister Antonio Branco and undersecretary for the Italian holding ministry, Delio Giacometti, in Rome. The officials from both countries, joined by the Mozambique state secretary for coal and hydrocarbons, (Abdul Magic Osman), discussed agreements for economic cooperation in the petroleum, coal and uranium sectors.

In a press release at the conclusion of their talks, it was announced that an Italian technical delegation would travel soon to Mozambique to clarify the aspects of a possible cooperation in the form of a mixed work group.

Machel, in Rome since Wednesday, ended his official visit with the signing of an agreement package for expanded technical, economic, and scientific cooperation between Italy and Mozambique.

Machel held talks again on Thursday with Italian President Sandro Pertini, joined by his foreign affairs minister, Joaquim Chissano, and his Italian counterpart, Emilio Colombo.

The four men participated in an exchange of ideas on the major themse of international politics, and Pertini accepted an invitation extended by Machel to visit Mozambique in the near future.

Machel will remain unofficially in Italy until October 19, when the Mozambique delegation will leave for Eastern Europe.

LA REPUBBLICA Interview

AU171554 Rome ANSA in English 1532 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Oct (ANSA) -- Mozambique's "natural allies" have become the socialist countries, the ones who offered them aid after the South African aggression, while Western countries did not, Mozambique President Samora Moises Machel said today in an interview published in Rome daily "LA REPUBBLICA."

Machel, who ended an official three day state visit here on Thursday, reiterated that there is no military confrontation at present with South Africa, but he warned that "if (South Africa) wants war, we are ready for it."

Referring to the political directions taken by Mozambique, Machel told "LA REPUBBLICA" that "there has been some problem in the West over our foreign policy choices, but looking at the past, you can see that our state was born out of ruins, attacked first by colonialism, and now by imperialism."

The African leader also reminded his interviewer that South Africa attacked his country, "indiscriminately massacring our population," and added that not a word of condemnation for that act, nor aid for his country, ever came from the West following the aggression. "It was in this way that we began to turn our attention and consolidate our ties with Moscow. In this way, the socialist countries have concretely proved themselves to be our natural allies," he concluded.

PCI REPORTS DECLINE IN PARTY MEMBERSHIP

AU161613 Rome ANSA in English 1554 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 16 Oct (ANSA) -- The number of card-carrying members of the Italian Communist Party, the nation's second largest party, is on the decline, according to date released by party headquarters here today.

Membership renewal dipped by 36,000 this year compared to 1980, down from 1,751,890 to 1,715,890. New members were reported at 70,000 so the total of Communist Party members who failed to renew membership in 1981 came to something like 106,000.

The decline in the ranks of the largest Marxist party in the West began back in 1978, the year the communists entered into the "national solidarity" in Parliament supporting the government majority following the kidnapping and killing of Christian Democrat Party Chairman Aldo Moro, by Red Brigades terrorists.

PCI'S COSSUTTA WARNS AGAINST ANTI-SOVIETISM

PM161057 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 Oct 81 p 9

[Report on PCI Directorate member Armando Cossutta speech at 5-6 October PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission session in Rome]

[Excerpts] In the debate within our ranks, Armando Cossutta said, there is now the opinion -- expressed primarily, I believe, by certain intermediary cadres -- that in the final analysis it is U.S.-USSR "bipolarism" that lies at the root of the troubles and dangers assailing the world. I consider this a verdict that seriously misunderstands the party's analysis and position and one that deprives you of all ability to properly understand the current negative processes and how to surmount them.

The starting point for a real analysis can only be the recognition and condemnation of the de facto U.S. "unipolaristic" will, that is, the blueprint for a clear-cut imperialist predominance in the world, which has been reflected in the postwar period in somewhat changing forms but basically almost without interruption. And it is undeniable that this will now presents itself, with the Reagan administration, with a particularly aggressive and worrying face.

The U.S. leadership groups have basically never managed to initiate or even to consistently outline a possible policy designed to seek a stable order of peace in the various parts of the world, based on acknowledging the USSR's ineluctable world role and the Third and Fourth World people's right to seek their own roads to development by moving away from capitalist market mechanisms which are destructive for them.

We can set against the logic of rearmament our own logic in favor of negotiations for a balance of forces at the lowest level. To contribute to the building of a stable order of peace, however, we must also develop a continuous initiative toward the other democratic forces, primarily the major European social democratic forces, to extricate them from the narowness of essentially corporative views of their own national interests, and to free them from the dross of an enduring and paralyzing fundamental anti-Sovietism. We would be making a very poor contribution to Europe, however, if we failed to fight to ensure that its vigorous peoples and democratic forces choose this correct camp. It is untrue that we have not made such a choice. Our choice is against the imperialist policy, for the peoples' liberation and development, for disarmament, detente and peace.

We can make a major contribution to Europe as long as our autonomy does not become anti-Sovietism, because we are capable of recognizing the USSR's role, the very objective function that it performs in support of the people's liberation movement, and on account of the very guarantee for Western Europe of scope from freedom from U.S. domination [sentence as published]. In conclusion, our friendship with the USSR is valuable to Europe, especially at a time when better mutual understanding and trust between the two sides of Europe could prove decisive in preventing the outbreak of war.

Therefore, gratuitous expressions of crude anti-Sovietism such as those pronounced by the communist mayor of Pistoia are all the more unacceptable per se and seriously damaging to our policy, and also dangerous, because of the reactions of rejection and even splittism that they prompt in our ranks.

We are autonomous -- fully autonomous -- of the USSR. When we have thought it appropriate we have criticized its decisions, actions, conduct and customs. But in the same way, we must manage to recognize without embarrassment the USSR's positive attitudes, such as those that it recently adopted toward the problem of the balance of power, starting with Europe. We must also manage to defend our autonomy from the pressures and allures of domestic and foreign forces that would induce us to take stands that are not and cannot be ours. Indeed, we would be very stupid if we decided to take such a step at the very moment when those options are proving to be outworn and increasingly incapable of providing prospects for our country and our continent.

With regard to China, I consider it useful that it has been possible recently to restore relations with that communist party. But the fact remains that the Chinese positions with regard to Europe's role, or how international relations should develop, for instance, clearly differ from ours, constitute an endorsement of U.S. policy, and do serious harm to the cause of detente. Our clear divergences with the Chinese positions must not be glossed over.

With regard to Poland, there is no doubt that there have been serious errors and responsibilities on the part of the Polish party and government -- and that a thorough internal regeneration of society and the state is needed. But it seems to me that there are some among us who are trying to ignore or dismiss the gravity of the fact -- with regard to the very aims of European equilibrium, peace and development -- that it is specifically that country's international position and socialist nature that are increasingly at stake in the conflict.

Pajetta Disputes Cossutta Criticism

[Report on PCI International Affairs Department Chief Gian Carlo Pajetta speech at PCI Central Committee and Central Control Commission 5-6 October session in Rome]

[Excerpts] Referring to Comrade Cossutta's speech, Pajetta asked: To whom were certain questions addressed? Were they general warnings? Or were they criticisms of elements of our policy? Of course, we must condemn and denounce the conflicts and tensions prompted by U.S. policy. But we have always done this -- forcefully too -- in Parliament as well as elsewhere, and Ledda did so in his introduction. We have never in any way approached the issue in terms of "confusion" or "equidistance."

Of course, we must draw a distinction, but we must also be rigorous and continuously carry forward the values of socialism, which for us are the values of social justice, freedom and peace. When we say that our stance differs from the USSR's, it is because we believe that support for the struggle of the peoples' freedom or for development must not be identified with preestablished international alignments. We say this, not in an attempt to set ourselves up as "teachers," but as comrades. Did we perhaps do wrong to denounce the invasion of Afghanistan? Even though we did not associate ourselves with manipulatory polemical distortions and urged everyone to negotiate?

A pessimistic view of international negotiations is unacceptable; if we approached them as Comrade Cossutta does, simply by attacking Haig, whom he considers an invalid interlocutor, we would unwittingly be providing the adversary with the argument that negotiations are futile, that other solutions are needed and that nothing is negotiable.

With regard to the socialist countries, Pajetta continued, those who believe that our position of clear autonomy and independence is a factor of weakness are mistaken. In fact, we receive from the socialist countries respect and a request for friendly relations that perhaps we would not have if we were not always clear and rigorous in our positions. We have political weight and esteem because everyone can see that we are not seeking "novelties" or to cause a stir, but are committed to a serious and very rigorous quest along the path of socialism and freedom. We would not enjoy the great international strength that we do if we were not the major force that we are.

CPSU MAGAZINE DELEGATION MEETS WITH PCI AIDES

PM190813 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 14 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] Rome -- A KOMMUNIST delegation headed by Kosolapov, the magazine's chief editor and CPSU Central Committee member, have been the guests of RINASCITA for the past few days and have had cordial conversations and exchanges of opinion with [RINASCITA editor and PCI Directorate member] Comrade Luciano Barca and the editorial staff of the PCI weekly. The delegation has visited Rome, Palermo, Reggio Calabria and Milan, where they had meetings with regional and provincial party organizations and were received at PCI Central Committee Headquarters by PCI Directorate members Comrades Adalberto Minucci and Aldo Tortorella, and Foreign Section Deputy Chief Comrade Rodolfo Mechini.

PCI AIDES MEET WITH CHILEAN PARTY DELEGATION

PM190807 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 8 Oct 81 p 19

[Text] Rome -- A Chilean MAPUOC [Single Popular Action Movement -- Workers and Peasants Wing] delegation headed by foreign affairs committee chief Comrade Enrique Correa met yesterday with a PCI delegation composed of Comrade Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and foreign section chief, and Comrade Claudio Bernabucci of the foreign section.

During the cordial conversations, Comrade Enrique Correa provided a full briefing on the present situation regarding the antifascist struggle in Chile and expressed particular appreciation of the PCI's commitment to solidarity with the Chilean people. On the PCI's part there was confirmation of the profound ties of friendship and solidarity between Italian democrats and the Chilean people and the Italian Communists' broadest commitment, together with all the other democratic political forces, in support of the Chilean antifascists' struggle for a return to democracy in Chile.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON UN VISIT

[Excerpts] "We have always said that we don't approve of the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, but we also acknowledge that at present, without conditions of security being created, the Cubans' departure would be suicidal," stated Goncalves Pereira, who yesterday held a meeting with journalists to report on his visit at the United Nations. The foreign minister asserted that South Africa's recent attacks "are threatening the integrity of Angola," admitted the possibility of a divergence of opinions with the Reagan administration, but emphasized that, just like Portugal, all European countries have condemned the invasion of Angola.

Andre Goncalves Pereira also made a point of emphasizing that the U.S. State Department has not as yet made public an official stance ("position paper") on the issue, adding that the departure of Cuban troops "would be desirable to enable Angola to become fully independent."

"But it is understandable that at present, because of security conditions, it is difficult for the Luanda government to dispense with foreign military assistance," he continued, also stating that the contacts he held with the Revolutionary Front for an Independent Eastern Timor [Fretilin] representatives "do not mean that Portugal recognizes that organization as the sole representative of the people of timor."

"Since the invasion of Timor, all Portuguese Governments have held contacts with Fretilin, and let it not be said that there were exceptions, since not even Prof Freitas do Amaral failed to do so," he said, stating that in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 385, Portugal recognizes the right to self-determination of the people of Timor. This was, moreover, an issue which Goncalves Pereira discussed with Kurt Waldheim during his recent visit at the United Nations.

Spain's entry into NATO was another issue broached "in general terms" with the U.S. authorities. Stances on this matter are in agreement: Every one of the NATO countries wants Spain's entry, but, Goncalves Pereira said, "none of the 15 governments nor the Spanish Government has ever expressed a desire for a unified command for the Iberian Peninusla."

U.S. participation in equipping Portuguese Navy frigates and in delivering aircraft to the air force was also discussed in general terms and it only remains "to discuss technical aspects and to implement these measures."

Goncalves Pereira also said that he has no further meeting with Alexander Haig seheduled before the December NATO meeting. And when asked about his talks with the French foreign minister, he emphasized the assurances given by the new Socialist government to the Portuguese community in France, describing as positive the staying of the procedures for expelling emigrants, which the previous government had begun.

Azores Will Take Part in Negotiations on Lajes

During his visit to the United States, Goncalves Pereira also discussed the issue of the Lajes base and the possible granting to the United States of facilities at Beja. The matter was "tackled thoroughly" with the U.S. State Department, with Vice President George Bush and in less detail also with Caspar Weinberger.

"But we are not as yet engaged in negotiations properly speaking; no proposals and counter-proposals are being put forward," the minister stressed, stating that in accordance with the Constitution, the institutions of the autonomous regions -- in this instance, the Azores -- "are entitled to take part in the negotiations." At any event, he said, "the Mota Amaral government has knowledge of the purport of the talks."

Goncalves Pereira also analyzed in detail the new U.S. defense policy, agreeing that there is a loss of balance in Europe, both in nuclear weaponry and in conventional arms. The minister recalled the NATO "dual decision," made unanimously in December 1979. He made a point of emphasizing that the government in power at the time was the Fifth Constitutional Government, with which responsibility for the agreement on the deployment of missiles in European countries will therefore rest. He said that the two meetings held between Haig and Gromyko, as well as the conference which they have scheduled for Geneva, could mean a resumption of the negotiations between the two superpowers and that within this context "Portugal does not wish to be merely an aircraft carrier, but rather a real partner."

"To achieve this, it will be necessary for us to strengthen our economic development," he continued, asserting that the United States, despite domestic restrictions, seems prepared to continue to assist our country.

The meeting with Andrey Gromyko took place at the latter's request and, Goncalves Pereira said, the two sides reaffirmed previous stances on Poland and Afghanistan and were in agreement in condemning South Africa's attacks against Angola. Gromyko expressed his government's desire to intensify bilateral relations but, Goncalves Pereira stated on arriving in Lisbon, "Portugal wants increased trade relations, although it believes that obstacles hamper the intensification of political relations."

REPORTS ON EAST TIMOR TO BE MADE PUBLIC

LD152236 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 15 Oct 81

[Excerpts] The military is to report on the decolonization of East Timor. This was disclosed this afternoon by the secretary of state, assistant to the prime minister, Jose Alfaia, at the end of today's meeting of the Council of Ministers.

[Begin Alfaia recording] Considering the need to disclose the truth about what happened in East Timor in 1974-75; considering that the existing official documents concerning this period involve figures not known when these documents were written; considering the imperative need to exorcise morbid speculation which only traumatizes Portuguese public opinion; considering the need to safeguard the prestige of the Portuguese Armed Forces, whose praiseworthy behavior as a whole should not be mixed up with the reprehensible conduct of a few isolated elements, the Council of Ministers decided at its 15 October meeting to make public the reports on Timor -- namely compiled by former Timor Governor Lemos Pires and the report compiled by the military committee especially set up for that purpose in 1975 -- in exactly the same terms as they were received by the government from the presidency. The only part which will not be released will be a proposal of sanctions of an exclusively military nature that was incorporated in the final section of the military committee's report. Implementation of such sanctions falls under the jurisdiction of bodies outside the government's area of responsibility and it was thought that the appropriate entities should decide on the possible publication of this proposal. [end recording]

PORTUGAL, BRAZIL SIGN TRADE AGREEMENT 17 OCT

PY171730 Porto Alegre Radio Guaiba in Portuguese 0200 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Text] Minister Delfim Neto signed a trade agreement today in Lisbon with the Portuguese industry, energy and exports minister for more than $100 million.

The document indicates Brazil's firm decision to grant loans for the purchase of two petrochemical tanker ships of 14 tons [as heard] each and a 190-meter dock for the Niteroi port and for the refurbishment of 3 vessels in Brazilian shipyards. In its turn, Portugal has promised to purchase steel structures, engines and components for its shipyards, in addition to equipment for mineral processing, 400 buses and 5 Bandeirantes planes.

ANDALUSIA, GALICIA ELECTIONS SET FOR 20 OCTOBER

LD192344 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] The people of Andalusia and Galicia go to the polls tomorrow to take further steps toward building the state based on regional autonomy. The electoral list in Galicia is comprised of 2,174,245 people who in a few hours' time will decide the makeup of the first parliament in the history of Galicia. The office of the civil governor of La Coruna is providing 300 buses and minibuses to take voters to polling stations in the province.

The campaign for these first elections came to an end yesterday with a confrontation between the governing Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and the conservative Popular Alliance. These two rightwing rivals will probably win the most votes in the elections for the 71 seats in the parliament. However, It is also probable that neither of these parties will get the 36 seats needed for an absolute majority.

The 16 political groupings presenting a total of 964 candidates in Galicia have spent some 800 million pesetas on publicity. One must add to this the 110 million pesetas donated by businessmen as well as the cost of campaigning for the referendum on the statute, which brings the total spent to more than 1 billion pesetas.

Meanwhile, opposition leader Felipe Gonzalez, on the last campaigning day, toured the coast of Galicia from Vigo to La Coruna. During his tour, he managed to draw four times as many listeners as the UCD leaders the day before.

Felipe Gonzalez also sent a message to the people of Andalusia, calling for a "yes" vote in the referendum on the autonomy statute, which is also being held tomorrow. Felipe Gonzalez said in his message that 20 October is important inasmuch as Andalusia is voting not for one party or another but for itself. It is casting a vote for its own land. He went on to say that voter turnout is much more important in this referendum than it would be for elections because the people are building their own future as they vote for the autonomy statute.

For his part, at a meeting organized by the UCD in Granada, Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo promised the whole support of the government to the regional government of Andalusia and to the future parliament and government.

Finally, Rafael Escuredo, leader of the regional government of Andalusia, brought the referendum campaign to a close in Almeria where he spoke about the long road the people of Andalusia have traveled toward self-government. The question being asked of Andalusia tomorrow is whether it gives its approval to the draft statute of autonomy for Andalusia, as opposed to the question in the previous referendum held in Andalusia on 28 February 1980, referring to article 151 of the Constitution, which did not signify full autonomy.

TRANSPORT MINISTER ANNOUNCES RESIGNATION

[Sigyn Alenius report]

[Text] Copenhagen -- The postal scandal in Denmark took a dramatic turn Wednesday [14 October]. Late in the afternoon, Transport Minister Jens Riisgaard-Knudsen, who is responsible for the mails, announced his resignation. Minister Riisgaard-Knudsen is one of the Social Democratic Party's most trusted men; however, he does not feel he can deal with the difficulties which have arisen. The new transport minister with responsibility for the mails will be the present Social Democratic Folketing group chairman, Knud Heinesen, an experienced politician with particularly good contacts with the prime minister. Contrary to all expectations and despite all attempts, it has been impossible to improve the mails in the last few days. On Wednesday almost 1 million items remained unsorted and undelivered.

FINLAND

DIFFICULTIES REPORTED IN EXPORTS TO USSR

LD190010 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] The rail transport of export goods to the Soviet Union is expected to start in the near future. The delays in goods deliveries, caused by a shortage of Soviet railway cars, have filled the warehouses of Finnish exporters to such an extent that temporary reductions in production have been contemplated. Finnish railway authorities have had talks on the car situation both in Moscow and Leningrad and report that more will be available in the near future.

The phenomenon new encountered in railway shipments is well known. Harvesting in the Soviet Union causes a shortage of cars for our exports to the Soviet Union. According to the director of the Railways Board, Panu Haapala, more than 2,000 carloads of goods are awaiting shipment to the Soviet Union either at Finnish railway yards or in factory warehouses. Most of these goods are forest industry products. Earlier this year the daily need for Soviet railway cars was set at 190, but now we are so far behind that the discussions in Moscow and Leningrad a couple of days ago dealt with a significantly larger number of cars.

Director Panu Haapala said: [begin recording] We had discussions in Moscow with representatives of the Communications Ministry and in Leningrad with representatives of the October Railways. We noted that for the rest of the year we will need 250 boxcars a day as well as 50 open cars. With this number of cars, we expect to be able to carry out the shipments in accordance with our trade agreement, We all agreed that the situation is serious and the Soviet authorities said they would try to deal with these matters. We expect an improvement in the next few days as most of the crops have already been harvested in the Soviet Union. [end recording]

According to Director Haapala, the situation has improved regarding container cars. The shortage of container cars has also affected transit traffic, for instance, the trans-Siberian container line on which containers are transported, especially to Japan. The shortage of boxcars especially has affected the deliveries of goods to Iran in transit traffic through the Soviet Union. Over half the railway shipments to the Soviet Union consist of forest industry products. According to T. Lahermaa, managing director of Transfennica, the transport cooperative of the forest industry companies, deliveries are running about 3 weeks late and most of the goods are being stored in factory warehouses. About 1,400 carloads of finished paper, cardboard and finished products are awaiting shipment. Managing Director Lahermaa said that another approximately 1,000 carloads of goods are being held up in production. The need for cars is further increased by the normal production program scheduled for the rest of the year, Lahermaa said.

CHINA SEEKS HELP IN REBUILDING MISSILE DESTROYERS

PM191537 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 19 Oct 81 p 6

[Desmond Wettern report: "British Missiles To Arm Rebuilt Chinese Warships"]

[Text] China has asked Britain to modernise eight of her Russian-built Luda class missile destroyers.

The refit would not cost less than 70 million pounds for each ship. New equipment would include Sea Dart anti-aircraft and anti-ship missiles, as the Chinese destroyers do not have air-defence missiles. The ships will also need new radars and electronics systems.

Being basically a Russian design, dating from the early 1950's, the destroyers do not have even an operations room to process and display all the information received from radars and submarine detecting sonar systems.

Vosper Thornycroft, part of British Shipbuilders, and the British Aerospace Dynamics Group have been named as the principal contractors for the work which will involve largely rebuilding the destroyers. It had been hoped that the first ship would be modernised at Vosper Thornycroft's Southampton shipyard, but now it is more likely that all eight ships will be refitted in China with British equipment and technical assistance.

The contract is expected to be signed before the year end, and a Chinese delegation is now in Britain concluding talks with the contractors and government officials. It is the first time that China has sought military assistance abroad since Russia cut off her arms supply following the rift between Peking and Moscow in the 1960s.

But the Chinese are not happy over Whitehall's insistence that with the first destroyer's refit, they should deal only with the principal contractors who, with the Ministry of Defence, will be responsible for dealing with the many subcontractors concerned. The Chinese feel that this arrangement increases the cost, but they believe it was insisted on by Whitehall in response to demands from Washington. Some of the sub-contractors will be supplying American equipment made under licence in Britain. Peking's decision to turn to Britain to help modernise their navy, in part at least, stems from last year's visit to China of three British warships, including the Sea Dart missile destroyer Coventry, 4,100 tons.

While in Shanghai, 500 Chinese technical and engineering specialists visited the ships, as did 500 Chinese naval officers.

L'ESPRESSO INTERVIEWS CARRINGTON ON NATO, EEC

PM161341 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 11 Oct 81 pp 63-71

[Antonio Gambino interview with British Foreign Secretary Carrington in London: "Europe? Yes, But Without Illusions" -- date not given]

[Excerpts] London -- Question: You have spoken of "organic" development [of the EEC]: I share that view completely. But organic development certainly does not exclude a clear idea of the objective at which you are aiming. Thus -- without going into a philosophical discussion — it seems to me that it is possible to say that a body can develop in an unchaotic way only if this development is governed by the idea or plan of the end to be attained. Well, what is this end for West Europe? This is the question which I think we must answer. And to do so it is necessary to clarify our position not only with regard to the USSR -- a subject on which there are no great differences of opinion among us -- but also with regard to the United States, especially at a time when that country, with the Reagan administration, seems dominated by a decidedly nationalistic tendency.

Answer: I think that Europe's independent character is beginning to emerge in an increasingly clear way and that this independence is an advantage and a source of strength for the whole West. But we Europeans should be a little more consistent than we frequently are, because what is happening is that when the Americans do not give us strong leadership we accuse them of abdicating the leadership of the free world. When, however, that leadership is very strong a shudder of horror spreads throughout Europe. Thus greater consistency is necessary, but not only from us. Indeed the Americans are a little ambivalent too. Because on the one hand they want to see a united West Europe since they understand the advantages of unitary political choices. But on the other hand they are worried when Europe really unites because they think that that might pose problems for their political initiatives. Thus both sides must make an effort to achieve a synthesis. We must understand that the United States is the leader of the free world and must play a certain leadership role but that we can influence that leadership through the growing agreement being developed among us both in the political and the economic sphere. And the Americans should take note of the fact that Europe is now a more important force than it was in the past and that, although there may be differences of emphasis, the fundamental direction of its policy is exactly the same as that of the United States.

Question: In more general terms, do you not think that if Europe wishes to defend its own political stances with greater strength and wishes to establish a more balanced dialogue with the United States, it needs to make its own presence felt in a more practical way, even in the military sphere? Indeed what influence can we have on the Americans when we depend almost exclusively on their protection for our defense?

Answer: Such an initiative would not be realistic because we all know very well first that West Europe, even if it wished to, would not be capable of becoming a military power capable of rivaling the superpowers or making its voice heard on the world political stage. It could not do so first because the European countries are not prepared to spend all the money which would be required to implement such a plan and, second, because they could defend themselves alone only if they joined together to produce some type of nuclear deterrent -- and that is unthinkable. The United States will thus continue to have the dominant position in the military sphere. West Europe's strength lies in the fact that it is becoming increasingly important economically and that its political influence is thus constantly increasing. Europe should concentrate on these factors.

Question: Why do you think that Europe is not capable of ensuring its own defense ? Does this depend solely on the fact that we are politically divided, because otherwise the situation could be presented in very different terms given that the EEC countries have a bigger population than the United States and a gross national product which is just a little lower?

Answer: In my opinion the Europeans could never have an effective nuclear deterrent. First because of Germany and the problems it raises and, second, because it would be impossible to persuade so many different countries to agree to spend a large amount of money on providing themselves with a nuclear arsenal which would be additional to the one which the Americans already possess and hence superfluous. No, I do not believe that this is the line which we should follow. I really do not think so. It would be a bad choice. Our path is an economic and political one.

Question: In view of the fact that the Pershing and cruise missiles are to be deployed in West Europe, would it not be natural for West Europe to take the initiative on direct negotiations with Moscow into its own hands instead of merely exerting pressure on the Americans?

Answer: There is no point denying that we live in a world in which the security of all depends on the balance between the superpowers. In these circumstances it is in no way unnatural for the United States to be involved in Europe's defense. The European allies' task is not to start their own separate dialogue with Moscow but to support the Americans in preparing their negotiating position. And this is what we are now doing in a series of intensive consultations within NATO.

KIPRIANOU'S TRIP TO ATHENS ADVANCED TO 22 OCT

NC201205 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] President Kiprianou will go to Athens Thursday, the day after tomorrow, accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis. In Athens Kiprianou will have talks with new Greek Prime Minister Papandreou in connection with Cyprus developments.

In reply to a question, the government spokesman said the duration of President Kiprianou's stay in Athens will hinge on the contacts he will have there.

Referring to the new Waldheim initiative, the government spokesman said it is being studied and that the Cyprus Government will not make any statement or declaration in connection with this issue.

Kiprianou Congratulates Zhivkov

NC191859 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has sent a message to Mr Zhivkov, chairman of the Bulgarian State Council, on the occasion of the 1,300th anniversary of Bulgarian state's establishment. In his message, Mr Kiprianou expresses grateful thanks for Bulgaria's firm support for Cyprus, stressing that this support is interpreted not only as the outcome of friendship with the Cypriot people but also as a proof of devotion to the ideals of justice, freedom and peace.

Mr Kiprianou also expresses feelings of deep appreciation to Mr Zhivkov, whom he will meet in Sofia soon. In conclusion, the message says that the celebrations for the 1,300th anniversary of the Bulgarian state testify to the Bulgarian people's patriotism and devotion to national independence and freedom.

KONUK RESPONDS TO KIPRIANOU EQUALITY REMARKS

TA162117 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Acting President and Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk has called on Greek Cypriot Leader Spiros Kiprianou once again to cease trying to obstruct the peace efforts and to hold serious talks with the Turkish Cypriots. Konuk was commenting on the remarks made by Kiprianou during his news conference in New York, where he said he was against the principle of the Turkish Cypriots having equal rights with the Greek Cypriots. Konuk described these remarks as regretful and said they caused concern. He said: Such an attitude is a distorted, intransigent and unreasonable attitude which tries to obliterate from memories Cyprus' recent past and the basic reasons of the problem we are now trying to solve.

RALLIS RESIGNS, PAPANDREOU SUBMITS CABINET LIST

[Text] President of the Republic Karamanlis today entrusted PASOK Chairman Papandreou with the mandate for the formation of a government. Papandreou went to the presidential mansion at 1130 and had a 2-hour talk with President of the Republic Karamanlis. The PASOK chairman gave the list of his Council of Ministers to the president of the republic for his consideration. The swearing in of the government under Papandreou will take place tomorrow at 1100. Papandreou received a warm reception during his arrival and departure from the presidential mansion by a crowd of people that had gathered.

Earlier, at 1030, Prime Minister Rallis went to the presidential mansion and submitted his government's resignation to the president of the republic.

PRESS EDITIONS' COVERAGE OF ELECTION RESULTS

NC192006 [Editorial Report] On 19 October, six Greek-language Athens newspapers, which normally do not publish on Monday, came out with special election editions with extensive individual and team reports on the conduct of the election and its results, accompanied by extensive pictorial material. Of these, RIZOSPASTIS came out with both a special and a regular edition.

Special Editions

Athens TO VIMA combined its special edition with TA NEA. TA NEA's regular edition was scheduled to "appear a few hours later" with "special additional reports and the latest election results."

Under a front page banner headline, bracketing a picture of Papandreou waving, the paper proclaims, "At long last, change -- and all-powerful government." The paper carries a boxed editorial: "The People Enforce Change" in which it stresses, among other things, that "the Greek people confirmed their reputation that at critical moments they know how to enforce change with courage and without any half measures," concluding, "the people have expressed their mandate, PASOK will see things through." The front page also carries a boxed section with PASOK's emblem of the green sun with percentages of votes and seats won and Papandreou's statement on the results. Page 7 carries party leaders' statements.

Athens I KATHIMERINI carries a report on the election under the banner headline "PASOK To Form Self-Supporting Government -- Rallis: New Democracy Will Conduct Responsible Opposition." The front page also carries boxed election results and percentages over an editorial entitled "The Law of Democracy," which focuses on the democratic law on succession of parties in authority in obedience to the peoples mandate and which concludes with congratulations to the winners. "The time for analysis of the results will follow," the editorial also states.

Also on its front page, the paper reports concern of the small parties over the polarization which will result from the election. Only three parties, New Democracy, PASOK and the KKE, are represented in the Chamber of Deputies. The party leaders' statements are also reported on page 1.

In its page 5 editorial, I KATHIMERINI stresses that while the Greek elections are being reported, tension mounts in Poland and the Middle East, in Egypt and the Sudan and it analyzes these crises. It then continues, "We, who are so near to these areas... will be the first to suffer any consequences of any dangerous increase in tension. This is the reason why we must overcome the disorientation caused by the election as soon as possible, ans we must view international developments with wisdom and the requisite attention."

Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS carries the banner headline "Papandreou To Form a Self-Supporting Government — as a Result of Mistakes Committed by the Karamanlis Policy." The paper also gives boxed election results and percentages. In a boxed editorial entitled "In Face of the New Reality" the paper says that "The new era starts for Greece today. PASOK did not conceal its intentions. Its program caused much concern and numerous questions. It is Papandreou's duty to deny them. What is needed now is wisdom and responsibility." Concluding, the editorial states it will continue to conduct responsible criticism.

The newspaper also carries Papandreou's statements on its front page and reports on the orderly conduct of the election. Most of the paper's space is devoted to other affairs.

Athens AKROPOLIS carries an article which quotes Rallis' statement in its page 1 banner headline, "We Will Hand Over a Strong Greece to PASOK," and which quotes from Rallis' "exemplary" statement conceding defeat and other statements by Papandreou, also giving eection results and percentages. The newspaper stresses that only three parties will make up the Chamber of Deputies.

Athens RIZOSPASTIS, in a front page banner headline, proclaims "A Start on a New Course -- Clear People's Mandate for Basic Change." Under it, the paper carries a report on the process of the election and the various statements made by party leaders, including the statement made by KKE Secretary General Florakis, together with reports on election percentages and the people's jubilation over results. RIZOSPASTIS carries no editorial on the election.

Athens I AVYI declares in its front page banner headline "Yesterday the People Swept the Right Away. Change Must Now Become a Fact -- The Chamber Will Be Poorer as a Result of the Absence of the KKE-Interior." Also on the front page, the newspaper carries statement by the executive office of the KKE-Interior Central Committee under the headline "The Government Must Rely on All Forces Which Support Change." The statement condemns polarization and concludes that "The KKE-Interior will, under all conditions, remain on the frontline of the battle for the resurrection of Greece... the battle continues."

Regular Editions

Athens RIZOSPASTIS, which is nearly identical to its special edition, carries the banner headline "A Great Victory -- A Clear Peoples' Mandate for Basic Change." It gives Florakis' message and election results in percentages. The paper's eight pages are nearly exclusively devoted to the election. No editorial is carried.

Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA carries the banner headline "Resurrection -- PASOK 48 Percent -- Andreas' Victory, National Concilation." On its front page the paper carries boxed reports on results and percentages. No editorial is carried.

Athens MESIMVRINI carries a banner headline "Sweeping PASOK Victory" under pictures of Rallis, Papandreou and Florakis, accompanied by their party percentages. In a boxed editorial the paper stresses "The people expressed their confidence in PASOK. They chose a risky instead of a safe course... This is not the proper time to analyze... it is the time to respect the institutions of democracy and the people's mandate." The editorial also emphasized the wisdom demonstrated by both Rallis and Papandreou in their statements.

Athens AVRIANI's front page banner headline states "We Have Won. A PASOK Triumph," and adds the headline "Rallis Was Made Ridiculous as a Result of His Wife's Deals and Swindling."

GEN KENAN EVREN ON TOUR OF EASTERN PROVINCES

TA191238 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1200 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Ankara, 19 Oct (AA) -- Head of State Gen Kenan Evren left today for Malatya, the first step of his 3-day southeastern Anatolian tour. General Evren is being accompanied by other members of the National Security Council, the prime minister and ministers of industry and public works. General Evren will visit, after Malatya, Elazig, Batman, Diyarbakir and Urfa.

General Evren will lay the first stone today at the highway bridge on the Euphrates River which will link Malatya and Elazig provinces, and a railway bridge at Karakaya which will enable transportation between the regional centers and villages around the artificial lake created by the Karakaya dam. He will also observe "The Country Is Grateful to You (Ataturk) 81" military exercise in Batman.

On 21 October, General Evren will lay the first stone at the derivation tunnels at Ataturk dam construction site and open to service the new installations of the Diyarbakir faculty of medicine which includes a 1,050-bed training hospital. General Evren will return to Ankara late 21 October.

Ceremony in Malatya

TA191240 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1225 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Malatya, 19 Oct (AA) -- Head of State Gen Kenan Evren laid the first stone to the Euphrates railway bridge, one of the longest in the world, to link two sides of the Karakaya dam lake in a ceremony today in Malatya, the first step of his 3-day tour of southeastern provinces. In a speech during the ceremony, General Evren said Turkey had been facing an energy shortage which would be eliminated to a great extent when the Ataturk dam starts to function. Construction of the dam will start with a ceremony to be attended by General Evren on 21 October. "What matters is not building dams but thinking ahead about the situation in 50 or 100 years. The speciality of this bridge is the fact that every aspect of it has been realized solely by Turkish workers and contractors, General Evren said, adding that he was proud of the success of Turkish contractors abroad, "proven to the whole world."

Turkey had a 27 billion kw hours of energy shortage which would rise to 60 billion kw hours in 1987, General Evren said, stressing the electricity shortage. "The Karakaya dam, which has led to the construction of this railway bridge, will produce annually 7.5 kw hours of energy which will be still insufficient, with Ataturk dam, the construction of which we will start day after tomorrow, to meet the energy deficit in the future," General Evren said.

Speech in Elazig

[Public address by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Elazig on 19 October -- recorded]

[Text] As you know, a few days ago we decided to disband the political parties which are greatly responsible for the situation created in Turkey. We did not at all wish to make such a decision. However, I explained the reaons on radio and television. We had no other choice. Now, I am asking you -- didn't the then existing parties encourage the anarchy, terror and the secessionists? Didn't some of the members and administrators of leftist party [as heard] protect leftists and secessionists? Didn't some members and administrators of rightist parties protect and encourage rightwing anarchists and terrorists, claiming that they were nationalists?

Didn't some parties identify with our Shiite citizens and other parties with Sunni citizens, thus dividing our citizens? My dear citizens, aren't Shiites and Sunnis, leftists and rightists the children of this nation? Why should enmity be sown among them? I said that political parties cannot be establishments that destroy and divide the country and that sow seeds of enmity among the citizens. They can engage in normal competition only within the framework of the authority given by the Constitution and the laws. This can be compared to a football game. Two teams confront each other. One is the winner and one the loser. Then, these players extend their arms and remain friends. This is the way parties should get along with one another. However, they have become enemies. Citizens were turned into enemy fronts. This being the situation, it was obvious that foreign forces that were waiting for just such an opportunity would have profited from it, which they did.

My dear citizens, when I was the chief of the General Staff, I told the authorities that our country was being transformed into an arms depot, that arms were continuously being smuggled into the country and that searches were conducted in certain regions as a preventive measure. However, I was not able to carry out the searches. We were almost on the brink of a civil war because the citizens would have been disturbed. As though this were not enough, they attempted to pressure us through foreign parliamentarians, in other words, through the European Parliament members. As I have stated in my speeches in Konya and other provinces, despite the fact that I pointed out that party administrators and members of the previous stage would not be able to participate in the next elections, the European Parliament attempted to pressure us by saying that these politicians will have to participate in the next elections if Turkey is to remain within the parliament. We -- as I have pointed out many times -- will make a transition to a parliamentary democratic system, however, not according to their wishes but when it suits the Turkish nation.

Now, my dear citizens, there should be no interference in the interal affairs of a nation, a state. If such pressure is applied [words indistinct] their economic aid. We know how to be self-sufficient. This is not friendship. This is not called friendship. In other words, this means: take these parliamentarians, put them again into the parliament, let them continue to fight one another and let Turkey once [illegible] situation prior to 12 September. This is not friendship. We did [illegible] these parties and parliamentarians to a special court such as the one established on 27 May [1960]. Why? Because according to the laws in force at the time these parliamentarians were in the parliament, the statements made in parliament or made at rallies or election speeches did not constitute a crime. In other words, we did not set up courts by enacting a law that said that these speeches constituted a crime. However, we saw fit to punish them in this way: We said for at least the first phase they can not enter parliament. This is enough for them.

In the near future, a day after we return from this tour, the constituent assembly, the consultative assembly will begin its activities. There are many valuable citizens among its members. As you know, there are also many valuable citizens who could not join the assembly because out of 11,640 candidates only 160 were elected. However, when necessary we will resort to the help of these other valuable citizens who could not be members. We will listen to them and ask their opinion at committees.

I thank these 11,640 citizens of our nation in your presence.

PRESS ON CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY, GREEK ELECTIONS

TA191232 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1125 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] Ankara, 19 Oct (AA) -- The victory of PASOK in the Greek general elections is on the bannerlines of all national dailies Monday, but editorial comment differs:

MILLIYET's columnist Mehmet Barlas writes about the week (?that) was. Noting that the last part of the past week was full of developments, first dominated by the composition of the consultative assembly, and later by news about the dissolution of political parties, he says the public is now asking questions; it is wondering whether the move to close down all parties is a sign of getting tough or not. It is wondering who the new members are because it does not know them. Nevertheless, the bad images of the past parliament are still fresh in minds; a parliament which was (unable to elect a president and a parliament which did nothing despite the military's repeated warnings that it would come.

The people support the 12 September operation and its leaders, but let us not forget that this is a support without a dialogue and without a probing; we hope the assembly will fill this gap. That was Barlas in MILLIYET.

In CUMHURIYET, Ali Sirmen writes about elections and Turco-Greek relations. He says Turkey has no territorial claims against Greece, but wishes to preserve her rights in the Aegean. Thus, it can take no sides in the Greek election battle, but must simply make herself clear to whatever party wins the elections.

In TERCUMAN, an unsigned commentary says that Turkey should return to parliamentary democracy as early as possible.

GOVERNMENT DENIES INVOLVEMENT IN CYPRUS TALKS

TA161049 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Text] It has been announced that Turkey is not a party to the Cyprus intercommunal talks but that it supports the constructive attitude adopted by the Turkish Cypriot community for the solution of the problem.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman expressed this view at his weekly news conference when he replied to questions by journalists regarding the statement made by the leader of the Greek Cypriot administration, Kiprianou, in New York. Kiprianou said that developments in the intercommunal talks were being prevented because the Turkish Government failed to make the necessary political decisions. Akiman said that there was a basic error in Kiprianou's statement because Turkey is not a party to the intercommunal talks. Akiman said: Turkey has always supported and encouraged the talks between the two communities in Cyprus. In the same manner, our government appreciated the submittal of concrete and comprehensive proposals on 5 August 1981 with the goal of achieving substantive developments at the intercommunal talks. Our government has supported this constructive attitude of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Akiman added that the fact that the leader of one of the parties to the intercommunal talks makes such statements at a time when sincere efforts should be exerted to keep alive the process of the Cyprus talks is not a positive attitude. Akiman said: Our wish is that the parties involved devote all their attention to the intercommunal talks and that they continue this process to reach a just and lasting solution.

HURRIYET CALLS FOR ARMENIAN PATRIOTIC LOYALTY

NC200735 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 18 Oct 81 p 6

["Sunday Conversations" column by Bedii Faik: "We Are Still Waiting"]

[Excerpts] The American Jews have decided to erect a memorial in Washington so that the German massacre of the Jews might not be forgotten. As you know, the Armenian conspirators seized this opportunity and went into action in order to secure a corner of this building for displaying the so-called Turkish massacre of the Armenians!

Initially, they managed to have one of their wicked representatives included on the committee which had been set up. But they were unable to go beyond that; Jewish wisdom lost no time in sensing this intrigue; and not only the Jews in the United States but also those in our country took necessary action. I deem it useful to particularly stress the efforts of our Jewish compatriots in Turkey in exercising their influence on the committee in Washington, without undue delay, to foil the Armenian plot by explaining the Armenian intentions. True, they did this without showing off and without acting in a conceited manner, but one feels the need to point out this community's patriotic loyalty to another community in the most impressive manner.

I do not mean that the Armenians in Turkey should be molested in any way. I do not suggest that the Armenians in Turkey should be linked with the villainy of their kinsmen in other countries. But let them be fair! Would it be too much to expect them to at least take as much action and to at least show as much awareness as our Jewish compatriots have?

FORMER NSP LEADER ERBAKAN RELEASED FROM PRISON

[Text] Istanbul, 19 Oct (AA) -- The death penalty was demanded for 20 defendants out of 32 inthe THKP-C Savascilari (an illegal leftist organization) trial which started today at the martial law court. The defendants are charged with killing 12 persons including the former director of the political crimes department of the Istanbul police organization, Ilgiz Aykutgu, slain on February 6, 1979.

VOTCP COMMENTS ON NEW CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY

TA170734 (Clandestine) Voice of the Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 17 Oct 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] Dear listeners, the military junta has announced the names of members selected to the consultative assembly. It is a known fact that this is an assembly with no authority. It has no power to make decisions and enact legislation. The laws will again be enacted by the 5-man National Security Council as in the past. Though the assembly will discuss -- within certain conditions -- the draft laws, the military junta will have the last say.

In its statements, the Turkish Communist Party (TCP) pointed out that the law for the establishment of the constituent assembly would be only a step for passing from the open military dictatorship into a so-called parliamentary, but in fact oppressive and authoritarian rule in which democratic liberties would be extremely limited. Following the announcement of the names of the members of the consultative assembly, the truth of these statements were proved once more.

The names of members to constitute that assembly prove that the military junta has no intention of restoring the democratic system and allowing criticisms. Those who refused to act, waiting hopefully for the military junta's return to the so-called democratic path, must now reassess their stand. The TCP recalled that to keep quiet in the face of developments would only serve to intensify the present pressures and exploitation and increase the dangers.

Dear listeners, on 15 October, the names of the consultative assembly members were disclosed. The same day, an interesting incident occurred in the NAP trials. As a result of the intensified pressures and impositions of the most reactionary and pro-American circles, the judges trying the terrorists of the NAP were withdrawn from the trials. This step demonstrated that the military junta began to deviate from its aim to struggle against terrorism. These two incidents appeared the same day in the Turkish press.

Dear listeners, these developments openly expose how much the military junta is afraid of the democratic system. The military junta, on the one hand, announces the names of the members of the consultative assembly; on the other, it is insinuating through these names that it has no intention of consulting that body.

The military junta cannot trust even such a consultative assembly. It has already enacted a large number of laws. It is hurriedly trying to enact some more important laws before the assembly convenes. What is the military junta worried about? Is it worried about the assembly it established? No, dear listeners. The junta is worried that it will be more and more difficult to prevent criticisms. The fact that political parties, whose activities were suspended on 12 September 1980, have been now completely dissolved is a sign of this worry. The military junta will not allow even a semblance of a climate of free discussion. It is worried that workers, peasants and the progressive democratic circles might openly express through their words and deeds that they do not trust the transition to the so-called democratic system.

The consultative assembly will have no powers to enact any legislation. A question comes up in this connection; will this assembly with no such powers be able to conduct free discussions? No representatives of the people and the democratic forces are included in the consultative assembly. However, there are quite a number of members who support NATO and the exploitation of the monopolies. Thus, the most reactionary pro-American circles will try to pressure the new assembly as they have done in the case of the NAP trials.

Dear listeners, we will soon witness with our own eyes whether the consultative assembly will be open to free criticisms. However, the names disclosed have already caused disillusion among those who believed and waited without a word or act that the military junta would provide a transition to the democratic system.

VOTCP CRITICIZES DISBANDING OF POLITICAL PARTIES

TA180739 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Station commentary: "On the Decision of the National Security Council To Abolish the Political Parties"]

[Text] On 16 October, the National Security Council announced that it abolished all political parties and seized their properties. This resolution is a new development demonstrating that all promises made by the reactionary military dictatorship for a transition to the democratic system are unfounded. With this decision, pressures on progressive democratic forces have reached a new level. The fact that the junta administration had dissolved the RPP in addition to workers parties like the Turkish Labor Party and the Turkish Socialist Workers Party -- a number of whose members and officials were detained -- proves that the junta administration has no intention of according to the democratic forces any right of expression in the system it is trying to set up. This decision has openly demonstrated the truth of Turkish Communist Party [TCP] statements that the present rule is a reactionary and rightwing dictatorship and that a transition to the democratic system is impossible under the prevailing junta conditions. The fact that with the same decision parties like the reactionary, pro-American and anti-people Justice Party and the NAP have also been dissolved does not in any way favor democracy. Taking into consideration that the junta administration has treated equally the antipeople Justice Party with the prodemocratic RPP has only served the interests of the most reactionary, pro-American and monopolist forces. At a time when the progressive and patriotic forces are under severe pressure, these forces that have supported and defended antipeople parties like the Justice Party and the NAP will not have much to lose from their effectiveness.

On the contrary, every decision which intensifies oppression on the progressive democratic forces enhances their positions. The latest developments in the NAP trials are an example of this fact. As a result of pressures and impositions by those most reactionary and pro-American circles, two judges have been forced to withdraw from the NAP trials and the trial has thus been disrupted. This constitutes a new step in efforts by the most reactionary and pro-American forces -- which have extended their influence into the junta as well -- to (?obstruct) the NAP trials and to save the murderers.

Meanwhile, the new consultative assembly announced by the junta has been kept closed to representatives of the working class and the toiling people. However, the representatives of the collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie, which has supported for years the now disbanded Justice Party and the NAP, using them as its own tool, have been selected to the junta's consultative assembly. The junta administration claims that it has disbanded all political parties in a bid to remedy the political crisis that brought the opeation of 12 September 1980. However, the basic condition for the total elimination of the political crisis is the establishment of a genuine democratic atmosphere and the restoration of all the democratic rights and liberties of the working class and the toiling masses. Today, more than ever it is completely clear that it is out of the question to create such a democratic climate under the current conditions imposed by the junta administration, which makes concessions to the defenders of the fascist NAP, which closes the doors of the consultative assembly to the representatives of workers and toilers, which treats the Justice Party and the RPP in the same way, which grossly tramples upon the rights of workers and trade unions, and which intensifies its pressures and tortures on the progressive and patriotic forces.

The last decision by the junta administration closing down all political parties in Turkey should serve as a warning to those who believe in promises of a return to democracy and to those who had other unfounded hopes. Democracy is restored only through a struggle waged for its sake. As the TCP has always stated, the unity of action in a front of all national and democratic forces is the only power that can open the way to a return to democracy.

BILEN MESSAGE SENT TO WEST BERLIN COMMITTEE

TA181015 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 18 Oct 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the 61st TCP anniversary celebration committee in West Berlin 17 October -- read by announcer]

[Text] To the 61st Turkish Communist Party [TCP] anniversary celebration committee in West Berlin: Dear Comrades: On behalf of the TCP Central Committee, I greet all the participants to the meeting organized to mark the 61st anniversary of our party. The convening of such a meeting in West Berlin at a time when our country is experiencing such difficulties contributes greatly to the struggle being waged by our people for the sake of peace, national independence, democracy and socialism.

The military junta which has been in power now for more than a year has not been able to solve any of the fundamental problems facing our country and our people. On the contrary, in accordance with the interests of imperialism and the collaborationist and monopolist bourgeoisie, it has imposed a reactionary military tyranny on our country and people. This resulted in the exacerbation of the difficulties.

It is clear that despite its efforts to hide the oppressions made through fascist methods on all the progressive and patriotic circles under the guise of struggling against terrorism, the junta administration has not been able to successfully curb terrorism. The latest developments in the trials of the NAP -- whose involvement in terrorism has been proved by numerous documents -- and the concessions made by the junta administration to the most reactionary pro-American circles, have exposed the junta's weakness in the struggle against those responsible for terrorism.

The junta administration has directed its main attack against the progressive and democratic forces, the working class and the toiling masses. Those supporting peace and democracy were detained and oppressed. Tens of thousands of persons have been and are still being subjected to barbaric tortures in prisons. Through such measures, the junta administration is disarming our country and our people in the face of new threats.

The present U.S. imperialists' policies of extreme armaments, increasing international strains and confrontation are threatening world peace. Efforts by the U.S. administration to achieve military supremacy is dragging our country to the brink of a nuclear war. As usual, the U.S. administration is trying to hide its preparations against peace and mankind behind the lies of a Soviet threat.

As pointed out by CPSU Secretary General Comrade Brezhnev, there is no task more important than preserving peace among the world peoples. This is true for the Turkish people as well. The U.S. imperialists are increasing tension in our region of the Middle East and eastern Mediterranean. They are intensifying their pressures and impositions on our country in a bid to use our soil more effectively as an aggressive base and springboard against the neighboring socialist countries and the Arab and Islamic world. They are exerting efforts to disrupt our relations with all the neighboring countries. The forces supporting the adventurist policies of U.S. imperialism extend their influence into the ranks of the junta administration. This situation in which all the basic democratic rights have been eliminated, all the democratic and peace-loving forces have been subject to grave pressures, confronts our country and our people with great danger.

Our people are against the war threat which is instigated by the imperialists and their collaborationists. They want peace, they want to live. They are supporting links of friendship and cooperation with all our neighboring countries. Our people are after jobs and a living. They support democracy. No one can impede the fight being waged for this purpose.

Despite the heavy losses it suffered as a result of the attacks of the rightist and reactionary junta administration, the TCP supports with all its might the struggle being waged by our people, taking its place among the first ranks. The TCP is still living on and fighting. As its past of 61 years has proved, the TCP is indestructible. The TCP, the Leninist party of the likes of Mustafa Suphi and Ethem Nejat [names of first founders of the TCP] has its place in the bosom of the working class and the mass of toilers. The TCP is an inseparable part of the international communist movement.

Those celebrating their victories over the TCP soon are being forced to deal again with out party and its militant ranks. They conclude: It seems we have not been able to eradicate the TCP. We will have to intensify our attack.

The plenum held by the TCP brought joy to our supporters and caused worries among our enemies, the party plenum served to further strengthen our party's ideological, political and organizational unity and the party's democratic centralization. It boasted the discipline among the party ranks. It is these powerful arms of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism that frighten the ruling classes. Attacks directed against the TCP only demonstrate the power of our party, the truth of its policies based on the unity of action of all the national and democratic forces in a front -- which is the only realistic way out of the deep crisis being experienced in our country.

Dear friends, since you are involved in the struggle being waged by our people, great and important tasks await you though you are thousands of kilometers away from your motherland. The struggle you are waging in West Berlin with the German peace-loving forces against the U.S. imperialists' efforts to deploy new death missiles in Western Europe and to manufacture the neutron bomb contributes to the struggle being waged by our people against U.S. imperialism -- their main enemy. Efforts being waged in favor of the constructive peace offers of the Soviet Union -- the main defender of peace -- are completely compatible with our country's interests. The self-sacrificing efforts you are exerting in solidarity with the Turkish people, who are suffering under the oppression of the junta administration, are contributing to the alienation of the military dictatorship in Turkey, and are serving to support the struggle of the forces fighting for the sake of democracy. The solidarity bridges established through your efforts between the Western European democratic and peaceful forces and the Turkish people are contributing to the struggle being waged for our country's bright future.

The fight being waged against the pressures and implementations of the junta administration -- which considers our workers employed abroad only as machines that provide foreign exchange for the country and which does not care for any of their problems -- is a part of the struggle you are waging in West Berlin against the West German monopolies and the multinational imperialist firms and in favor of the German working class.

The warm relationship we maintain with the German Communist Party [DKP] and the DKP's relentless and devoted struggle in favor of both German and guest workers contributes to the development of these activities. As in the past, the TCP's organizations abroad will continue to support you in your struggle. With our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General I. Bilen. [dated] 18 October 1981

OFFICIALS, PRESS REACT TO REAGAN STATEMENT

Becker Remark

DW200923 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1650 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] This afternoon in Bonn, Government Spokesman Becker clarified the statements by President Reagan, based on papers supplied by the White House.

[Begin Becker recording] This clearly shows that the President was concerned by several things, for example, the need for the West to be capable of deterrence on all levels and the fact that unfortunately the Soviet Union -- unlike the United States -- believes that once started, nuclear war can be won. This is an approach which the Americans do not share. And finally, the U.S. President gave a hypothetical answer to a hypothetical question in this case as well. He began his answer by saying: Frankly, I don't know. [end recording]

CDU, SPD Spokesman

[Text] Bonn, 20 Oct (DPA) -- The Christian Democrats have rejected the Social Democrats' criticisms of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's statement on nuclear deterrence. CDU defense expert Willi Weiskirch said on Tuesday at his party's press office that the "well-nigh hysterical reactions" which Reagan's statement produced among SPD politicians allows one to see the level of uncertainty currently plaguing their defense policy. The form of the NATO deterrent strategy, which consists of a "flexible defense reaction," has been in force since 1967 and has never "given rise to such farfetched speculations and fictions" as are being stirred up against Reagan in the SPD now.

For the SPD, Hermann Scheer said that Reagan has "given notice of the end of present NATO doctrines." The U.S. President has "canceled" the U.S. nuclear deterrent strategy for Europe with his remarks. The remarks make it clear "that we are already living in a situation in which Europeans -- and in this instance, above all the Germans -- can be made to bear virtually all the risk of war." Scheer stressed that a German right of veto on the use of American nuclear weapons from German soil must be demanded. Plans for the establishment of a defense structure in Europe must be pushed through, plans that would make it possible to renounce the use of tactical nuclear arms.

U.S. security adviser Richard Allen told DPA that the United States is still following the NATO doctrine of flexible deterrence. Reagan's hypothetical answer to a hypothetical question about the possibility of a limited nuclear exchange with nuclear field weapons could in no way be construed to mean that the President is counting on a limited nuclear war.

FDP's Moellemann

DW201129 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1215 GMT 19 Oct 81

["Excerpts" from reporter Kroenig interview with FDP Bundestag Deputy Juergen Moellemann; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Moellemann] I think it is quite normal for such a disputed issue as nuclear strategy to be repeatedly debated over and over again and for one to examine whether the current strategy corresponds to our security interests -- the security interests of the Western alliance as a whole and of the Europeans belonging to the alliance.

I think it is also normal for such statements, as that made by President Reagan, to touch off controversy. Making the statement that a possible reaction to an attack from the East could be limited to the European area of the conflict is not wise. On the other hand, however, the statement takes the simple fact into consideration that no one -- either in Europe or America -- necessarily plans to respond to every very limited attack with the full destructive force of all existing nuclear weapons. That would be irrational.

[Question] But an increasing number of things indicate that the Americans are tailoring their strategy in such a way -- at the moment with the planned NATO counterarmament in medium-range missiles -- so as to become directly involved in case of nuclear war as late as possible, if at all.

[Answer] I consider that a possible interpretation which has arisen in the critical debate. After the discussions of the NATO meeting in Munich, however, the other variant seems more convincing to me, namely, that deterrence, the prevention of war, must be made so plausible -- and this takes precedence over everything -- that a potential aggressor, and there is just one, would consider it not worthwhile to start a conflict at all.

[Question] The possible interpretation that the Americans are trying to detach themselves after all must complicate it for you, an FDP advocate of NATO's dual decision, as well as for the coalition to support the decision. Criticism of counterarmament is becoming stronger again. Or don't you think so?

[Answer] I believe that the debate will continue as before. You cannot dream up a simple and sound world. Nuclear strategy is very complicated and we have not succeeded so far in making it plausible to the general public. I would like to repeat the following: I consider it very dangerous that the demand has arisen in this sometimes wild discussion, such as voiced by Heinz Oskar Vetter or Mrs Ranke-Heinemann -- which I really consider dangerous in the true sense of the word -- namely, the demand to prohibit and ban all nuclear arms. That would mean returning to the strategy of waging war. You may think what you want about nuclear arms. They are truly the most destructive weapons we have. But I believe that they really are the reason we have not had a war in Europe while many wars recently have been fought throughout the world. I think we must have very, very intensive discussions on this subject and we must do some enlightenment work.

[Question] And yet, do you wish that Reagan had not said what he did?

[Answer] Not discussing the thinkable is a poor way out in the long run. We must rationally handle such discussions.

Newspaper Comments

DW200957 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 20 Oct 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Discussing the strategic contemplations by the U.S. President Reagan concerning nuclear warfare, the KONSTNAZ SUEDKURIER writes: Fear may be a poor adviser. Yet, fear is human. Consequently, the debate on nuclear arms in Europe, which has been in progress for several months now in the Western part of the divided continent, has been characterized not least of all by the concern that the catastrophe of an all-destructive war may erupt wihout the people on this continent even being asked.

The partially encouraging and partially shocking method of simplifying problems in a rough-hewn manner that has become fashionable under Reagan does not always create clarity. In talking with American chief editors, the President has not said anything new or monstrous about a potential exchange of strikes without the direct involvement of the two superpowers. Yet he did this in such a way as to again provide new stimulus for the concern about the annihilation of the old continent. This was caused by thoughtlessness rather than by premeditation.

The Hanover ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG says: The excitement over the latest statements by the U.S. President about the possibility of localized nuclear war can be explained only by the hectic feelings in the current discussion on so-called counterarmament. In truth, Ronald Reagan did not say anything new. Under no circumstances should his words be construed to mean that the U.S. Government is cheerfully settling down to wait for a European nuclear war from which the United States itself would be spared. The critics of counter-armament once again consider it the duty of the Americans to put the big cities in the United States at immediate risk in the event of war. NATO, however, has long ceased to adhere to this mad idea -- especially because such a strategy would elicit little credibility.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG draws attention to the following point: Neither the Young Union of the CDU nor some leftwing initiative groups have given the greatest impetus to the peace movement recently. U.S. President Reagan himself has taken care of that. His remarks about a localized exchange of nuclear strikes were bound to elicit the greatest concern in Europe even if he put it differently than has been reported. The rapid clarification was urgently necessary. It is a fact that Reagan did not utter a single word about Europe, but he seems to be convinced that both superpowers will not immediately destroy each other by pushing the button in the event nuclear weapons are used on a regional level.

GENSCHER LEAVES FOR NORTH-SOUTH SUMMIT

[Excerpt] Bonn, 20 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today left for the North-South summit conference in Cancun, Mexico. As vice chancellor, he is sitting in for Chancellor Helmut Schmidt who has to take things easy after his operation. Rainer Offergeld, minister for economic cooperation, is a member of the German delegation.

SPD CHAIRMAN BRANDT VIEWS CANCUN MEETING

[Text] Bonn, 20 Oct (DPA) -- SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, president of the Independent North-South Commission, is confident that the forthcoming North-South summit meeting in Cancun, Mexico, can generate some positive impetus to improve the plight of developing countries. "I don't think that it is bound to be a flop," he told DPA in Bonn today.

He said Cancun would be a success if the proposed UN talks on North-South problems could start early next year. "The way I see it is that Cancun will give a green light in some ways," he said, 2 days before the summit meeting of 22 industrial and developing countries. "I would be very surprised if the Americans do not come around to the view that this process must be started."

He mentioned three points by which to judge Cancun:

-- A signal for the start of the global talks on raw materials, energy, trade, development, currencies and finance;

-- Agreement to set up an institution in conjunction with the World Bank to finance energy projects in the poorest of the developing countries;

-- An agreed strategy to fight hunger, above all by increased farm production in the Third World.

Brandt was guardedly positive that Washington would take part in the international efforts to bridge the gulf between poor and rich countries in spite of U.S. demands for greater exertions by the Third World and increased private development aid. He sees signs of development in American policy on the North-South issue. Without the Cancun summit, some policies would have been set differently in Washington. One could even say that President Ronald Reagan's advisers, who initially advised him not to attend, have had to "learn" something. "Even the world's most powerful state cannot entirely ignore the advice offered by others," he said. He was alluding to the fact that the heads of state of Mexico and Canada had persuaded the U.S. President to go to Cancun. Even in terms of atmosphere it was important for Reagan to meet a dozen or so important people from the Third World.

"I do not expect that Mrs Gandhi and others will convert President Reagan concerning his basic conservative convictions," Brandt said. "But the question, surely, is how to do things sensibly in the world of conservatives and others so that they will benefit not only the poor devils of this world but also -- if all goes well -- help the developed countries in an economic situation which is not becoming any easier."

Brandt dismissed claims by the Soviet Union and other East bloc states that the Western countries, as the former colonial powers, are solely responsible for the plight of the Third World and that the socialist countries need do nothing. "That is an old claim which is being accepted less and less in the developing countries." Leonid Brezhnev had told him recently that the Soviet Union is considering how it can "associate itself with this process."

Brandt is against setting up a new UN body in connection with the proposed global talks. "I think that we must scrutinize existing bodies more critically and see where they can be tightened up instead of adding new institutions." But he is in favor of increasing participation in the IMF, the World Bank, and GATT and of those states which are becoming more important in terms of their development. The discussion of structural changes in these bodies, in which the industrial nations predominate, should be concerned with reforms and not with destroying them.

In his view, there will be no unanimous recommendation in Cancun to fulfill the old UN target of a finance transfer equal to 0.7 percent of the gross national product to the Third World by 1985. The economic prospects are too unfavorable for that. But he would not abandon the principle. "We cannot adopt a defeatist attitude from the outset."

Asked why he, as the president of the Independent North-South Commission and real architect of the summit meeting was not going to Cancun, Brandt replied: "Simply because I am not a head of government."

MAUROY REVIEWS DEFENSE POLICY IN ADDRESS

PM191047 Paris DEFENSE NATIONALE in French Oct 81 pp 15-28

[Apparent text of Premier Pierre Mauroy speech at 14 September opening of the 34th session of the Institute of National Defense Higher Studies: "Coherence of a Defense Policy"]

[Text] It is traditional for the premier to initiate your work by outlining to you the avenues of the country's defense policy. Indeed, the head of government, as "the official responsible for national defense," under the terms of the 7 January 1959 order exercises "the general and military control of defense under the supreme authority of the president of the republic, the chief of the armed forces." The profound changes which have occurred in the country's political balance and the chance circumstances of your agenda mean that my presence among you is apparently generating some curiosity.

You yourselves and many others outside this auditorium are awaiting explanations, and legitimately so. It so happens that your session is taking place before the government debates have been held. You can readily understand that it is not for me to anticipate here our forthcoming decisions.

But rest assured the government has a precise idea of its defense policy. For over 10 years now we have been conducting in-depth thought in this field thanks in particular, need I stress it, to the work inspired by Charles Hernu, now minister of defense, whom I am pleased to salute. The Institute of National Defense Higher Studies has already made a great contribution to this thought. It must continue to do so. Your institute is one of those rare and privileged places where all the nation's components can meet to discuss calmly the requirements and restrictions of our joint security.

Allow the first head of a leftwing government under the Fifth Republic to remind you that while the need for such an institution was demonstrated as far back as 1931 by Admiral Castex, it was Leon Blum who, in 1936, created the "College of National Defense Higher Studies," whose heirs you are. And even then the head of the Popular Front government explained that the objective which was being pursued was to create "a unity of feeling, thought and doctrine" among all the students.

I know that under the wing of Admiral de Castelbajac you will keep up this now long-standing tradition and that at the end of your session you will report to me the fruit of your thought, which I hope will be rich, original and therefore productive.

To help you in your undertaking I should like rapidly to outline the framework within which your research should be placed. For a government, defense, like threat, is comprehensive and cannot be studied from the military viewpoint alone. Before even talking strategy, before even talking armaments, we must know whether a defense consciousness exists within the national community. For this consciousness to manifest itself, the idea of community must be experienced by the country as a whole. A divided country is a weak country. For the French to assume active control of their security, they must feel safeguarded, protected by belonging to the nation. Let's take the example of unemployment. Who can fail to see, if only through the example of certain neighboring countries, the pernicious effect it has on our social structures? It tends to make them disintegrate.

On the one hand, we are witnessing the gradual alienation of a number of young people who, feeling excluded from the national community, tend to rebel against it and to drift into delinquency. On the other hand, we can see the expansion of the mass of people on public assistance who passive resign themselves to the status of second-class citizens.

Bearing this in mind, what can defense consciousness mean for the former or the latter? The government's policy, centered simultaneously on economic revival and a new division of labor, is aimed at making good the faults thus created. For, before being able to require citizens to assume their responsibilities to society, society must guarantee their rights and primarily their right to work.

Thinking about the draft, its content and duration, must be pursued and deepened in particular by combining these factors. Apart from the fact that our nuclear deterrent force cannot be the only guarantee of our defense and that our three traditional branches of the armed forces should have adequate personnel, a well-trained and well-equipped draft is an expression of national solidarity. It is through the draft that the cohesion of the French people, essential to our defense policy's effectiveness, can and must be manifested.

Apart from temporary phenomena which prevent us from reducing the duration of military service in the immediate future, there is an abiding need to improve its efficiency. This period, during which each citizen fulfills what is indeed a duty but above all exercises his right to learn the profession of a soldier, should be equivalent to real training. And since it is a case of a right accorded to every citizen, there is no reason why women should be excluded in the name of historical tradition. We should therefore encourage voluntary service for women.

A more intense military service with a truly operational nature would make it possible to pose dynamically the problem of territorial defense through genuinely popular mobilization.

The second factor a government has to take into account when we are speaking of defense is the functioning of our production apparatus. The country's independence depends first on the strength of its energy and raw material resources. Within a context of international crisis, France has seen its positions weaken in these various fields. There too, the Government's policy is aimed at implementing the essential rectification, in particular by relying on an enlarged public sector, by gaining control of financial fluctuations through the nationalization of credit, and by authorizing particularly substantial budgetary expenditure for civilian research.

Regarding energy, without prejudicing the results of the forthcoming parliamentary debate, I can state that the government is resolved to pursue a policy based on three main ideas:

-- Accelerating energy saving, which offers the dual advantage of saving our foreign currency and creating jobs, particularly at the level of small and medium industries;

-- Exploiting national resources to the maximum, whether it is a case, for instance of reexamining the position of coal basins or putting French forest tracts to use;

-- Pursuing a program of nuclear power engineering, with all the necessary safety guarantees.

These features are not peculiar to France alone, it is true. The crisis affects the entire Western world and is striking our European partners in particular. It is therefore the entire geopolitical zone to which we belong which has been weakened. For any decline of an EEC nation leads to a reduction of the strength of the whole. That is why an effort must be made at the European level for reorganization and solidarity.

Indeed, it is striking to note that the problems are being raised in a similar manner in each of our countries, irrespective of sociopolitical peculiarities. The same obstacles arise in Europe to confront the formation of a common social area, advocated by President Francois Mitterrand, and also of a military defense area. Moreover, the fabric of our alliance threatens to be stretched to the breaking point as soon as a particular partner puts itself in a position of waging a veritable economic war against us.

However, France intends to remain faithful to its allies, among which the United States holds a prominent place. The government is fully aware of the fundamental contribution which the American deterrent makes to the balance of forces. But how can anybody fail to see that this American deterrent is intended to protect the United States, obviously, the Western camp of course, and naturally, not just France. But I nearly said not primarily France.

Although France has voluntarily withdrawn from the integrated military organization, it regards the Atlantic alliance not only as a collective security organization but above all as a human community of which it is part and in which it adopts a policy which respects its own spirit. We are committed to it, but it should one day be possible to adapt the content of the treaty to the new historical context. Similarly France accepts all the treaties which gave rise to the Western European union. Moreover, it is this loyalty which leads it to promote the building of Europe with a view to joint economic recovery, to reducing inequalities and to loyal cooperation with the developing countries.

France is not forgetting the ties it has established overseas, particularly in Africa, whose strength is demonstrated whatever the ups and downs of history. For the sake of this heritage our country must have a dynamic role in the industrialized countries with the nonindustrialized countries. It must make particular efforts to ensure that North-South relations, on which mankind's future depends, are not constantly endangered by the East-West debate.

We reject a bipolar view of the world. It is only by increasing the number of decision-making centers that the necessary developments can take place, that Europe can regain its autonomy and that the Third World can gain real independence. It is this analysis which leads us, in particular, to forcefully assert people's right to self-determination. This is what leads us to oppose foreign interference, be it in Africa or Latin America, in Poland or in Afghanistan. Finally it is this which will always make us ardent defenders of human rights.

It is because we are convinced that underdevelopment and nuclear proliferation are the most serious dangers threatening our planet that we strongly advocate a limitation and a simultaneous and negotiated reduction of armaments. But such negotiations are only possible, especially within the European area, only if a balance of forces first exists. If that balance is disrupted, which is now the case, it must be restored, as the president stated, before fundamental issues can be discussed.

As you see, France's policy is in no way neutralist. Even if we wanted it to be, the country's geographical situation alone would prevent it. Furthermore our level of development makes any isolation impracticable. We must draw the appropriate conclusions from this, especially when we examine the defense of our borders and their approaches. An attack on France does not start [only] when an enemy enters national territory.

France, mindful of the threats emerging in a world which is unstable and is unfortunately turning its back increasingly often on the rules with which the international community has been equipped, faithful to its alliances and conscious of its place in the European area, intends to maintain autonomy in its choices and decisions in the military sphere — that last resort of external relations. Nuclear deterrence provides the means for this autonomy of decision.

General de Gaulle was able to follow an independent military policy which led to France withdrawing from NATO's integrated military organization because he chose to give the country nuclear weapons. It is true that research in this sphere had been started well before General de Gaulle's arrival in power.

The Government adopts this option fully.

Moreover, the country's military equipment leaves it no alternative.

Since it was forced to seek an independent military defense, our country established a nuclear capability for which it is not indebted to anybody. That gives it a specific role in the world and particularly in Europe.

In keeping with their own strategies, the United States and the Soviet Union have equipped themselves with a panoply of military tools whose asymmetry stems from the different concepts on which those states are based. The development of these arsenals led to a situation characterized by the fact that official bodies, and important ones at that, publicly doubt that the United State has maintained its supremacy. However, a balance of forces is at the least vital to prevent war, and better still to organize peace.

In this context, the aim of the French deterrent force remains that of discouraging an adversary from launching an attack on our vital interests and, primarily on our national territory. An armed attack against France's sovereignty is, in fact, the most serious threat against which the nation must be guarded. The aim is to preserve national independence, in other words the ability to make political and diplomatic choices in complete freedom. The potential aggressor must clearly perceive that his action will bring a response causing him human losses and material damage out of all proportion to what he can hope to gain from his initiative.

From this viewpoint, war is the failure of deterrence.

The French strategy thus remains that of the deterrence of the strong by the weak, in other words a strategy which is bound to be a countercity strategy. Its principle lies in the potential to inflict, even on a more powerful aggressor, damage considered greater than the stake represented for him by the country's vital interests. This has been made possible by what is called the equalizing power of the atom. But this deterrent must also be credible, in other words primarily motivated by an unshakable political will based on a clear and affirmed doctrine and on the existence of means great enough to make the adversary take account of them to the extent of abandoning his attack.

However, a strategy is not immutable and must be adapted to the development of threats and of technologies. It is certainly out of the question for France to follow the U.S. example and adopt a deterrent strategy comprising a varied and complete range of responses which could be adapted to the different possible levels of attack according to the situation. This strategy, which is probably suited to American potential and interests in Europe, provides for implementing a whole range of actions corresponding to the degrees of violence in the attack. The objective is to restore deterrence at a chosen level, by discouraging the adversary from taking a further step in this escalation of violence by the threat of a more damaging response. According to this concept, Europe could very well be regarded by the United States as merely a rung on the ladder of violence and not as one of the supreme ends of its defense. This is an unacceptable possibility for the French. It is a possibility which should make the Europeans consider the prospect of a political entity with an autonomous defense system.

This American strategy presupposes an adequate panoply of weapons, which is completely impossible for France, given the potential developed by the two superpowers. Moreover, this strategy is officially and radically rejected by the Soviets. The United States is thus trying to impose it on the USSR, but the level attained by that country's military potential makes this operation increasingly difficult.

The Warsaw Pact forces have a quantitative superiority over the Atlantic alliance forces. This superiority has increased further since the Soviet's developed the SS20 missile -- a weapon which specifically threatens Europe. It has a destabilizing effect and consequently justifies the existence of an autonomous French deterrent force.

This constant development of nuclear arms compels France to constantly update its own potential.

At present our strategic nuclear forces are based on three complementary components:

The Mirage-4, whose maneuverability gives the Government the potential for making gestures in crisis management;

The surface-to-surface missiles on the Plateau D'Albion, which, by virtue of their characteristics and their siting on national territory, make it necessary for an enemy, in order to destroy them, to launch a large-scale attack which cannot remain "anonymous";

The missile-carrying nuclear submarines which, by virtue of their invulnerability at sea and the permanence of the threat they represent, come what may, constitute a second strike capacity which safeguards national territory.

It is within this total framework that the decision to build a seventh missile-carrying nuclear submarine has been studied. Thus France will be able to keep three invulnerable submarines at sea in constant readiness, in any circumstances, to fire their 48 warheads. This capacity will be augmented still further when the M-4 warhead missile comes into service in 1985.

With the current state of technology and that foreseeable in the year 2000, the nuclear submarine remains a decisive component in our defense system. It is, in effect, invulnerable, since it is undetectable deep under the sea. The increased range of the delivery vehicles coming into service in 1985 will strengthen this invulnerability still further by increasing the possible surface area of patrol zones.

If the strategic ocean force thus forms the backbone of the French deterrent, it is by no means its only aspect. Indeed, concern for diversification is a response to the threat of a technological breakthrough, which is always possible. That is why it is also necessary to complete the modernization effort on the Plateau d'Albion missiles and even on certain Mirage 4 planes, which will receive the medium-range air-to-surface missile. Thus it is still necessary to pursue our efforts to adapt to technical progress. In this respect another component could be brought into service as a replacement for the Mirage 4, the first of which began to fly in 1959.

Despite constant adaptations and modernization, the strategic nuclear deterrent could prove insufficient in itself, or could be circumvented. To guard against this eventuality, the strategic nuclear forces are supplemented by conventional forces, bolstered by tactical nuclear weapons.

Tactical nuclear arms are intended to restore deterrence at the strategic level. Their use would indicate the determination of the president to go to extremes and to resort, should the need arise, to antipersonnel nuclear arms.

So it is not a question of using tactical nuclear arms to win a battle, but of using them to brandish, in a credible fashion, the strategic nuclear threat, should an armed conflict be unleashed in spite of everything by the aggressor in the European theater. The presence of these arms within our conventional forces also compels the enemy to adopt dispersed dispositions for nuclear security, which lessen his offensive capacity.

The ground forces have been equipped with the Pluton for 7 years, and a successor will soon have to be found. The Navy, with its shipboard Super-Etendards, and the Air Force, with its Jaguars and soon its Mirage 2000's armed with the medium-range air-to-surface missile, also have a tactical nuclear capacity.

As with our strategic forces, it is necessary to keep up with technical progress by periodically adapting and modernizing the delivery vehicles and weapons of our tactical nuclear armory. The United States has just decided to arm itself with the enhanced radiation weapon, known as the neutron bomb.

And the Soviet Union judging from its statements, is quite capable of producing similar arms. These facts should put us on our guard.

Neutron weapons are tactical nuclear weapons like the others. So they carry a threat of use on a battlefield which could extend to Western Europe. As far as we are concerned, it would be irrational to refuse a priori to acquire a weapon which could add to our deterrent potential. This capacity must be deepened. That is why the government has decided to pursue studies in this sphere.

The commitments arising from the 1948 Brussels treaty, as well as our membership in the Atlantic alliance and the impossibility of dissociating ourselves from our immediate neighbors, also explain our military presence on German soil. This aspect of our military threat that France has to parry is multifaceted. It is the ransom for our desire for peace.

The French Republic will never take the initiative in a conflict -- an initiative which belongs by definition to the aggressor, as do the means of attack. This implies that we must take several hypotheses into account. To refuse to allow ourselves the means of reacting to a possible aggression by land would be to make people doubt our determination to defend ourselves and therefore our deterrance strategy.

Outside the national territory and even outside the European theater, apart from international commitments which it is imperative to maintain, France's vital interests also consist in ensuring the reliability of supplies and in being capable of guaranteeing the safety of French nationals overseas, so it is essential to maintain a three-fold external operation capability, ground, airborne and of course naval.

This military element also has a deterrent role in contributing to the defense of our independence. The growth of the military potential of all nations, including those of the Third World, is prompting us to reexamine the type of forces which should be assigned to such operations. These forces must be really comprehensive in order to prevent our troops from being confronted by a better equipped enemy. The armament policy which proves necessary must be programmed, if only because of the time lag between conception and implementation of an arms system. This programming must be incorporated in the 2-year interim plan, then in the 5-year plan now being elaborated.

There are two possible roads for France: either to buy its armaments and accept a situation of dependence or make its arms -- probably in cooperation with allies -- and thus ensure its independence. But independence is expensive, especially for a medium-sized power. So it is necessary to make judicious choices in our armaments. We cannot make mistakes because we cannot compensate for them as a superpower would. Moreover, the armaments industries must be made profitable.

Certainly France has no role as an arms merchant. But France cannot abandon exports of military equipment, for the sake of the nation itself of course, and also for the sake of its partners, since France allows them to increase their margin of independence by preventing them from having to turn to one of the two superpowers, with all the consequences which this kind of connection entails. The prosperity of our arms industry is the result primarily, let us not forget, of its independence.

Against this background the government has nevertheless decided, scrupulously respecting contracts which have been signed, not to supply military equipment to countries which practice discrimination contrary to the most elementary human rights.

Within the framework of this review of our defense, there are still many other points to deal with, primarily all those concerned directly with personnel. But the defense minister will soon have the opportunity to speak to you on the government's behalf. I do not, however, want to end without saying something by way of introduction about civil defense. It is in fact an important element in the necessary development of the defense consciousness which I mentioned just now.

Within the dialectic of deterrence, we would have to take the initiative of a nuclear response against an enemy threatening France's vital interests, who might himself retaliate with nuclear weapons. France may also be the target of a surprise nuclear attack. The very short duration of a missile's flight and the effects of nuclear weapons make it impossible to protect civilian populations with complete efficiency. Nevertheless, information and protective measures should make it possible to limit the damage.

How can one refuse the French population the right to be informed on this subject? It is thus essential to devise a large-scale organization entrusted with training the population in preventative and remedial measures which would considerably reduce losses in the event of a nuclear attack. Apart from the fact that such an organization would increase our deterrence by indicating a very real awareness of the nuclear risk run by populations, it could be useful in peacetime by helping combat accidents or natural disasters.

Allow me to end this outline of government policy by reminding you of the terms of the 1959 order, to which I referred at the beginning of this speech. It states that "the object of defense is to ensure the security and integrity of the territory, as well as the lives of the population, at all times, under all circumstances and against all forms of aggression." These words assume a full and complete significance because dangers no longer result solely from the threat of a brutal invasion.

I am indeed the prime minister of change, but there is at least one point on which permanence is indispensable: the imperatives of defense.

It is the armed forces' role to face certain types of threats while being broadly subjected to a series of constraints inherent in the international and national situations. Aggression nowadays displays a multifaceted and complex character in which all factors overlap. Thus defense can only be comprehensive, which is very much in line with the demands of the present age, and even more so with the context of crisis in which we are currently living.

Defense aims to protect the entire nation and thus comprises several facets, all consistent with one another whatever the gravity of the threat. This necessary coherence is an obvious essential fact but has not always been clearly perceived, in the recent past as in the present. Our first objective is thus to reestablish it.

The country's defense and security constitute imperatives which transcend political options. They force themselves on all governments, particularly on that which I have the honor to lead.

Indeed, in a world where threats are worldwide, defense does not fall to the military alone, but its role remains irreplaceable. For all that, the president and the government know that they can rely on the armed forces, whether regular personnel or draftees. They express their trust in them.

They also know they can rely on defense consciousness of the French economic and administrative officials who succeed each other each year in your institute. They want this to be an example to the whole country and they want our fellow citizens to take charge of their defense problems.

Indeed, in the troubled world in which we live, they sometimes have occasion to question and doubt. I would like them to be aware that, whereas in the past for France, organizing its defense meant preparing for a war in order to win it, now, improving our defense means averting war and giving ourselves further reasons for believing in peace.

INDIAN DELEGATION TO DISCUSS MIRAGE PURCHASE

NC201620 Paris AFP in English 1317 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Oct (AFP) -- A top-level Indian military delegation arrived here today to discuss the possible purchase by India of 150 French Mirage 2000 jet fighters, informed sources said.

The arrival of the delegation coincided with preparations here for an official visit by Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi next month.

The military delegation includes Indian Defence Secretary P.K. Kaul and Air Force Chief of Staff General Dalga Singh, whose talks here follow an official visit to India last August by French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson.

French arms deliveries to India have been held up and the two sides have not finalised the type of armaments with which the Mirages would be equipped, the sources said. Under the terms of the proposed sale, worth $2 billion, France would deliver 50 Mirages to India. Another 40 would be assembled in India and some 60 more would be completely constructed there, the sources said.

According to reports in Pakistan, as well as shopping for aircraft, India is also interested in buying a nuclear-powered submarine.

MITTERRAND CONGRATULATES GREECE'S PAPANDREOU

NC201841 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] As expected, French President Mitterrand, who is away from Paris on a visit to the United States and Mexico, late last night sent via Paris the following message congratulating Andreas Papandreou:

I am informed with joy about your victory in the parliamentary elections. I personally congratulate you as well as all your friends. Please accept my wishes to the Greek people and I assure you of the firmness of my friendly feelings.

ITALY, JAPAN HOPE TO IMPROVE TRADE IMBALANCE

LD201424 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2300 GMT 19 Oct 81

[Text] The Japanese economic delegation visiting Italy was received by the president of the Council of Ministers, Spadolini.

A communique says that, during a cordial meeting, it was stressed that the considerable imbalance in commerical relations between Italy and Japan represents an obstacle to the further development of trade. Greater cooperation is hoped for in order to identify acceptable solutions for a balanced development of relations between the two countries.

Meetings Held

AU201330 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 20 Oct (ANSA) -- A high-powered delegation of Japanese businessmen meets with Italian Industry Minister Giovanni Marcora here later today as the mission from the Far Eastern state continues its consultations with the Italian leaders on ways and means of improving Italo-Japanese industrial cooperation and righting Italy's trade deficit with Japan.

Yesterday, the mission, whose visit to Italy is only one stage in a European tour designed to improve the climate between Japanese and European businessmen, saw the other Italian ministers directly or indirectly responsible for industrial matters.

Apart from head-of-state Sandro Pertini and Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, the Japanese businessmen's schedule included Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria, and Minister for Public Sector Industry Gianni de Michelis. The Japanese mission is led by the president of the Asian state's industrialists federation, Yoshihiro Inayama and includes Nissan President Katsuji Hawamata, President Toshio Nakamura of the Mitsubishi Bank, President Yoshizo Ikeda of the Mitsui Corporation, and the president of the Industrial Bank of Japan, Isao Masamune.

Authoritative sources said that a leitmotif of the talks was Italian insistence that the growing trade surplus in Japan's favor is an obstacle to further expansion of two-way trade. In particular, so the sources reported, Spadolini voiced Italian interest in greater access for Italian products to the Japanese market, particularly in the area of investment and instrumental goods.

De Michelis added that the Japanese market seems particularly impervious to imported goods of these kinds and made it clear that Italo-Japanese trade should be brought back into balance.

Flanked by the heads of Italy's major public sector holding companies, De Michelis also noted the deterioration in Italy's trade account with Japan and underscored what he described as Japanese protectionism against the free exchange of products. But, offsetting this stance, he underscored the cooperation existing between Japanese companies and Italy's public sector, pointing in particular to the recent agreement between Nissan, the Japanese auto maker, and Italy's state-owned auto firm, Alfa Romeo.

With Foreign Trade Minister Capria, who promised he would visit Japan "as soon as possible," the industrialists extended their discussions to technological cooperation, joint research, and cooperation on third markets. Capria, who said this was a trend common to all European industry, told reporters that these new forms of cooperation were expected to mean a "smaller, but above all more harmonious and plannable penetration of Japanese products into European markets, and a greater presence of Italian exports on the Japanese market."

The Japanese mission ends its visit to Italy tomorrow.

PS DECIDES TO END FRS ELECTORAL ALLIANCE

PM191421 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Oct 81 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Republican and Socialist Front Terminated by PS Decision"]

[Excerpts] The Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] ceased to exist yesterday as a result of a decision by the Socialist Party [PS]. Thus relations among the PS, the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI] and the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy [UEDS] will henceforth be solely bilateral and in practice will exist only at the parliamentary level.

This situation stems from a motion approved by the PS political committee and put forward by Secretary General Mario Soares himself, which, after several considerations, concludes by asserting that no "grounds for the continued existence of the FRS coordinating committee" currently remain.

The motion, which was approved by 27 votes in favor with 9 against, states that although the cooperation among the forces which comprised the FRS has had some positive aspects at the parliamentary level, in the other spheres of public life the results are negative, specifically, "the course imparted by the ASDI and the UEDS to the Loures campaign, in a clearly anti-PS style" and the improper use of the initials FRS in the same campaign in "violation of the agreement whereby the front itself was set up."

Expressing the viewpoint that "the FRS has not succeeded in becoming and is not an overall political blueprint," the motion states that therefore the front "cannot be a vehicle for the PS to run in the next elections," although "its spirit will be respected by the PS, until the end of the legislative term in everything concerning parliamentary activity, and in particular the revision of the constitution."

The PS political committee resolution emphasizes next that "the rationale of the political system's functioning requires that the Socialists units in a party which is strong and soundly established among the working classes and not in scattered groupings without roots among the people," and so the PS will adopt as its strategic course the fielding of its own candidates in the next elections, outside the framework of any kind of front or alliance and without prejudice to the inclusion of independents in its lists.

However, despite the Socialists' current stance on the FRS they will strive "to carry out in full what is laid down in the document 'Fundamental Principles of the Revision of the Constitution,' which is an annex to the agreement setting up the front, within the framework of bilateral relations with the ASDI and UEDS parliamentary groups."

Last, the motion states that "the PS will firmly combat each and every political action aimed at exploiting the initials FRS for party projects detrimental to the interests of democratic socialism."

Lopes Cardoso Comments on Decision

In the meantime, on behalf of the UEDS Lopes Cardoso read out to the news media a communique in which that organization "deeply regrets the decision announced by the PS leadership in practice to denounce unilaterally the agreements setting up the FRS, and the way in which, with complete contempt for the most elementary principles of political ethics, it made and announced that decision without prior discussion with or even informing its partners."

Next the UEDS asserts that the manner in which the PS refers to the revision of the constitution suggests that the stance now adopted is the first step toward the PS being left free to revise the constitution of the republic with the Democratic Alliance. It also adds that in any event the "UEDS continues to assert its commitment to the FRS, certain that sooner or later it will be possible to build on the basis of its blueprint a real alternative to the Democratic Alliance."

ASDI Expresses Bewilderment

In addition, the ASDI issued a communique from its national council, which met yesterday, in which it expresses its bewilderment and surprise at the decision of the PS to terminate "unilaterally the FRS coordinating committee" in a political situation in which "the affirmation of a coherent and united alternative appears urgent."

The communique later states that the ASDI has never conducted any anti-PS campaign, specifically in Loures, accusing the PS of being the organization which prevented the submissions of an FRS list in the local elections in that municipality.

Despite the decision by the Socialists, the ASDI asserts, however, that it will cooperate with the PS and the UEDS in the parliamentary sphere, and specifically in the revision of the constitution.

NEW FOREIGN MINISTER DISUCSSES NATO, EEC

PM201141 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 Oct 81 p 3

[Eivind G. Carlsen interview with Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray: "Our Freedom Rests on NATO"]

[Text] Cooperation within NATO ensures Norway's freedom and peace. We cannot allow the balance of power in Europe to continue to shift in the Soviet Union's favor. These were two of the main points incoming Foreign Minister Svenn Stray made to AFTENPOSTEN. Stray gave indications of a more active Norwegian attitude toward the EEC -- and thinks that Norway can act as a bridge in NATO between the United States and the European allies. "Preserving broad national agreement around Norwegian foreign policy will be an extremely important task," Svenn Stray said. When the new government takes over, 59-year-old Svenn Stray will be foreign minister. He held the same post in 1970-71. As Kaare Willoch's closest colleague he will now be playing a central and more active political role, after 8 years as deputy speaker in the Storting. The change accords with his own wishes.

[Question] When you resume the post of foreign minister, is there anything you would like to pick up again from 1970-71?

[Answer] At that time Norwegian membership in the EEC was the main issue. It is no longer on the agenda. But in the years to come we will be kept very busy seeing how Norway can best be assured close contact and cooperation with all the community's bodies. My impression is that all the political movements in Norway understand the importance of this. Our security policy, such as it has been throughout the postwar period, is the most important part of our foreign policy. As long as cooperation within NATO between the democratic states on both sides of the Atlantic functions as well as possible, our freedom and peace are assured. Within the alliance Norway is in a position to build a bridge between U.S. and European viewpoints. I have personally always perceived this role as a major obligation.

[Question] What other priorities will you give to NATO, and to relations with the EEC and with the Nordic countries, to name but a few of the main areas of Norwegian foreign policy?

[Answer] It is scarcely possible or useful to draw up definite priorities. Not all tasks are of similar importance, but we must nevertheless seek to perform them in parallel. This will be possible through the correct deployment of forces. In the context of security policy the imminent negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union are of the greatest importance, and Norway comes into the picture through the preparatory talks about them underway within NATO. In concrete terms they are dealing with an attempt to limit the deployment of nuclear arms in Europe, but the whole of the relationship between East and West and the deterioration in it which has taken place recently will undoubtedly come into the picture. Voices critical of Norway's foreign policy orientation often say that we are committed to following what the United States decides. The actual facts are that membership in an organization like NATO, in which all important security policy questions are the subject of continual discussion and evaluation, gives the smaller member nations a chance to have an influence on international developments which they would not have had if they were outside it.

[Question] Are you afraid of nuclear war?

[Answer] A nuclear war would be a catastrophe so great that it is difficult to imagine. But if the question is whether I think that there is a great likelihood that we will experience such a war, then my answer is "no," provided that we are in a position to prevent new states acquiring nuclear arms. But let me emphasize that this does not mean that I take lightly the problem posed by the superpowers' nuclear arms.

But they have undoubtedly shown a great degree of restraint and responsibility as far as the use of their nuclear weapons as an arm of their policies is concerned. The imminent negotiations are aiming first at halting nuclear rearmament and then at reducing the numbers of nuclear arms on both sides. It would be wrong to try to tell people that it will be easy to reach an agreement on this. The reason that I am a cautious optimist is primarily because both the United States and the Soviet Union are undoubtedly fully aware that they cannot use nuclear arms against each other without this resulting in reciprocal annihilation, and that if for no other reason than the economic one, it would be in the common interest to halt the continued arms buildup.

[Question] You have already publicly expressed your opinion of a possible future nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. Will the work which, according to [outgoing premier] Gro Harlem Brundtland, has now been set in motion in the Foreign Ministry and the Defense Ministry be halted?

[Answer] No, in no way. The criticism I made of the Labor Party and the outgoing government was that they had put forward the idea of such a zone before the analytical and preparatory work for such a zone had been started in any way. The goal of all work in the security policy fields is to create a safer world to live in. It is an illusion to believe that we in the Nordic countries are in a position to secure for ourselves a safe corner independent of what is happening elsewhere. For this reason all such plans are only meaningful if they are a positive contribution to the work going on within NATO to reach a solution in the broader context.

[Question] Are you alarmed by the new figures published by the United States relating to the Soviet military buildup?

[Answer] As far as I can see there is nothing new presented here. It has long been known that the relative strengths in Europe, both in conventional and nuclear terms, have changed in the Soviet Union's favor.

But it is my view that we cannot sit happily back and watch the shift in the balance continue. For this reason there must be no doubt about the NATO alliance's determination to carry through the planned defense reinforcements, if the negotiations on reciprocal arms limitation and the withdrawal of forces do not lead anywhere. Only if this is clear will the negotiations have any hope of succeeding.

[Question] What is your view of Nordic cooperation?

[Answer] The Nordic countries are an important field for work. Not because we here are faced with special problems, but because the Nordic peoples are so close to each other that joint solutions within the Nordic countries and joint responsibility in the face of many international tasks seem natural.

[Question] What about our relations with Europe?

[Answer] At present we have perhaps not noticed the disadvantages of standing outside the EEC. Our economic interests are largely satisified by the trade agreement, and the EEC nations, cooperation in other fields has hitherto not become so settled that we have felt ourselves to have been too isolated. But if EEC cooperation develops in the way that is now being advocated, things could be different. Therefore it is necessary for us to keep ourselves informed and actively try to make our view known in all phases of the decision-making process for the measures adopted by the EEC. Norway must not be allowed to fall out of the European picture. Let me add that this is not an easy task: Within the EEC especially, there are strong views opposed to giving nonmember nations the formal possibility of influencing the decisionmaking process. On the other hand Norway has gradually become increasingly interesting as a partner because of our oil and gas resources. Thus it would seem that the possibility of establishing stronger and more stable contacts does exist.

[Question] There are several unresolved problems between Norway and some of its neighbors. Can we expect a meeting soon between you and the Danish foreign minister about the Jan Mayen conflict?

[Answer] I expect the negotiations to start as soon as possible, but perhaps not at the foreign minister level in the first instance. About the issue itself I will say no more than that it is clear that the new government sees it as a very important task to safeguard the interests of Norwegian fishermen in the area.

[Question] The negotiations with the Soviet Union about a Barents Sea demarcation line were begun when you were foreign minister last time, but the issue is still unresolved. When will they be resumed?

[Answer] It looks as if the Soviet Russians still have little interest in starting real negotiations. As long as this is the case there is not much we can do. Experience also shows that in negotiations with the Soviet Union one must be prepared to take the time needed. That is their modus operandi.

[Question] In this affair Norway has adhered to the so-called median line principle, while the Soviet Union has called for a sector line. The notorious "gray zone" between them is of course not a satisfactory, permanent solution?

[Answer] No, in no way. And the bourgeois parties had been afraid that this agreement would lead to a situation in which the Soviet Union would find it even less important to reach a final solution. It looks as if we were right.

[Question] Will you be going to the United Nations this fall?

[Answer] A program has yet to be drawn up. But I do not exclude the possibility that it might be necessary for me to go to the United Nations.

[Question] Will the Middle East policy which has been pursued hitherto be continued?

[Answer] Yes, we are determined that in the coming months Norway will continue to make a contribution through the United Nations to preventing the conflict developing into open war. In addition the last few days' events in Egypt cast a tragic light over developments. It is my hope that everything that has been achieved on the path toward peace through cooperation among Egypt, Israel and the United States will not be endangered.

[Question] After this little excursion through parts of your new field of work -- we can come back to development aid later -- do you see any chance for Norway as a bridge between East and West?

[Answer] I think it is very small, if we can on our own. However, I think that Norway can make a great contribution to bringing about a trend in the right direction through talks with our allies. In this connection I would like to mention that Norway played a fairly decisive role in the discussions within NATO which preceded the Helsinki CSCE conference. Perhaps I even dare claim that without Norway it is doubtful if anything would have come of it.

[Question] What concrete measures will you adopt to achieve the greatest possible national support for Norwegian foreign and security policy?

[Answer] It is always a source of strength for a country that there be broad agreement on foreign policy, and this is especially true of a small country. I therefore see it as an extremely important part of my work to preserve this agreement here in Norway. The method which I think must be used is that of regular consultations on foreign policy issues between the government and the opposition, that is, among the parties which for the most part have borne the joint responsibility for the line Norway has followed.

[Question] In other words, close contacts between the government and the Storting -- and the smallest amount of solo play from the Government?

[Answer] Exactly.

NOTT, LABOR PARTY HEAD REACT TO REAGAN REMARKS

LD201404 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1330 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] U.S. President Ronald Reagan's remarks about the possibility of a limited nuclear war in Europe have "horrified and appalled the Labor Party," the party's general secretary said today. Mr Ron Hayward added: "We do not believe that the USA or the USSR could avoid involvement in any nuclear war, however 'limited' it was intended to be."

The President had told a group of newspaper editors he could see a situation where the use of atomic weapons in Europe would not necessarily lead to a nuclear exchange between America and Russia.

Mr Hayward said: "The 400 million European people must clearly reject such a concept. We will not allow ourselves to become pawns in such dangerous fantasies.

"These remarks reinforce and confirm our intention to work for a Europe free of nuclear weapons."

But Defence Secretary Mr John Nott today played down the row over the President's comments.

Mr Nott, who is attending the top secret NATO Nuclear Planning Group sessions at Gleneagles Hotel in Perthshire, said: "I have seen the text of this lunchtime chat. There is nothing controversial in it as far as I am concerned."

If there was a European nuclear war, it would be the best argument he had ever heard for the existing and planned British independent nuclear deterrents, Polaris and Trident, he added.

The Western alliance's resolve to station cruise missiles in Europe was still "absolutely firm", he said.

"The Germans, Italians and ourselves are as firm as ever. The Dutch have not got a government so there was nothing very much said. The Belgians are about to have an election but they were firm," said Mr Nott.

However a question mark still hangs over whether the Dutch and Belgians will give approval to the stationing of the missiles on their soil, observers point out.

Mr Nott was speaking after this morning's session of the Nuclear Planning Group, at which U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger briefed members on the growing Soviet nuclear threat.

Mr Nott said the NATO defence ministers had also discussed the forthcoming negotiations on European nuclear arms limitations between America and Russia.

Strategic weapons talks, which could start by the end of the year, were also mentioned. The intention was to start them as soon as possible, he said.

The meeting's atmosphere was "easier" than at the last nuclear planning talks in Bonn when "there was genuine concern on the part of the Europeans about whether the Americans were serious about arms control negotiations," he said.

GREEK-LANGUAGE PRESS COMMENTS ON PASOK VICTORY

NC201319 [Editorial Report] The Greek-Language Cypriot newspapers on 19 and 20 October comment on the election victory of PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou in the Greek elections.

In its 20 October "Positions" column, TA NEA says that "the Cypriot people know for certain that PASOK's Greece decisively stands by them against defeatism and occupation. They know that there is nothing Greece cannot and will not do, that there is nothing Greece will leave undone, that there is no possibility which Greece will fail to utilize." After stressing that PASOK's victory will have favorable repercussions beyond the Greek area, the "Positions" column continues: "It is very characteristic of the intentions and the significance which Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou attaches to the Cyprus problem that the first meeting he will have after formally receiving the mandate to form a government will be with chairman of socialist party EDEK Dr Vasos Lissaridhis."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA, on 19 October, in a front page editorial wishes success to Papandreou in the great task he is undertaking and continues: "We have every reason to believe that the Greek Government to be formed under Papandreou will actively support the Cypriot people in the struggle they are waging for freedom and justice. There are very many examples of Andreas Papandreou's militant support for the Cypriot people and their leadership, and we look forward with many hopes to the future help he will offer, as a government, to the Cyprus cause."

On 19 October, ALITHIA, in an editorial "The Change in Greece," notes that PASOK is compelled to follow its preelection declarations, and thus may even upset Waldheim's initiative, and stresses that "the political change in Greece brings the Cyprus problem to a decisive turning point because Papandreou's position is contrary to the line that had so far been followed and to the summit agreements which were the result of direct negotiations with the Turkish side."

I SIMERINI on 20 October in the "For and Against" column, signed by Al. Konstandinidhis, wonders whether Papandreou's victory will decisively influence the developments of the Cyprus problem and notes: "Unfortunately, so far, Papandreou's stance toward the Cyprus problem, actually starting when he was minister of coordination in his father's government, is not such as to allow us any optimism. His opportunistic statements at times, or rather, references to the Cyprus problem, let it appear that Panandreou does not have any forumulated policy or strategy for Cyprus. He essentially tackles the Cyprus problem with the same amateurism as his predecessors.

"In addition to this, there is the danger that Papandreou's stance on the Cyprus problem, and minaly his negative position toward the intercommunal talks (a position which is not placed within a formulated strategic framework), may lead the Cyprus problem to a new impasse, thus strengthening the position of those people who do not seem to be annoyed by the problem's perpetuation.

"Certainly, at this moment, Papandreou's election could offer President Kiprianou the alibi he has been seeking in order to cause the failure of Waldheim's initiative and the return to the United Nations."

I SIMERINI carries another comment on 20 October signed by Savvas Iakovidhis and headed "The Change and Cyprus." Iakovidhis notes the change in Greece's political affairs which he describes as important. Then, with regard to the Cyprus problem, he stresses that "Papandreou and Kiprianou must chart a jointly acceptable course on the Cyprus problem which can be implemented. This should take place very soon. Why? Because at this moment the 'Waldheim ideas' exist. Papandreou should state what his thoughts are and especially what he would do; and, at the same time, undertake the responsibility for the relevant decision.

"It is self-evident that, following PASOK's electoral victory, the Cypriot political world must analyze and deal with the new facts. It is our opinion that all political leaders should go to Athens and think and consult with the new Greek Government on the further course of our national problem. So far, Papandreou has proven -- at least with words -- that he does not lack patriotism. It now remains for him to demonstrate what he means and how he will convert in practice his declarations regarding Greek support, duty and obligations toward Cypriot Hellenism."

O AGON carries in "My Opinion" column on 20 October "The Observer" on the "new Greece" pointing out "Nobody can define as of now what Greece's future will be in the light of the truly historical changes that were brought about by Sunday's elections." The "Observer" continues: "For Cypriot Hellenism, the agonizing question now is what will Papandreou do for Cyprus? Facts have been completely upset. If one takes into consideration Papandreou's preelection positions, Greek policy on the national issue will change radically."

Again on 20 October, O AGON, in "Our Positions" column, carries a comment "After the Elections" in which it emphasizes that "although the Cyprus problem did not play a serious role in the formulation of the election results -- references to it during the election campaign were almost incidental -- we believe that there will be a change in the Greek position on our problem. Papandreou is committed by his election declarations which directly touch on his own position toward the Cyprus problem, his relations with the Cyprus Government, and the course of the intercommunal talks."

O FILELEVTHEROS on 20 October in the "Liberal" column in a commentary headlined "Cyprus Expects Much," stresses that "the change in the guard after the election results is of great significance for us and has special ramifications, especialy because the declared positions of the departing government and the new one which is taking over differ greatly on fundamental elements of the Cyprus problem; philosophy, course and tactics.

"In this light, some factors may change very little or a great deal, and one should not preclude revisions and reassessments, possibly a very significant thing for further formulation of a joint course and dealings, especially at a time when determinative and critical developments are taking place in the Cyprus problem."

KHARAVYI on 20 October carries an editorial, "A Great Democratic Victory," principally underlining the change in social structure that is expected to take place in Greece following PASOK's victory. As regards foreign relations, it notes: "The significance of the Greek people's great democratic change from the elections extends beyond Greek borders. It especially influences the situation in Europe, Cyprus and the Middle East. The forces of the right, which in the last 2 years had attached Greece to the NATO military wing and the EEC, contested the elections using closer alliance with the imperialist block and the United States as their slogan. The forces of change asked for ridding Greece of the deadly embrace of NATO and the EEC. They supported a truly independent policy and the development of equal and friendly relations with the nonaligned and other countries. The Greek people's verdict was clear and we believe the new government and the parliament will respect it. The Cypriot people, who were thrown into their greatest tragedy by the NATO conspiracy, hope that a radical change in Greek foreign policy and the decisive development of Greece's relations with the nonaligned and socialist countries, which support our struggle, will decisively contribute to the promotion of a just and permanent solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of the relevant UN resolutions and the summit agreements."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA on 20 October in the "Positions" column carries a commentary headed "PASOK's Victory," pointing out that "PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou's statement the day before yesterday to President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou that he will support him for the auspicious conclusion of the Cyprus issue is a statement which certainly should not pass unobserved by anyone." The commentary continues that a coincidence of views already exists between Papandreou and Kiprianou on the Cyprus problem and concludes that "we believe PASOK's victory the day before yesterday in the Greek elections creates both for it and for Papandreou increased obligations regarding the Cyprus problem. At the same time, we believe that the support and help of the new Greek Government, the political parties and of all the Greek people for Cyprus will not only continue but will intensify even more, in view of the critical moments through which our national problem is passing."

O KIRIKAS on 20 October carries an editorial "And Now Andreas' Hour" in which it notes: "The political change in Greece will have its repercussions and consequences in Cyprus. When he was in the opposition, Andreas Papandreou clearly and categorically defined his party's policy toward the Cyprus problem. His preelection positions are well known. And of course, it is well known that in politics the implementation of words and proof of consistency is not always 'necessary'. However, some commitments have been undertaken, something out of all the things that have been said must be done; some part of the declarations must be implemented. Will the new Greek leadership leave the Cyprus problem on its fixed course or will the tactics being followed be upset and the general framework of the problem's evolution be changed?"

The editorial concludes: "Cypriot Hellenism currently has deposited its hopes and expectations on Andreas Papandreou's patriotism and pure intentions. Should Cyprus continue to decide and Greece continue to support, we hope that Cyprus' decisions will be correct and Greece's support visible and practical. If, on the other hand, the decisions will be made jointly, then the support should develop into a common struggle with the wish that common anxiety should be absent."

Finally, on 20 October, I DHILINI in its "Our Opinion" column, after noting Papandreou's declared rejection of the intercommunal dialogue and disagreement with basic issues for dealing with the national problem, emphasizes: "Given the above facts and in view of the revision of the course and dealings which concern the national cause, the talks between Papandreou and Kiprianou next Friday will be of decisive significance because a discussion will take place on Waldheim's new ideas to which the Cyprus Government should soon give a final answer, so that the secretary general may either make known officially or cancel his intentions for progress in the Cyprus problem."

LISSARIDHIS STATEMENT UPON DEPARTURE FOR ATHENS

[Text] EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis left for Athens today and will be received by Mr Papandreou tomorrow.

In a statement, Mr Lissaridhis said that the Cypriot people are celebrating PASOK's victory as their own victory, not only for the change that is taking place in Greece, but also because they are confident that there is a change in the quality of conditions under which the Cypriot people's struggle is being waged; given the fact that PASOK has taken a very clear position on the Cyprus issue, regarding it as a problem of occupation and violation of human rights.

LABOR MINISTER DEPARTS FOR LIBYA VISIT 20 OCT

[Text] Minister of Labor Stavrinakis departed for Libya today at the invitation of the Libyan Government. In Libya, the minister of labor will meet with his counterpart with whom he will discuss and review the results to date of the interstate agreement between Cyprus and Libya, which was signed in 1976, on issues of manpower.

Stavrinakis will also meet with other officials of the Libyan Government to discuss the possibility of employing a greater number of scientists in that country. In addition, the possibility will be discussed of a greater use of Cypriot educational establishments to educate Libyan students in technical professions and business administration.

Stavrinakis will also have the opportunity to discuss the possibility of signing an agreement of reciprocity between Cyprus and Libya on issues of social insurance.

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA ON DENKTAS' PARTITIONIST POLICY

NC180726 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 18 Oct 81 p 7

[From the "Positions" column: "Partitionist Solution"]

[Text] The preparation of a flag for the "independent state" which Denktas and his cadres threaten to declare is another proof of the Turkish side's true intentions about the Cyprus problem. These intentions are interpreted at the negotiations table as a continuation and intensification of the intransigent and partitionist policy, a reneging from what has been agreed upon between the two sides and, moreover, as a refusal to show good will and to positively respond to our side's constructive stand.

We have not been surprised by the recent outbursts of chauvinism and partitionist passion by the Turkish Cypriot leadership. Such outbursts are skillfully repeated every time some prospects for developments become obvious, either through the submission of proposals or following some initiative in addition to our own side's efforts which aim at averting a deadlock in the talks.

As the Turkish Cypriot BULLETIN NEWS from the north has confirmed, a declaration of independence for the occupied territories has always been Denktas' ardent desire. Thus, it is easy for every objective foreign observer to ask how is it really possible to expect a solution of the Cyprus problem when the other side responds in this way to the efforts which the Greek Cypriot side and the Cyprus Government have been exerting either at the negotiations table or elsewhere.

DURDURAN ON EFFECTS OF GREEK ELECTION RESULTS

TA201231 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] The leader of the opposition Communal Liberation Party, Mr Durduran, has said that if the Greek Cypriot leader Mr Kiprianou adapted himself to the new atmosphere in Greece and adopted a tougher policy on the Cyprus problem, this would create a situation close to de facto enosis. He also said that there would be an appropriate reaction to it from the Turkish Cypriot side.

In a written statement on the results of the general elections in Greece, Mr Durduran recalled that the Greek Socialist Party PASOK which won the elections was the supporter of the Greek Cypriot EDEK Party, a group with extreme views which maintained that Greece was pursuing a policy conciliatory to Turkey and that Greece should abandon this policy.

In these circumstances, he said, the attitude of the Greek Cypriot administration was of great importance. Mr Durduran stressed that the Kiprianou administration had no right or power to adapt its policies to that of PASOK, as if the southern part of Cyprus was annexed to Greece. He called for an urgent settlement of the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks and for an end to the danger of the Cyprus problem being taken out of the island.

Mr Durduran said that Mr Kiprianou's proposed visit to Athens, as if the Cyprus problem would be given a new direction soon after the results of the Greek elections were known, created suspicion. The best action of the Greek Cypriot administration, he said, would be to prepare a reply to the latest Turkish Cypriot initiatives and make proposals proper to the earnest attitude of the Turkish Cypriot side. Failure to reply to the Turkish Cypriot initiatives, he concluded, would not be in the interest of either the Turkish Cypriots or Greek Cypriot side.

SUREC CRITICIZES STATEMENTS ON INDEPENDENCE

TA201238 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] A deputy of the Communal Liberation Party from Nicosia, Mr Surec, has said that the country was at a very important phase of both internal and external problems. Mr Surec was addressing the Turkish Cypriot legislative assembly meeting this morning.

On economic problems, he said that these could not be solved by copying systems from abroad but by implementing a plan which would be suitable for the needs of the Turkish Cypriot community.

On external problems, he said that contacts both by President Denktas and the parliamentary delegation, and statements by officials in Turkey showed that the world was recognizing the reality of the Turkish Federated State.

He said that this was also raising the prestige of the Turkish Cypriot community. He pointed out that officials of world countries had now started to stress that the Cyprus problem would be solved through negotiations between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities, within the framework of an independent, nonaligned and bizonal federal system.

Mr Surec later criticized the government for calling for the [Unilateral] declaration of an independent state while at the same time stating that there was an atmosphere in favor of the Turkish Cypriot community. He stressed that the declaration of independence would mean the union of southern Cyprus with Greece and that this side should never be forgotten.

He repeated the call that the unanimous decision of the legislative assembly on 5 November 1976 should be adhered to and the Turkish Cypriot cause explained to foreign countries within its framework.

PAPANDREOU LOOKS FOR COOPERATION WITH EUROPE

NC200813 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Chairman of PASOK Papandreou interview with Eurovision -- date and place not given]

[Text] The victory in the elections of the day before yesterday is a milestone of great significance for Greek society and for Greece itself. We believe that it is a significant movement for Europe. France was first and now Greece follows, and it is very obvious that Europe's progressive forces, especially southern Europe's, are contemplating power and leading their countries toward a different road -- a road that is profoundly progressive and at the same time democratic. I want to assure our European friends that the new government's policy will serve democratic government and peace, a peace that is the prerequisite for democracy and socialism. We wish, the PASOK chairman concluded, close cooperation on all issues which concern Greece and Europe itself. I hope we shall have the active support of the governments of Western Europe.

KKE 19 OCT STATEMENT ON ELECTION RESULTS

[Text of 19 October statement by the KKE Central Committee Political Bureau]

[Text] The Greek people have condemned the Atlantic, antipeople's dictatorial policy of the New Democracy party. They have taken the parliamentary majority away from New Democracy, have secured a big majority for the forces of change, and have strengthened the KKE. This big democratic victory has been the result of long term people's struggles against the rightwing for national independence, democratization and improvement of the people's living. With its firm front against the rightwing and its unswerving dedication to the people's unity, the KKE has again contributed decisively to the strenghening of the people's desire to change and to the crushing defeat of the rightwing.

In addition to increasing its parliamentary strength, the KKE has resolutely strengthened its positions toward the people. Its positions on the content and means of the change find strong response within the broader people's ranks which desire the change. The party's real political strength and influence, the radiance of its ideas and policy greatly surpass the percentage that it has won in this specific election battle.

On behalf of the KKE Central Committee, the Political Bureau congratulates the party members, followers and friends who, with their activity that was full of self-sacrifices, have waged a difficult and complicated election battle, have decisively contributed to the rightwing's defeat and have secured the strengthening of the KKE influence.

The KKE has waged the election battle on behalf of the entire leftwing, rallied around it the leftwing fighters and constitutes a guarantee for the further strengthening and reallying of the Greek leftwing. On the other hand, the people have isolated and rejected those trends and groups which regardless of their motives, had their forefront turned against the KKE and not against the rightwing.

The Sunday election victory and the formation of a new government create a new state of affairs. The prerequisites are created for the country to start a democratic course on the path to the change. Nevertheless, the rightwing has under its control and influence key positions and mechanisms within the state machinery. The oligarchy and imperialists will raise any sort of obstacles to foil or restrict the changes which are needed by the country and the people have demanded through their vote.

A government which will be based on the people's movement and all the forces of change can face these problems successfully and realize the people's explicit mandate to promote substantive measures in securing national independence, democratization and economic revival and development to the people's benefit.

The safeguarding of the people's victory, consolidation of democratic tranquility and promotion of the change demand vigilance, the people's unity and struggle and joint action by all the forces of change against the rightwing, oligarchy and Americanocracy.

The KKE will fulfill its mission in the new conditions being formed toward defending the working people's interests and our national independence, toward the promotion and consolidation of the change and toward the vindication of the people's expectations for a true change.

[Signed] The KKE Central Committee Political Bureau, 19 October 1981

ELEVTHEROTIPIA COMMENTS ON ELECTION RESULTS

On State Department Statement

NC201803 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 20 Oct 81 p 4

[From the "Views" column: "Greek-American Affairs"]

[Text] The first State Department statement on the Greek election results has been typical and perfect. The statement came from a State Department spokesman who said: "We believe in good mutual relations based on the interests of both Greece and the United States. We wish the best of relations with the Papandreou government and we shall seek to do whatever we can to develop them."

Judging this statement from the Greek point of view, we have the view the Papandreou government will also wish the same kind of relations with the confederation on the other side of the Atlantic. Indeed, the Greeks do not forget that the prime minister who takes over today has repeatedly declared that he intends to follow a "genuinely multidimensional foreign policy" which will aim at the development of the relations of his country "with the North and with the South and with the East and with the West." Within such a very broad framework, it is natural that the United States will occupy a prominent position of interest, because it is one of the superpowers of the present world, and Greece has no reason not to have good and friendly relations with it.

However, all this is said provided that these relations will be based "on the interests of both Greece and the United States" as the State Department spokesman rightly said. And this is because during the postwar history of Greek-U.S. relations there have been times -- as we all know -- when the Greek people's well-understood interests did not happen to be identical with the wrongly-understood [as published] interests of the U.S. foreign policy. Any expansion on this subject -- a much discussed subject -- would be both pointless and untimely at a moment when the new political authority of the country will definitely have discussions on it, having to its credit the broad popular confidence which will make its actions easier.

If Washington really believes in the statement of its spokesman for the development of relations on the basis of mutual interests, then there definitely will be no problems. Besides, history has proved that the diplomacy, "the lips say one thing but our heart says something else," has not been always as successful as those who introduced it probably expected it to be.

Editorial on Mandate

[Editorial: "The First Message"]

[Text] As of today Greece has a new, popularly elected, strong government; the PASOK Socialist Government. Our people, with their characteristic maturity, decided that the hour for a major change had come. They removed the rightwing from power and with firmness and enthusiasm entrusted it to Andreas Papandreou and his collaborators.

The popular mandate to the new government is clear: Put into practice -- make it a tangible reality -- political democracy in this country. Proceed steadily toward social democracy and the conquest of national independence.

The new socialist government is definitely fully aware of this popular mandate, of this ostentatious mandate. Equally well, it knows that one of the first steps, the most important one, is none other -- it should not be any other -- than the liberation of democracy from the chains imposed on it by the rightwing.

This means immediate equality of citizens, substantiated by deeds; recognition of pluralism and the voice of the masses, the functioning of political dialogue, and uncommited political expression at all levels of public life, from Parliament to the mass media. In short, the functioning of the democratic regime must become substantive; the opposition should at last be given the rights for which provision is made in the constitution -- the rights which have been violated by the rightwing governments.

Andreas Papandreou himself, the chairman of PASOK who takes over as prime minister as of today, defined in his first statement on Sunday evening the meaning of the new democratic reality: The PASOK government will be a government of all the Greeks.

The opposition must be respected, it must be strong and must have its rights as the second pillar of power in a faultless course toward democracy and socialism. This must be the first meaning of change.

AVEROF ISSUES FAREWELL MESSAGE TO ARMED FORCES

[Text] In a farewell message to the armed forces, outgoing Deputy Prime Minister and Defense Minister Averof stresses that he feels, like all the Greeks, proud, because, despite difficulties at this moment, we have one of the best armies in Europe. He also stresses that the armed forces will continue showing the same devotion to duty that they have showed in the last 7 years.

PROSECUTOR DEMANDS DEATH SENTENCE FOR 14 PERSONS

[Text] The military prosecutor of the Ankara martial law command has demanded death sentences for a total of 14 persons in two different cases. Our correspondent has learned that the prosecutor filed a case against 22 members of the illegal organization "Light on the Road to the Liberation of Labor" at the Ankara martial law command 2d military court. The prosecutor is demanding death sentences for 7 of the 22 suspects, charging them with armed robbery, and prison terms of up to 15 years for the rest of the suspects.

A case has been filed against 11 members of the illegal Kawa [Kurdish separatist organization] at the Ankara martial law command 3d military court. The military prosecutor said the suspects will be tried for having murdered the mayor of Muradiye, a district of Van, and for throwing explosives into the Iranian and Iraqi Embassies in Ankara. The prosecutor is demanding death sentences for seven of the suspects and prison terms of 2 to 15 years for the remaining four.

DENKTAS ARRIVES IN ISTANBUL FROM FOREIGN TOUR

TA210544 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, who was visiting the United States, England and Belgium to hold talks on the latest developments in Cyprus, arrived in Istanbul by air last night. In a statement at Yesilkoy airport, Denktas said that his contacts were positive. Denktas added that the talks he held with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim had been especially beneficial and that he had briefed Waldheim on the latest developments in Cyprus.

Referring to the elections in Greece, Denktas said that the Cyprus policy to be pursued by this new government is very significant. He concluded by saying that the Turkish Cypriot side is determined to continue its good willed efforts toward the solution of the problem.

COUNCIL ADOPTS LAW ON MILITARY COURT CASES

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ANTWERP BOMBING DISPUTED

Rightwing Group's Claim

NC201351 Paris AFP in English 1346 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Text] Brussels, 20 Oct (AFP) -- The right-wing group Action Directe-Section Belgique (Direct Action-Belgian Section) claimed responsibility for today's attack that killed one person and wounded 95 in a Jewish section of Antwerp, northern Belgium.

An anonymous telephone caller claiming to represent the group, which is based in France, told the Belgian news agency BELGA that it carried out the bombing not for racist reasons but "to make the government conscious that other attacks could be committed."

Action Directe's French section was blamed for a series of attacks on Jewish-owned businesses last year in Paris.

Spokesman's Denial

NC201711 Paris AFP in English 1648 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 20 Oct (AFP) -- Spokesmen claiming to speak for the right-wing group Action Directe (Direct Action) today denied the group was responsible for the explosion that killed two people and wounded nearly 100 today in a Jewish section of Antwerp, northern Belgium.

'Black September' Claim

[Excerpt] Antwerp, Belgium, 21 Oct (AFP) -- The explosion yesterday of a booby-trapped car outside a synagogue in the heart of the diamond centre here, was today claimed to have been carried out by the dissident Palestinian group "Black September" which promised three more bomb attacks in Belgium.

The gendarmerie headquarters here said that an anonymous telephone caller, claiming to be speaking for "Black September", said that two attacks were planned in Brussels and another in Antwerp. He ended the call shouting several times "Palestine will conquer".

POPULAR ALLIANCE WINS IN GALICIA BY TWO VOTES

LD210852 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpt] In Galicia, the Popular Alliance slogan, a Galician Like You, has shown its effectiveness in the elections. Manuel Fraga's Popular Alliance candidates in this election for the first autonomous parliament in Galicia have won the day, defeating the men of the Democratic Center Union [UCD] by two seats. The results are as follows:

Popular Alliance	26 seats
UCD	24 seats
Socialist Party of Galicia	17 seats
Popular National Bloc of Galicia	3 seats
Galician Left	1 seat

The total turnout was 43 percent.

While the turnout for the elections in Galicia was relatively low, in Andalusia yesterday the referendum to endorse the autonomy statute produced a turnout of 53.6 percent. The percentage of votes was 89.4.

CABINET DISCUSSES REAGAN NUCLEAR WAR REMARKS

LD211925 Hamburg DPA in German 1616 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- The Federal Government is convinced that by his recent controversial remarks about the possibility of a limited nuclear war, U.S. President Ronald Reagan has "neither called into doubt nor weakened" the continuing Western deterrent strategy. After today's Bonn cabinet meeting, government spokesman Lothar Ruehl informed the media of Chancellor Schmidt's statement.

According to Ruehl, the U.S. President's remarks in the light of the English text and an official German translation by the Foreign Ministry's language service were the main topics at the cabinet meeting. According to the spokesman, the chancellor, with the concurrence of the cabinet, concluded the following "about possibly ambiguous" Reagan remarks "and their misinterpretations which have become public":

A. NATO's deterrent strategy of threatening to meet an attack on West Europe by all suitable military means is unchanged: It must never be misunderstood as preparation for waging war in Europe. Reagan has neither called this strategy into doubt or question nor weakened it.

B. A military conflict in Europe in which the U.S. military potential is not involved was and is inconceivable. Proof of this is the presence of U.S. troops and U.S. military equipment in Europe. It also has the "profound political meaning of firmly linking the security and peace of all states belonging to the Western alliance."

C. The best guarantee of an effective deterrent even in case of crisis is an approximate military balance.

D. This balance is to be held at the lowest possible level: This is in the interest of all states concerned and "particularly in the interest of the divided German people."

Schmidt Sees "Security Partnership" Between East and West

E. The Federal Government has therefore insistently called for negotiations on the limitation of medium-range weapons: It shares the success in that these negotiations (between Washington and Moscow) are due to begin next month. It notes with satisfaction that Reagan has expressed himself exactly in the same way in this respect. The ideal result of the negotiations would be the total renunciation of medium-range weapons (zero option).

F. The visit of Leonid Brezhnev, Soviet head of state, to Bonn at the end of November is of great importance in connection with these negotiations. "We interpret it as an expression of the security partnership which is also perceived and acknowledged by the USSR, that is, the need for mutual partnership conduct for preserving and consolidating the common peace."

Government spokesman Ruehl said that Federal Foreign Minister Genscher will explain the Bonn government's view during his talks with President Reagan and U.S. Secretary of State Haig at the North-South summit in Cancun and, at the same time, seek further elucidations. Defense Minister Apel has already discussed the matter with his U.S. counterpart Caspar Weinberger at the meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group.

According to Bonn sources, the 2-hour discussion at the cabinet meeting was started by Federal Family Affairs Minister Antje Huber. She voiced the fear that Reagan's remarks might be misunderstood to mean that Europe could be the theater of a "war by proxy" of the two great powers. This might give rise to grave concern both among the older wartime generation and the young. Other cabinet members at the meeting likewise spoke of Reagan's remarks as "being at least capable of interpretation" and possibly having a "very bad effect."

FDP security expert Juergen Moellemann said at a news conference that the U.S. President had "said nothing new," but perhaps had not been sufficiently "precise" in explaining Western nuclear strategy. He emphasized that Europeans must not be detached from the United States in either the burdens or the risks of defense. Even delicate aspects and problems of Western security policy should be discussed frankly within the NATO alliance. Some of the "excitement" of the past few days is not easy to understand.

CDU CHAIRMAN KOHL COMMENTS ON U.S. TALKS

[Text] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl gained the impression during his week-long visit to the United States that the Americans are seriously interested in the success of the disarmament negotiations. Kohl told the press in Bonn today that there was full agreement between himself and those to whom he had spoken -- among them President Reagan -- on the need for effective arms control and disarmament. A precondition for the success of the talks continues to be cohesion of the NATO alliance. Thus, Washington is interested in close coordination between the partners, even if this entails delays.

In answer to a question on the counterarming debate which has started in the FRG and in Europe in connection with the NATO dual decision, Kohl said that nowhere in the United States had he encountered the opinion that missiles could be deployed here against the will of the people. On the recent remarks by Reagan about containing nuclear conflicts, Kohl said he believes a war with tactical nuclear weapons in Europe could not be limited. In his view, the United States is keeping to the flexible response strategy. Kohl said the United States is trying to develop clear and comprehensible proposals which will continue to guarantee deterrence.

Kohl said he found "great concern" in the United States about developments in Europe, particularly in the FRG. Whereas the relationship between America and France under the Socialist Mitterrand is being strengthened, questions are being asked about the FRG's attitude. Concern about the "wave of anti-Americanism" could be sensed everywhere. Kohl said he made it clear in his talks that neither communism nor neonazism stood a chance in the FRG. "But if a neutralist [word indistinct] should unite with a nationalist idea, this would be a movement away from the West and toward the East."

APEL REPORTS ON NATO PLANNING GROUP MEETING

DW220927 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1915 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Reporter Schulze interview with FRG Defense Minister Hans Apel in Gleneagles; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Apel] The communique adopted here, which is binding on all NATO states, fully outlines our position, our joint position, including the American position. First, the Americans are not striving for superiority. They want to achieve a nuclear balance on as low a level as possible. Second, the NATO strategy remains as it is, namely, a flexible response strategy. Third, a regional nuclear conflict in Europe is being ruledout.

[Question] So President Reagan has thus been disproved?

[Answer] I would not put it that way. The communique expresses what the NATO defense ministers mean and say on behalf of their governments. That is binding on all of us.

[Question] You thoroughly discussed movements that have arisen among the people of Europe, such as the peace movement and similar things. Aren't you afraid that such remarks as the localization of nuclear war could fan such movements?

[Answer] I do not rule that out. Yet we must seek a quiet and calm dialogue with the peace movement and must not use slogans to attack each other. Pursuing a security policy in the interest of our country is too important for us to argue just with slogans.

RAU EXPLAINS FRG PEACE MOVEMENT TO BREZHNEV

[Text] Cologne-Hamburg 22 Oct (DPA) -- North Rhine-Westphalia Minister-President Johannes Rau pointed out in his talks with Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev that the peace movement in the Federal Republic is aimed against missile arming in East and West and is not anti-American in direction.

In a telephone interview with West German radio, Rau said today that it seemed right to him to make this clear to the USSR nad also to point this out in fairness to the peace movement "so that the situation in the Federal Republic may be judged correctly." Although the peace movement might well contain the odd sentiment against the present U.S. administration, the impulse and motive of this peace movement are to achieve a reduction of arms no matter in whose hands they are or might be held.

BAHR INTERVIEW IN SOVIET JOURNAL ON FRG-USSR TIES

[Text] Moscow, 21 Oct (DPA) -- Relations between the FRG and the USSR, in the opinion of SPD Presidium member and disarmament expert Egon Bahr, can lead to improve relations between the superpowers. In an interview with the Soviet weekly LITERATURNAYA GAZETA on the visit to Bonn by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev at the end of November, Bahr said that regardless of a certain deterioration in Soviet-American relations, the FRG and the USSR could continue their cooperation.

Brezhnev's visit has acquired extraordinary importance because it comes just before the start of the Geneva negotiations on limitation of medium-range weapons, Bahr said, according to the journal. He expressed the conviction that the USSR and the FRG "are concerned about the need to secure the military balance in Europe." Continuation of the policy of detente is of fundamental importance.

Finally, expanded German-Soviet economic relations would, in Bahr's opinion, be an additional factor in the strengthening of peace. He said he hopes that the scepticism that might be felt in some quarters about such cooperation would be allayed.

SCHMIDT: DISCUSSION OF SUCCESSOR 'VERY PREMATURE'

LD212200 Hamburg DPA in German 1641 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 Oct (DPA) -- Chancellor Schmidt does not intend to yield to a successor before the 1984 Bundestag elections. In an interviewwith SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG (Thursday's edition), the chancellor described any discussion about a successor as "very premature."

Concerning the visit of Soviet head of state Brezhnev to Bonn at the end of November, Schmidt said that despite many significant differences of views there is a certain measure of "agreement on fundamentals." He knows regarding Brezhnev "that this man must and wants to avoid war in Europe, and Brezhnev knows that I know this."

The interview was prereleased in edited form to DPA.

OFFICIALS NOTE REDUCED EFFICIENCY OF ARMY

DW211307 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2000 GMT 20 Oct 81

[Reported Wiendl interview with Peter-Kurt Wuerzbach, CDU Bundestag deputy and member of the defense committee, and Army Inspector Mainhard Glanz; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] The CDU/CSU maintains that the Bundeswehr's preparedness for action is already endangered. Has that point actually been reached?

[Wuerzbach] Unfortunately, this point actually has been reached. Today, the Bundeswehr is prepared for action only to a limited degree. A number of alarming examples exist -- examples contained even in official statements and papers of the government parties and the Federal Government.

[Question] A question to new Army Inspector Glanz: Does the curtailed 1981 budget endanger the training of recruits?

[Glanz] We all know that training calls for careful planning. It is not a day-to-day business and must make sense. We have been considerably handicapped in this respect by the recent adoption of the federal budget and by two serious fuel and training funds cuts, which surprised the troops. We have not succeeded in fully compensating for these handicaps. We still have to do this. We will succeed with regard to most soldiers but those soldiers who completed their military service by the end of September lack certain training It may not be grave, but we will be unable to make up for it.

MINISTER COMMENTS ON ELBE BORDER SITUATION

LD161700 Hamburg DPA in German 1526 GMT 16 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 16 Oct (DPA) -- Federal Minister for Inner-German Relations Egon Franke stressed the Federal Government view to the effect that there is no question of settling the Elbe border with the GDR purely on an inner-German basis. Franke wrote in the SPD PRESS SERVICE on Friday that the Federal Government irrevocably maintains that the settling of the border in the disputed Elbe sector remains based purely on the agreements, decisions and practices of the occupying powers.

The allied documents are not as clear, however, as might be wished. On their basis, there is a document according to which the border is the northeastern bank of the river but there are also solutions according to which the border is along the center of the river.

NEWSPAPERS VIEW GREEK ELECTION RESULTS

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

DW201107 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 20 Oct 81

[Commentary signed -zer: "Greece's Own Interests"]

[Text] In contrast to the election victory of the French Socialists, where Washington reacted hastily with discontent, the U.S. Government hurries now -- right after the election victory of Greek Socialist leader Andreas Papandreou -- to point out protectively that one does not worry about the future. The question is whether the Americans supercede their worries by ignoring them or whether they believe that Papandreou's intentions are not as bad as they seem.

The man now to head the Greek Government was an American citizen for a long time. He started his political career with the conviction that his country must pursue a foreign policy independent of both power blocs. That was put down in Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement PASOK. Even though many observers believe that Papandreou's demand that Greece quit NATO has been implemented as little as his demand for quitting the European Community, the fact remains that these were central election campaign arguments.

Greece's quitting NATO would most seriously hit the alliance in many ways -- but also the country itself. Together with Turkey, Greece represents the south-east pillar of NATO. If Athens quit, it would considerably change the military situation in the eastern Mediterranean. The alliance would then be forced even more than before to rely on Turkey, a country that is more and more in danger of remaining a military dictatorship. Such a decision would certainly be hard to make for the NATO partners. As for the European Community, Papandreou's threat must not be taken too seriously. Greece's quitting would hit the country much harder than the other European Community partners.

Greece's allies should not forget now that PASOK is not so much concerned by world policy as by the country's own interests.

DIE WELT Commentary

DW201313 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 Oct 81 p 1

[E. Antonaros commentary: "Landslide in Greece"]

[Text] With Andreas Papandreou the winner of the Greek elections, the West has gotten a difficult partner. But it would be wrong to diabolize from the very beginning the new government chief with whom NATO and the European Community must live.

One must admit, however, that Papandreou's government program, as announced repeatedly in the past 7 years as well as in the spectacular election campaign, contains quitting NATO, revising relations with the European Community and Greeks' taking over U.S. bases. The West cannot like these three points because Greece is an important cornerstone of the Atlantic defense system.

But it would be rash to take Papandreou's election slogans too literally. One makes domestic policy in Greece with the help of foreign policy. Once opinion polls presented Papandreou as the sure election winner, Papandreou changed his tone. He toned down his slogans in a statesmanly way, avoiding being pinned down and answering concrete questions.

It does not mean, however, that the Socialist viewed with concern by the West has turned into an innocent lamb. As former Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said correctly, the danger is not so great that Papandreou will implement his far-reaching foreign political threats, it is more likely that he will "call everything in question," thus making Greece's Western allies and partners feel insecure.

Papandreou, no Marxist himself, has outmaneuvered the radicals in his party with his high election victory. The French experience could be repeated: Papandreou could become more of an inconvenience to his own compatriots than to the Western discussion partners.

CHEYSSON DISCUSSES MIDEAST POLICY, 'FAHD PLAN'

PM211205 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Oct 81 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Cheysson Thinks 'Readiness To Negotiate Greater Than Ever' in Near East"]

[Text] Addressing the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Commission on Thursday 15 October, External Relations Minister Cheysson recalled the principles on which the French Government's Near East policy is based.

According to the commission's communique these principles are:

" -- Security within internationally recognized borders for all states in the region, Israel and the others, including the Palestinian state which may be created by the peace settlement;

" -- The Palestinian people's right to self-determination, including self-determination within state structures;

" -- The unacceptability of unilateral measures contrary to international rules and UN resolutions;

" -- Negotiations on all subjects between the parties directly concerned; countries foreign to the region should merely facilitate and guarantee such an agreement."

The communique adds: "This approach is accepted and respected by all our interlocutors, whereas in the past the bad relations between France and Israel and the condemnation of the Camp David agreements made any effective French contribution to the peace process illusory.

"In this connection Mr Claude Cheysson clearly confirmed that France approved the Camp David agreements even if they did not solve all the problems; particularly the Palestinian problem, which had now become the most important one.... He noted that the anxiety shown about the risks of the present situation was being reflected in a greater readiness to negotiate than ever.

"President as-Sadat, who was an exceptional man, was aware that the Camp David agreements were a step toward peace but would not make it possible to reach an overall settlement in the region. For that, all Arab states and the PLO must be involved in negotiations. In this framework the recent 'Fahd declaration' which recognizes that all states in the region, and hence Israel, have the right to security, constitutes the most important step forward in the Near East in a long time and a good basis for negotiations.

"Stressing that France and its European partners are determined to support Mr Mubarak, the new Egyptian president, by all possible means, Mr Cheysson said he thought that the statement by various Arab leaders supporting the Fahd plan were positive.... He pointed out that current American policy, which is mainly concerned with aligning the moderate states in the region to contain Soviet influence without seeking to promote an overall settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is not without dangers. Mr Cheysson said that our European partners largely shared our analyses and objectives in this region."

In reply to a question, the minister "expressed the hope that Israel would not become locked in a position which consists of denying that the West Bank and Gaza are occupied territories." In reply to Commission Chairman Maurice Faure, who asked whether the USSR would not necessarily be involved in an overall settlement, Mr Cheysson said that "France considered that it was up to the parties directly concerned to reach agreement, outside countries only being called upon to give support and guarantees at a later date. He noted that things have not yet reached that stage but that the USSR would be bound to be involved subsequently."

JOSPIN DISCUSSES REAGAN'S NUCLEAR WAR STATEMENT

LD212222 Paris Domestic Service in French 1810 GMT 21 Oct 81

["Face the People" program: interview with Lionel Jospin, national secretary of the Socialist Party, by correspondent Gilbert Denoyan -- live]

[Excerpt] [Question] A few days ago, Ronald Reagan said that a nuclear war limited to Europe, without the Russians or Americans being involved, is not inconceivable. Surely this raises a number of questions for you as a Socialist official. To begin with, let me put two questions to you. Does this not bring today's NATO into question, and secondly, does this not imply that a real European army is perhaps to be created?

[Answer] I do not think that these remarks made by the U.S. President are completely new from a conceptual point of view.

[Question] This is confirmation -- the first time that a U.S. President...

[Answer -- interrupting] Yes, you have put your finger on the political reality of the problem. These concepts of the so-called graduated response, the flexible response, the idea that one does not climb the tragic steps of nuclear escalation at full speed to reach the strategic level -- destroying the main military installations, towns perhaps, economic, military, demographic or psychological strongholds of the two superpowers -- but that this can be climbed gradually, responding at the appropriate level without a devastating nuclear fire breaking out throughout the territory of the two superpowers. [sentence as heard] These concepts of a graduated response, which can be at the level of conventional weapons, or for example tactical nuclear weapons, belong to the ideological panoply, to NATO's strategic concepts, and on the other side, to those of the Soviet Union and its military experts.

You know this is not the conceptual nor the strategic framework in which the French military doctrine was formed, a lot of which we inherited, it must be said. We have neither the means nor the wish to have such a large panoply and we think that it is by absolute deterrence that we can defend our independence and, perhaps, preserve our territory.

So, these concepts are not new but it is true that when the president of a country as powerful as the United States mentions this possibility publicly this is a problem, a serious problem. This means that people are still working toward a situation in which they think that limited nuclear wars can be fought and won. In my opinion, this has a destabilizing effect.

Well, this concerns U.S. strategies and concepts and I have also noted that the White House has felt it necessary to issue a correction, to provide a nuance to Ronald Reagan's original remarks. This does not concern the French concepts. I am not saying that this does not concern us at all but it is not likely to seriously change our own concepts.

INDIA TO BUY MIRAGE JETS WORTH $3 BILLION

NC211532 Paris AFP in English 1455 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 21 Oct (AFP) -- India is preparing to buy 150 French-built Mirage 2000 fighter interceptor jets worth nearly $3 billion although the price and delivery date have yet to be agreed, it was learnt here today.

The details came from sources close to the secretary general of India's Foreign Ministry R.D. Sathe who is in Paris to prepare for the official visit here by India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi from November 12 to 14.

A high-level military mission from India headed by P.N. Kaul arrived here yesterday to continue technical talks concerning the purchase of the planes and of other arms systems, particularly tanks and antitank rockets.

Sources close to Mr Sathe stressed that India does not want to become involved in an arms race on the sub-continent. India's decision to acquire such a sophisticated plane resulted from Pakistan's acquisition of American F16 fighters.

The sources said that the arrival of the advanced planes in the area of the Indian Ocean would cause an "unacceptable imbalance."

Contrary to some reports, there was no competition between the Mirage 2000, the Soviet-built MIG-25, the Franco-British Jaguar and the Swedish Viggen.

It was recalled that India bought 92 Jaguars in 1978, while the MIG and Viggen -- although being far cheaper than the Mirage -- are not in the same class.

The Indian sources said that while India has close relations with the Soviet Union, Mrs Gandhi's government wants to diversify its sources of arms supply.

The sources said that India had tried unsuccessfully to acquire American planes.

The Mirage, while slightly inferior to the F16 on technical grounds, is the only Western aircraft capable of comparison. Indian military sources said that Indian pilots will have to compensate for the difference by the quality of their flying.

India wants to take delivery of the first batch as soon as possible, that is towards the end of 1983 or early in 1984 when Pakistan is due to receive the first 16's.

Conclusions of the contract will doubtless [word indistinct] months of talks, but the talks symbolise the new convergence of political views held in Paris and New Delhi.

India gave a warm welcome to a statement by France's Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson in New Delhi at the end of August, announcing the launch of a planetary new deal.

This programme signifies that Paris sees India [word indistinct] three pillars, together with Mexico and Algeria, on which it can count for support for this policy.

ANGOLAN PRESIDENT LEAVES PARIS EARLY; NO STATEMENT

[Unattributed report: "President dos Santos' Visit to Paris"]

[Text] No statement was made after the talks which the Angolan head of state and President Mitterrand had on Thursday 15 October. The press conference which Mr dos Santos was to give was canceled while his departure was moved forward by 2 hours. Nonetheless, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson stressed that this visit, the first to France by an Angolan head of state, is a "very important event." Bilateral cooperation was not entered into during the meeting but the situation in southern Africa and the Namibian problem were discussed.

OFFICIALS COMMENT ON REAGAN NUCLEAR REMARKS

Foreign Minister

AU211638 Rome ANSA in English 1548 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Oct (ANSA) -- United States President Ronald Reagan's remarks on a limited nuclear confrontation in Europe and Italy's exclusion from the North-South summit on development and cooperation in Cancun, Mexico, this week were the major issues handled by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in a statement to the Senate Budget Committee this afternoon.

Speaking about the controversy triggered by Reagan's discussion of nuclear war in Europe, Colombo referred to the information furnished by the Italian Embassy in Washington and subsequent White House statements according to which the President was quoted out of context by the press and his remarks were consistent with the allied strategy by a "flexible response."

The foreign minister recalled that this doctrine is based on the concept that NATO, as a strictly defensive alliance, must be capable of dissuading the enemy or, if dissuasion is not enough, capable of countering any form of aggression through responses graduated to the scale of this aggression. In strategic planning involving Europe and the United States, the Italian diplomatic chief said, the fundamental element is deterrence, which has served to safeguard peace in Europe.

Reagan's recent statements imply no change in allied strategy, which remains the strategy mapped out in NATO defense planning, the foreign minister added.

Touching on the exclusion of Italy from the Cancun conference, Colombo challenged the idea that the country was not invited because it has no policy proposals.

"It would be well for us to not provide an alibi to those who made this political mistake with justifications linked to internal polemics among political forces."

The foreign minister added that, "Italian North-South policy was disclosed to the United Nations special assembly in August 1980 and was agreed to by all the forces (?present) in the delegation that time."

Defense Spokesman

AU211012 Rome ANSA in English 0811 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Gleneagles (Scotland), 21 Oct (ANSA) -- The defense strategy of the Atlantic alliance was defended Tuesday by a spokesman for Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio at the end of a meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group in this Scottish locality.

NATO's conventional and nuclear forces have for years been planned to involve both Europeans and Americans so as to discourage any eventual offensive action on the part of the Warsaw Pact nations, the spokesman said. It was this type of defensive deterrent that has served to keep the peace in Europe for decades, and therefore no change in this strategy, in Italy or in Europe, can be contemplated, he added.

As to U.S. President Ronald Reagan's recent remarks about the possibility of a limited nuclear war, the spokesman said that this has already been commented on by the U.S. State Department in an official statement and did not constitute any new element in Europe's defensive strategy.

ITALY PROTESTS EXCLUSION FROM MEXICO TALKS

NC210845 Paris AFP in English 0832 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Oct (AFP) -- President Sando Pertini has protested officially about Italy's exclusion from the list of industrialised countries invited to the North-South summit opening in Mexico tomorrow, a reliable source said today. He made the protest in a letter to Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, the source said. Italy is the only member of the "group of seven" industrialized nations not to have been invited. Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo this week termed the decision a "political error" on Mexico's part.

IRAQ'S HAMMADI INVITES COLOMBO TO VISIT

AU210904 Rome ANSA in English 0839 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Oct (ANSA) -- The situation in the Middle East, key international problems and relations between Iraq and Italy were the focus of a meeting between Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi and his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo Tuesday. The two ministers, meeting in Rome, voiced satisfaction over relations between the two countries and agreed that it would be mutually beneficial to further expand these ties. Hammadi officially invited Colombo to make an official visit to Iraq. The invitation was accepted with the date to be set at a future time.

GOVERNMENT 'STRENGTHENED' BY COALITION MEETING

[Excerpt] Rome, 21 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Government emerged strengthened from the encounter Premier Giovanni Spadolini had today with the secretaries of the five parties in his coalition.

Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals were in full agreement on how to cope with two crucial issues: containment of the state budget deficit and of the cost of labor. The majority leaders assured Spadolini of their loyal support in parliament to approve financial legislation that would set a 15 percent inflation ceiling for 1982. The five also pledged to defend the 50,000 billion lire (around five billion dollars) ceiling for the public deficit for next year. With regard to the thorny question of labor costs, the premier and his coalition partners agreed that it was essential that management and labor strike an accord. Any government intervention in this was deemed counterproductive.

The premier, speaking to newsmen at the conclusion of the summit, said the meeting had been "politically very positive." Similar satisfaction was expressed by the secretaries of all the majority parties.

TWO POLICEMEN KILLED IN TERRORIST ATTACK

AU211545 Rome ANSA in English 1513 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 21 Oct (ANSA) -- Two policemen on their way to Rome police headquarters aboard an unmarked car were shot and killed fifteen kilometers from the capital early this morning in an ambush investigators think was staged by rightwing terrorists. The killing came forty-eight hours after two policemen were shot dead in Milan, presumably by terrorists. According to eyewitness accounts of the ambush, the car the policemen were in was brought to a halt at an underpass exit by smokebombs thrown onto [words indistinct] four or more persons. On Monday, two public security police were killed in Milan and a third was injured in a shootout with the passengers of an automobile stopped by the patrol for a routine check. Police think the double slaying in Milan is also the work of terrorists. Today's ambush brought the number of police killed by terrorists in Italy since 1969 up to 76. Another 24 policemen have been wounded in terrorist attacks over the same period.

RIBEIRO DE ALMEIDA RETAINS POSITION AS SPEAKER

[Text] Leonardo Ribeiro de Almeida is still the speaker of the Portuguese parliament, after a stormy parliamentary sitting which went into the early hours of this morning and whose agenda included the election of a new speaker.

Neither of the two candidates for the post -- Oliveira Dias of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS], representing the present parliamentary majority, and Teofilo Carvalho dos Santos, of the Socialist Party, representing the opposition -- secured the necessary number of favorable votes to be elected to the post, according to a decision by the parliament's steering committee. This decision was challenged by several benches in the house and prompted a number of speeches. Although Carvalho dos Santos polled one vote more than Oliveira Dias, a second ballot will, in accordance with the standing rules, be held.

Meanwhile, during the same sitting, the three deputy speakers were elected. [Words indistinct] has prompted varied reactions. Thus, the opposition has described it as a personal defeat for centrist leader Freitas do Amaral that Oliveria Dias was not elected in the first ballot, since his candidature had been put forward on the initiative of that party leader. The CDS, for its part, today condemned the attitude of the Socialist parliamentary group which abandoned the parliamentary proceedings in the early hours of this morning, describing it as a severe blow to the prestige of the democratic institutions.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON AFRICAN ISSUES

[Unattributed report: "Cubans' Presence in Angola Negative"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Goncalves Pereira described the presence of Cuban troops in Angola as negative in a television interview yesterday. The minister was explaining stances adopted on the matter during his visit at the end of September to the UN General Assembly in New York, at which he related the Cuban presence to the problems of southern Africa -- specifically the issue of Namibia. The minister said that it is untrue that the Portuguese Government has declared itself in favor of Cuban troops' participation in the Angolan process.

"Irrespective of the respect which Portugal has, of course, for the sovereignty of the People's Republic of Angola, the presence of Cuban troops" in that country "is a negative factor, and their departure would make possible a greater opening to the West" on the part of the Luanda government, Goncalves Pereira stated. The Portuguese foreign minister added that the Lisbon government wants the opening to occur, partly because within its scope "Portuguese-Angolan relations would be intensified."

The minister also denied an alleged disregard for Portuguese emigrants in South Africa and for relations with that country. He stated that Portugal maintains good relations with Pretoria, to which he expressed appreciation "for the welcome which it has given to a large number of Portuguese people."

"We also have points of disagreement," he added, recalling that South Africa's military operations have been condemned by most Western countries and by all the political parties represented in the assembly of the republic, "and with particular vigor by a Social Democratic Center Party deputy at the recent interparliamentary meeting in Havana." The minister recalled that there are points of contact with South Africa, and this has led Portugal not to support at the United Nations the initiatives aimed at imposing economic and other sanctions on the Pretoria regime.

In conclusion Goncalves Pereira reaffirmed "a simple sentiment which is upsetting Portugal's relations with South Africa. Racism is unacceptable."

INFORMED SOURCES PREDICT KEKKONEN RESIGNATION

LD211810 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] The Finnish Center Party has given notice of a special party congress on 22 November to nominate the party's presidential candidate to succeed President Kekkonen.

Now that Kekkonen's own party is due to nominate a candidate for the post of president, Kekkonen's resignation is regarded as imminent. Informed sources in Helsinki say that Kekkonen will probably resign next week.

The choice of a presidential candidate lies between two Center Party members, former Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Ahti Karjalainen and former party chairman Johannes Virolainen.

SORSA COMMENTS ON FINNO-SWEDISH ATOM-FREE ZONE

PM211011 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 19 Oct 81 p 5

[Unattributed report: "Sweden-Finland Could Form Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] It is Social Democratic Party Chairman Kalevi Soirsa's view that it would be wrong to forget the proposal that Sweden and Finland could together form a nuclear-free zone. This idea was put forward last year by former Swedish Disarmament Minister Alva Myrdal. The idea has been undeservedly forgotten, Sorsa said at Porvoo Workers Association's 80th anniversary Sunday [18 October].

Myrdal said that the establishment of nuclear-free zones in Europe was a matter of urgency, and that this also applied to its northernmost parts. In Myrdal's view the process could be started easily in two countries with close geographical and social ties. At present the debate on a Nordic nuclear-free zone has petered out, partly as a result of the Euromissile debate.

Sorsa also said that there were good reasons for keeping Myrdal's proposal alive, partly because it is possible that the negotiations of the Euromissiles will not lead to the desired results or that the outcome will not promote the establishment of nuclear-free zones in the Nordic countries or anywhere else in Europe.

In Sorsa's view it might also be possible that Sweden and Finland, which do not belong to any military pacts, could have difficulty in accepting an agreement solely between military pacts not to deploy nuclear arm in the Nordic countries. This would make them dependent on the development of big power politics in Europe, Soras said.

SWEDEN

MILITARY DIVIDED ON PRODUCTION OF JAS AIRCRAFT

PM201117 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 15 Oct 81 p 6

[Sven Svensson report: "Now the Politicians Must Decide About the JAS"]

[Text] Discussions about the Swedish JAS [pursuit-attack-surveillance] aircraft must be held at the party leader level. This is the situation since Swedish Armed Forces Commander in Chief Lennart, Ljung proposed Wednesday [14 October] that the government should build the Swedish JAS warplane.

Army Chief Nils Skold has expressed his reservations about the decision and navy chief Per Rudberg stressed in a statement that the proposed economic framework for the project must not be exceeded.

The Falldin Center government cannot present a proposal to the Riksdag next year for the purchase of the Swedish JAS, unless the proposal is supported by other political parties, in particular the Social Democrats.

The military leadership is agreed that a Swedish air force is necessary, but is divided on the Swedish JAS project. This disagreement will make it difficult to reach political agreement at the party level on the purchase of a new aircraft before the election in 1982. A postponement of the aircraft decision seems likely, particularly against the background of the very tight schedule for party leader negotiations.

On Wednesday, Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson and the Defense Committee were informed of the commander in chief's conclusions on the aircraft question, and they also heard army chief Nils Skold's divergent views.

The commander in chief makes three demands of a Swedish JAS:

1. The armed forces' present real purchasing power must remain largely unchanged through the year 2000.

2. Continued contract negotiations with the aircraft industry must lead to an acceptable solution of the remaining technical, economic and legal questions.

3. The aircraft project must be subject to continual strict guidance and control in the operational, technical and economic fields.

In the view of Defense Committee Chairman Gunnar Bjork (Center Party) there are two different ways of involving the party leaders in the defense question.

The first alternative is for the party leaders to immediately begin negotiations on the economic framework for the 5-year period 1980-87 and on the JAS aircraft.

The second alternative is for the Defense Committee to continue its work and for the party leaders to be involved at a later stage, when the government is drafting its legislation for the Riksdag in the spring of 1982 on the basis of the Defense Committee's recommendations.

The government will hold initial discussions on the defense question Thursday. Then the defense minister will brief his colleagues in the government about the aircraft project. This will then raise the question of how negotiations with the Social Democrats in particular are to be conducted.

Considerations of time will mean that the party leaders will probably not discuss defense until the committee has finished its work.

One of the conditions for the JAS which the commander in chief makes is that the armed forces' overall framework remain unchanged through the year 2000. The politicians can hardly make such commitments so far ahead in time, and the commander in chief does not want to take money from the army and navy to ensure the aircraft project no matter what the cost.

The commander in chief's proposals mean that the political negotiations on the defense framework for 1982-87 will be tough. The disagreement between the military leaders on the JAS aircraft project further complicates the negotiations between the parties.

The point of departure for the discussions is that the attack version of the Viggen should be replaced in 1992-93 and the surveillance version in 1998-99, while production of the pursuit version will continue.

Alongside a Swedish JAS the commander in chief has also studied alternatives, primarily the U.S. F-18 and F-16.

Both the Swedish JAS and the foreign aircraft meet the tactical and operational demands in the commander in chief's view. The U.S. aircraft are superior in certain respects. They would be cheaper if bought directly from the United States, but would be more expensive if produced in Sweden under license. The commander in chief recommends production under license if the Swedish authorities do not commit themselves to the Swedish alternative.

Domestic production of a JAS designed for Swedish conditions would also have advantages from the security policy viewpoint as an expression of Sweden's desire to maintain strong defenses and as support for its policy of neutrality, in the commander in chief's view.

The bid from the group of Swedish industries for the JAS would mean considerable commitments. Work on the Swedish project could be halted without the Swedish authorities having to pay compensation. The basic model is offered at a fixed price, as are the first 30 aircraft. There is a maximum price for later deliveries. One unclear point is the possible need for modifications in the future to keep pace with technical advances and changes in the so-called military threat scenario. In practice this is a question of what weapons the superpowers will acquire.

There are reserve funds of 2.5 billion kronor set aside to cover changes through the year 2000. The air force has set aside 5 billion before the turn of the century and 8 billion for technical advances thereafter. The alternative of producing a foreign aircraft under license needs time for further investigation, in the commander in chief's view. The choice of aircraft must be made by 1987 at the very latest if deliveries are to start in 1995.

Pending the delivery of a foreign aircraft the Swedish authorities should order further divisions of the pursuit version of the Viggen. These aircraft should be given a capacity to carry attack weapons, primarily air-to-sea missiles.

Army chief Nils Skold is critical of a Swedish JAS in several respects. It is his view that the Swedish alternative is generally acceptable through the end of the century but that uncertainty is significant after the year 2000. This uncertainty can only be countered through great development potential, embracing the basic aircraft, the engine, electronics and weapontry. It is Skold's view that the possibilities of improving the JAS are very limited.

Because only the minimum demands have been made on the JAS system, modifications could be necessary as early as the 1990's, in Skold's view. This would mean that the economic framework for the project would be exceeded. Skold sees no possibility of making other funds available during the 1990's if the balance within the armed forces is to be maintained.

Skold recommends limited purchases of the pursuit version of the Viggen and further investigation of the aircraft question.

Navy chief Per Rudberg has not expressed a divergent view, but said in a critical commentary:

"It is important that the JAS is kept within the financial framework drawn up for it so that no funds are taken from the navy's budget. Further, the decision about control points [kontrollpunkter] is extremely important. Costs must not be allowed to get out of hand and the JAS must meet the operational demands placed on it."

NEWSPAPERS VIEW WEINBERGER REMARKS, VISIT

PM211529 [Editorial Report] Swedish newspapers on 16 October and Helsinki's HUFVUDSTADSBLADET on 18 October carry editorials on U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's visit to Sweden. They mostly highlight Weinberger's previsit statement on Swedish neutrality: "I do not think that we have a neutral Sweden."

SVENSKA DAGBLADET discusses on page 2 the implications of Swedish neutrality and reiterates the formulation of Swedish security, which is "nonalignment in peacetime aiming at neutrality in war." However, it rejects a neutral stance in other areas: "But neutrality can also mean neutrality in opinions. In this respect, we are not neutral. When it comes to the antagonisms between East and West, betweeen dictatorship and democracy, we should say 'no, thank you' to being considered neutral." The paper goes on: "Sweden is part of the West and shares its values of freedom, democracy and human rights." "In the ideological respect, there is no Swedish neutrality."

DAGENS NYHETER in its page 2 editorial suggests the following interpretation of Weinberger's remarks: "With some knowledge of U.S. attitudes and language, we might guess that what Weinberger was trying to say almost in a friendly way was that Sweden is not shirking its responsibilities -- moral or otherwise -- through its neutral stance."

It goes on to examine the rest of Weinberger's remarks and concludes:

"We must look at the degree of military effectiveness and must really look at the strategic situation, Weinberger said in connection with Swedish neutrality. He assumes that this is something that the Swedish Government wants to discuss -- 'and these are things which we would like to be cooperative about.' Weinberger cannot really mean that the U.S. desire for cooperation should actually apply to the strategic situation. On the other hand, it is undoubtedly important for the military effectiveness of a nonaligned Sweden that the Reagan administration not slow down technical cooperation and the purchase of military equipment from the United States. In this field, there are concrete problems to discuss, which make the first ever visit to Sweden by a U.S. defense secretary an important event."

Helsinki's HUFVUDSTADSBLADET, after discussing Weinberger's statement on page 2 comments on the official clarification of the original remark: "At the same time, the clarification can be seen as a positive, if small, signal. If the new U.S. foreign and defense policy seems to be like a bull in a china shop in various parts of the world at present, there nevertheless still seems to be a little safety catch somewhere which even says to Caspar Weinberger: 'Leave the Nordic countries alone. They will look after themselves best in the future too.'"

In addition, SVENSKA DAGBLADET of 18 October in its page 2 editorial says: "The U.S. decision to share an otherwise strictly protected technology was not made with opposition from significant groups within the country's defense establishment. It is also coupled with the condition that Sweden guarantee that the technical secrets will not end up in the wrong hands. The risk of such a thing happening ought to be small and as far as the export of Swedish military materiel is concerned, our own rules are so strict that they could hardly be made stricter by U.S. conditions. The most positive thing about the new U.S. attitude is that the United States is prepared to show its faith in the Swedish Armed Forces, as well as in Swedish neutralist policy. Of course, this is a development viewed with the greatest distaste in the Soviet Union. There, Weinberger's visit to Sweden is being depicted as a U.S. attempt to get Sweden to abandon its neutralist policy and to join NATO. The fact that the Soviet state news bureau TASS is calling Weinberger an 'uninvited guest' is just part of the pattern."

LEFTIST LEADER CRITICAL OF WEINBERGER REMARKS

PM211425 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 19 Oct 81 p 5

[Unattributed report: "Lars Werner: Sweden's Neutrality Has Been Harmed"]

[Text] "The U.S. defense secretary is questioning our neutrality and interfering in Swedish domestic politics."

This was the judgment made by Left Party-Communist leader Lars Werner, who directed sharp criticism not only at Caspar Weinberger but also at the Swedish Government Sunday [18 October].

Sweden's neutrality has been harmed, Werner claimed.

"It is obvious that one of the main reasons for Weinberger's visit is to create the necessary conditions for the use of U.S. components in the manufacture of a new Swedish combat aircraft.

"Weinberger's remarks about our neutrality -- together with Swedish Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson's remarks on the same subject -- are very worrying.

"It is clear that the United States is counting on Sweden's playing a role in its defense system. It is obvious that our neutrality has been harmed," Werner said.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON GREEK ELECTION RESULTS

TA211528 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Statement by Rauf Denktas in Istanbul on Greek election results; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] The friendly countries which want to see peace in Cyprus are curious to see how the Cyprus problem will be affected by the latest developments in Greece. When we submitted our proposals, we did not consider which government there was in Greece or which leader was in power in Cyprus; we submitted reasonable proposals which protect the Turkish Cypriots and their rights. The fact that a new party has come to power in Greece, or the fact that this party leader uttered very dangerous remarks about Cyprus before the elections has not affected us and will not affect us. We hope that after sitting at the seat of responsibility, Papandreou will see the realities and encourage peace. He has shown that Greece is always the main guiding factor by inviting Mr Kiprianou to Athens immediately after coming to power.

The Cyprus problem erupted in 1963 when Makarios reached an agreement with Yeoryios Papandreou, the present Papandreou's father, and attacked the Turkish Cypriots. The problem has been continuing since then with the encouragement and provocations of Greece. Greece has always wanted to include Cyprus within the Greek borders. The Turkish Cypriots and Turkey have prevented this. In this way, we protected our independence and nonalignment.

We believe that it would be the most correct and peaceful approach to give Papandreou enough time to see the facts around him after he assumes power and not to reach any final conclusions about what he says now. However, I would like to stress a point about an issue mentioned by Kiprianou in New York a while ago and repeated several times during the past few days. The Greek Cypriot leadership rejects our partnership rights, our equality and we see that this view is supported.

We believe that Greece will have to pave the way for peace for the Greek Cypriots sooner or later. I do not believe that it is right to consider any other forms so long as we believe in that.

Further Remarks

TA211717 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpts] President Rauf Denktas said: The Turkish Cypriots will either protect their independence jointly with the Greek Cypriots within a federal system or they will protect their independence by themselves.

President Denktas, who completed his contacts on the Cyprus issue in the United States and certain European countries, arrived in Istanbul and held a news conference there. He said the declaration of independence is not an artificial issue but a natural result of the Turkish Cypriots' partnership rights in Cyprus' independence. He said: If the Greek Cypriots intend to establish a bicommunal, biregional federal system in Cyprus, then the proposals we submitted are a good basis for the achievement of this goal.

Referring to Kiprianou's remarks in New York, Denktas said that it would be impossible to establish a federal system as long as the Turkish Cypriots' partnership rights and equality are rejected.

Reiterating that the Turkish Cypriot side is determined to continue with the intercommunal talks within a framework of good will, Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriots will support Waldheim's efforts to revitalize the talks.

Denktas pointed out that Kiprianou rejected Waldheim's initiative and left everything to the results of talks he will hold with Papandreou. Denktas said: Greece must stop trying to attack the Turkish Cypriots by using the Greek Cypriots and it must, like our motherland Turkey, help the two ethnic communities achieve peace. That is what we hope for.

Replying to a question, Denktas said that Waldheim will not be arriving in Cyprus within the next few days. He added that the Turkish Cypriot side is ready to discuss the secretary general's proposal for the establishment of an intercommunal legislative assembly and senate in Cyprus.

According to ANATOLIA, replying to a question on the Turkish Cypriot attitude toward the continued intransigence of the Greek Cypriots and Greece, Denktas said: For a long time, we have believed that the talks will yield positive results sooner or later. We see the world's belief and support regarding this issue. That is why we believe that Greece sooner or later will have to pave the way for peace for the Greek Cypriots.

Denktas said that Papandreou will determine his timing on the Cyprus issue by the remarks he makes and policies he pursues after his meeting with Kiprianou.

Report on U.S., Europe Tour

TA221042 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Excerpts] President Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot community as well as Turkey favors the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem. Denktas made this statement last night after he returned home from a tour of New York and European capitals to explain and promote the Turkish views on Cyprus.

In a news conference at the Ercan state airport, Denktas said his tour was very beneficial. He added: The wish of the Turkish Cypriot community and Turkey is the peaceful solution of the Cyprus issue in the best possible way, based on a bizonal, bicommunal federal system that will ensure our community's security needs and that is in accordance with the agreement we signed with Makarios.

Recalling that the Turkish Cypriot side submitted concrete and comprehensive proposals to the Greek Cypriots as an expression of their good will, Denktas said that these proposals were prepared within the framework of a program that defends the security and other rights of the Turkish Cypriots and that leads to the establishment of a federal system.

He continued: As a result of contacts I had in New York, I came to the conclusion that the Greek Cypriots assessed our proposals from a very intransigent stand.

In reply to a question, Denktas said an EEC delegation is expected to soon visit the TFSC. He said he is convinced after his tour that the number of those who support the Turkish Cypriot cause is increasing.

SPOKESMAN SAYS WALDHEIM IDEAS STILL BEING STUDIED

NC211502 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Answering a question on the "Waldheim ideas," the government spokesman said that this issue is being handled most responsibly and that the procedure that circumstances require for the study of the "ideas" is being followed. The party leaders, as well as the Council of Ministers, have already been briefed and the president is going to Athens where he will listen to the views of the Greek Government. After Kiprianou's return to Cyprus next Tuesday, the National Council will be convened. This is the procedure originally defined and it is being followed. The spokesman concluded: Therefore, those who are talking at this moment about the rejection of the "Waldheim ideas" are making a wrong assessment.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES NEW MINISTERS 21 OCT

[Excerpts] At 1100 the government under Andreas Papandreou was sworn in by Greek Archbishop Serafim before President of the Republic Karamanlis. After the swearing-in ceremony and the signing of the relevant protocol, President of the Republic Karamanlis congratulated Prime Minister Papandreou and the other members of the government, who then went to the political office where the first cabinet meeting took place.

Speaking to the members of the cabinet, Prime Minister Papandreou gave instructions for exercising the government task and, among other things, stressed the following:

The electoral struggle has ended. Change has won but as of today the great task begins for building the new Greece. We are absolutely proud because the people have chosen PASOK as the agent for change. As a government we are the government of all Greeks. As of today we should forget the confrontation of the electoral struggle. We must embark on the great task of rebirth. The people expect something new of us. What the Greek people expect of us is our personal morals. It is our duty always to inform the people regardless of how bitter the correct truth may be at times.

For this reason, each of us shoulders to the full the burden of the Greek people's trust. The ministers are the agents for change. A new wind should blow. There are no fiefs. There is a government and there are agents of the government's policy.

Soon you will take delivery of your ministries. I would like you to assure the public servents that the only yardsticks to be used by the PASOK government for the evaluation of the public servants' work will be meritocracy and faith in the state and the people, and not their political affiliation. These are the only yardsticks.

It is also certain that within the program for economic change -- since we want to allot resources for social insurance, health, education, the strengthening of the farmers' income -- our administration of the ministries should aim at decreasing costs and this is an additional responsibility we are undertaking.

The fact that I have chosen you means that I have absolute faith in you. I shall stand by you in all problems you may confront. I shall cooperate with all, and thus I hope that with coordination and unity we shall advance with the implementation and materialization of the truly ambitious PASOK program. Above all, we should know what hopes the people have entrusted to us. We do not have the right to disappoint these people who with such love and passion have entrusted to us the task of change. You should always remember that we are the government of all Greeks. Onward therefore, proceed with the task so that we may lay the foundations of the new Greece.

PAPANDREOU ASSUMES DEFENSE MINISTRY DUTIES

NC211525 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] After the meeting of the Council of Ministers, Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Papandreou went to the National Defense Ministry in the Pentagon to assume his duties. The prime minister was accompanied by National Defense Deputy Ministers Dhrosoyiannis and Petsos and Deputy Minister for the Press Maroudhas, who were welcomed by outgoing National Defense Minister Averof.

Addressing Prime Minister Papandreou, Mr. Averof said:

[Begin recording] I welcome you to the National Defense Ministry and wish you every success within its framework. We pass to you an army that I call, not accidentally, one of the best in Europe and I hope that this view, when I brief you on some secrets, will be strengthened even more. [End recording]

In his reply address, the prime minister and national defense minister said:

[Begin recording] I warmly thank you and I also must stress that our army is really impressive and that this happened in the past 7-year period. [End recording]

Then Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Papandreou addressed the leadership of the Armed Forces saying:

[Begin recording] I would like to stress that in the armed forces every individual has the right to have his political views. However, within the framework of the armed forces, absolutely no political activity is permitted. We will safeguard this as the apple of our eye. Meritocracy will be the sole criteria. I would like to assure you that as far as arming the armed forces is concerned, we will do everything possible to keep this at the highest level. I would also like you to know that concerning the problems being faced by the officers and men throughout Greece, we will try to adopt special measures in caring for our sons who are defending our territorial integrity and national independence. Averof Comments

NC212108 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Excerpt] In his reply [to Papandreou's address to the leadership of the armed forces], Mr Averof said: With what you have said, Mr Prime Minister, you make me personally happy, because I see that you will follow our policy in this sector. If we have managed to relieve our army from the traumas it had sustained, it is because complete meritocracy has prevailed and only by mistake on certain occasions were the criteria not meritocratic.

After handing over his duties, Mr Averof presented Mr Papandreou to the commanders of the three staffs. The prime minister in turn presented the two national defense deputy ministers, Mr Andonios Dhrosoyiannis and Mr Yeoryios Petsos.

An orientation conference followed which was also attended by the country's senior military leaders. Following the conference, Prime Minister Papandreou expressed his satisfaction over the briefing on national issues. In his statement, Papandreou said that he had assured the commanders of the three armed services that he will intensify his efforts to arm the armed forces and maintain their high level of readiness.

Papandreou Message to Forces

NC212110 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] On the occasion of assuming his duties, Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Papandreou has addressed the following order of the day to the armed forces:

My decision to take over the National Defense Ministry, in addition to the prime minister's office, stresses the great importance I attach to the country's armed forces and their sacred role of defending the country's territorial integrity and safeguarding our national independence.

I would like to assure you that all of you will find me always a sincere supporter of every just and feasible demand. I would also like to assure you that, at this critical period in world affairs, we all have the duty to strengthen our country's defense and provide those terms which would allow the armed forces to guarantee peace in the area. I would like to remind you that, of course, all of you have the right, as Greek citizens, to have your political affiliation. However, it is both dangerous and impermissible for politics to creep into the ranks of the armed forces, which have only one mission -- the sacred mission of defending the nation.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON POLICY MEASURES

[Text] The government spokesman has announced that the measures for the government's economic and foreign policy will be announced in the policy statement during the new session of the Chamber of Deputies which will open on 16 November. During the first 10 days, the question of appointing new directors general at the various ministries will be dealt with, he said.

At the same time, the government spokesman made it clear that because of a sudden indisposition, Deputy Commerce Minister Papaspirou was not sworn in today. He also clarified that Minister without Portfolio Kouloumbis will also be entrusted with jurisdiction of the Interior Ministry and other sectors.

SWEDEN'S PALME MAKES STATEMENT, DEPARTS ATHENS

NC211844 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Mr Palme, chairman of the Swedish Social Democratic Labor Party, left Athens for home this afternoon. In a statement, he said that PASOK's victory in last Sunday's elections has great significance for socialism in Europe. He said the reason is because Mr Papandreou has had clear positions on the questions of peace and international solidarity from the time he was the leader of the official opposition.

PAPANDREOU, LISSARIDHIS HOLD MEETING ON CYPRUS

NC212304 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Prime Minister Papandreou tonight received at the political office EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis. During their meeting, which was cordial and friendly, Mr Lissaridhis congratulated the prime minister on his victory in the elections and then they discussed the Cyprus problem. The prime minister assured Mr Lissaridhis that Greece will always be on the Cypriot people's side. In a statement after his meeting with Mr Lissaridhis, Mr Papandreou said that the visit of the EDEK chairman has two dimensions: One being the personal friendship which links the two men and which dates far back; the other being their joint ideological position as well as joint orientations. Mr Papandreou also said that on the occasion of tomorrow's visit to Athens of Cypriot President Kiprianou there will be an important review of the Cyprus problem in view of important developments. Mr Lissaridhis expressed joy and pride for the PASOK victory. He said that he came to Athens to congratulate his brotherly friend and to discuss the Cyprus problem.

YUGOSLAV PRESIDENT CONGRATULATES PAPANDREOU

[Text] Mr Djuranovic, president of the Federal Executive Council of Yugoslavia, has sent a message to Mr Papandreou congratulating him on his victory in the elections and wishing him success in carrying out his duties. Mr Djuranovic added: I am confident that the relations of good neighborliness and the friendly cooperation between Yugoslavia and the Republic of Greece will continue to develop still more successfully to the benefit of the peoples of the two countries and of peace, security and international cooperation.

Rolandhis Congratulations

NC212126 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis has sent to Prime Minister Papandreou the following message congratulating him on his victory in the elections: I address to you warm congratulations on your victory in the elections and wish you success in the difficult task you are undertaking for the promotion of the interests of Greece and of Hellenism in general. Cyprus, which is still struggling for freedom and independence under adverse conditions, looks forward to close cooperation with you for the success of national pursuits and goals.

KKE'S FLORAKIS GIVES INTERVIEW ON ELECTION

LD211124 Budapest MTI in English 1010 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Athens, 20 Oct (MTI) -- Kharilaos Florakis, general secretary of the Greek Communist Party, has given an interview in Athens to a correspondent of the Budapest daily NEPSZABADSAG and MTI's special correspondent about the Greek parliamentary elections.

Evaluating the outcome of the polls and its most important inferences, Kharilaos Florakis mentioned:

"The forces favoring change have registered a remarkable victory. Greece has come to a crossroads. Either it takes on the anti-imperialist and democratic road with socialist perspectives, or else it is merely a change of government leading merely to formal modifications. We are naturally in favour of the former. In our view congenial conditions have emerged for our country to embark on a new path.

"We are aware of the towering difficulties we face and we also know that still a hard fight is ahead of our people: Greece is a member of NATO, the Americans rule many spheres of our country. True, an important change has occurred in the balance of forces within Parliament, but the character of power has not altered. Most of the vitally important economic bases, state power posts, armed forces and state apparatus is in the rightists' hands and the constitution too ensures certain scope to them. History is witness that the ruling class will not forego these voluntarily. Also, it is certain that the masses have had enough of it, they want change and they would not be content merely with the change in the composition of Parliament.

"Our party has played an important role in the struggle for change as well as in that the people desire alternation, but since they saw this change most secure through the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, they cast their ballots for that party.

"The Greek Communist Party is ready to extend its support with full sense of responsibility, to any government which seeks to serve real change, which will put an end to the rule of the Greek and foreign monopolies, promote the restoration of national independence, support the masses' good and uplift, take economic measures for overcoming unemployment and inflation, contribute to the emergence of true democracy and which openly and determinedly takes on the road to social progress."

Assessing the poll result of the Greek Communist Party and its forthcoming tasks, Florakis emphasized:

"We have advanced both in the number of deputies and in our parliamentary possibility. But the strength of our party is far from dependent simply on the number of parliamentary seats, but it should be measured rather in terms of our parliamentary possibilities. During the election campaign we came into contact with masses who had so far stood away from our party. Now they have a better understanding of our aspirations, notwithstanding that in their desire for change, they did not vote for us. Our party fought a hard battle successfully. It is all the more important because our class opponents created favourable possibilities for a number of 'parties' which, misusing the name 'communist', directed their propaganda exclusively against us. Among (?these), a great role was assumed for years by the so-called 'Office of the Interior'. This grouping, however, lost even its last seat. The other groups, too, revealed that they lack mass influence. The people have tried our party and rejected slanders that we are guided from some sort of external centre. It has embraced the international working class movement and rejected anti-Sovietism. Naturally we are aware that the ruling class will again deploy these groups against our party. This is why we are continuing our fight for repeatedly unmasking their real countenance. As for our party's tasks, we are concentrating our forces for the realization of the people's will, to contribute to genuine changes and serve the unity and joint fight of the forces desirous of alteration," concluded the GCP General Secretary.

BAYULKEN, WEINBERGER DISCUSS MILITARY NEEDS

TA211140 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] It has been announced that the United States has a positive approach to Turkey's increasing military needs in the face of the recent developments on NATO's southeastern flank. According to information provided by the Foreign Ministry, National Defense Minister Umit Haluk Bayulken, who is in England for the NATO nuclear planning group meetings, met with U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and discussed Turkey's military needs. A new assessment of Turkey's military needs was made in light of recent developments on NATO's southeastern flank. During the meeting, Weinberger said his government is aware of Turkey's increasing strategic importance and that it has a positive approach to the problems.

Bayulken Favors SALT Resumption

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has said that Turkey favors the resumption of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks between the United States and the Soviet Union. Bayulken, who is in Scotland to attend the NATO nuclear planning group meetings, replied to journalists' questions and said that the SALT talks should be continued in a way which will yield concrete results. According to an AKAJANS report, Bayulken added that Turkey will continue to fulfill its obligations within NATO.

ISLAMIC FOOD, AGRICULTURE CONFERENCE CONTINUES

[Text] Ankara, 21 Oct (AA) -- Delegates attending the 3-day ministerial conference of Islamic countries on food production and agricultural development which started here yesterday decided today to create a $3 billion fund for aid to Islamic countries.

Deputy secretary general of the conference (Arifi Osman) of Indonesia told reporters today the fund would consist of $1 billion to be contributed by Saudi Arabia, $1.5 billion by a number of Gulf states and $500 million by Kuwait and would be used to finance agricultural production, infrastructure and electricity projects under the Islamic Conference general secretariat direction. The fund would be given its final form when a formal decision is expected to be made at the Islamic economic and cultural cooperation committee meeting in Libya. During discussions in Ankara, proposals were made to have the conference establish stocks of food in Turkey, Bangladesh and Malaysia to be distributed through Islamic cooperation. Other proposals included establishing an agricultural committee and an agricultural fund.

PRESS REACTIONS TO PASOK VICTORY IN GREECE

NC220800 [Editorial Report] The Turkish-language Istanbul press for 20 October carries various articles and commentaries on the outcome of the general elections in Greece, including the following:

CUMHURIYET, in an unattributed commentary, says: "Diplomatic backstages in Ankara are wondering how the outcome of the elections in Greece will reflect on Turkish-Greek relations. Though the relevant officials in Ankara are not inclined to ignore completely Papandreou's campaign utterances about Turkey, they mention that they were uttered during a campaign and that they should not be unduly exaggerated. According to political circles in the capital, no comment should be made on Turkish-Greek relations in connection with Papandreou's accession to power until the new government is seen in action." The article goes on to quote diplomatic circles as saying that early comments might be misleading.

CUMHURIYET carries an unattributed commentary entitled "On the Opposite Coast of the Aegean." After stating that the "outcome of the elections in Greece is thought-provoking from Turkey's point of view," the writer continues: "Athens' stand toward Turkey, whether a leftist or a rightist party is in power, carries a chauvinistic character. The latest elections have emphasized this character. Now leftist Andreas Papandreou, a man the junta administration had proclaimed a traitor, is assuming power with the identity of an extreme Greek nationalist, and he is going to shape Athens' policy toward Turkey. This is an historic lesson that makes one ponder deeply." The writer concludes: "No matter what happens in neighboring Greece, we can say we are in complete unity and solidarity in the defense of the national interests of Turkey. This statement is a natural reflection to the present times of our historic awareness."

CUMHURIYET carries a commentary by Ugur Mumcu which says: "As expected, PASOK has won the Greek elections. Could this expected victory drag the rightwing in Greece, which is accustomed to unlawful militancies, to new adventures? Could the transatlantic forces which planned the 1967 'coup of the colonels' close their eyes to a 'radical left' program to be implemented by the Papandreou administration? These are questions that come to mind with doubts that are full of question marks."

After reviewing PASOK leader Papandreou's past activities, Mumcu continues: "PASOK's indiscriminate Turkish animosity which it has unfurled as its flag, may secure short-term gains to the Greek people, but this attitude camouflages the 'leftist' character of tbe party and blunges it and Greece as a whole into dark adventures."

MILLIYET carries an editorial "Warsaw and Athens" by Mehmet Barlas which draws attention to the "serious developments both in Poland and Greece last Sunday" and, referring to the election results in Greece, says: "As to the victory won by Papandreou and his PASOK in Greece, one can say that in the final phase of his election campaign Papandreou used moderate and cautious language when discussing Turkey, the United States and the EEC. And yet, PASOK's assumption of power marks the first step of a radical change in Greece. Different views in politics and economy as well as in foreign relations will reshape Greece. Under these circumstances, Turkey will probably have to adopt new attitudes toward all the bilateral disputes stretching from Cyprus to the Aegean." Barlas concludes: "Putting it briefly, Jaruzelski's full takeover of power in Poland has proved that Moscow's leadership in the Eastern bloc is indisputable, while Papandreou's assumption to power in Greece has rendered Washington's leadership in the Western bloc disputable once again."

The same paper carries an article by Mumtaz Soysal: "Two Fronts." Soysal begins by saying: "PASOK's victory in the Greek elections is an event which could give rise to interesting consequences from the angle of 'a Turkey whose political parties have been abolished and whose parliament exists no more.' After comparing the situations now prevailing in both Turkey and Greece, Soysal says: "It would be naive to think that any Greek politician with a bit of intelligence will refrain from exploiting this contrast between the appearances in Turkey and Greece. It would be equally naive to think that Papandreou, who is not at all naive, will not stay in NATO and the EEC and use this contrast to his highest advantage. Is it not obvious that instead of slamming the door, he will enlist the support of France, all theparties of the Socialist International and even of Libya and Algeria as well as of many countries of the Third World and stay in NATO and the EEC and create disputes and thus prove more profitable and more successful?" The writer then continues: "To put it briefly, facing a Turkey without political parties and without a parliament, Papandreou will pester Turkey on a worldwide scale and try to achieve his appirations in both Cyprus and the Aegean."

Mumtaz Soysal recommends various ways of foiling Papandreou's calculations. He says Turkey should refrain from taking untimely and inappropriate actions which could worsen the situation, and it should gradully create an air of freedom, expediting the transition to a political party and parliamentary system.

Soysal concludes: "We must categorically emphasize through resolute policies on the Cyprus and Aegean disputes that we are not prepared to make any concessions on the interests of the Turkish people for the sake of the interests of the United States, NATO and Europe. Papandreou's victory is probably an auspicious event in that it will compel Turkey to implement both these measures."

GUNAYDIN carries an article by Necati Zincirkiran, "Either a Miracle or a Disaster." Zincirkiran says: "The Greek elections have resulted in the victory of socialist leader Andreas Papandreou. For the first time since this country achieved its independence 153 years ago, the socialists are coming to power." The writer then reviews Andreas Papandreou's political activities during his father's administration and continues: "What will the army, which prevented the socialists from coming to power in 1967 through a coup, do now? It is difficult to guess. For in Greece, too, democracy does not function quite healthily. Will the army comply with the decision of the socialist administration to withdraw from NATO?...

"What concerns us most is the 'Cyprus and Aegean issue.' Soon after the election results became known, Papandreou had a talk with Greek Cypriot Leader Kiprianou on Sunday night to whom he said: 'We know and understand the problems of the Cypriot people. We are on your side. We will not accept faits accomplis.'

"True, there is still a sensible stateman like Karamanlis in Greece who possesses fairly extensive powers vested in him through constitutional amendments carried out 5 years ago. But it would be an illusion to expect Turkish-Greek relations to be better than those before 18 October as long as the socialist party is in power in Greece. From a political point of view, Andreas Papandreou possesses as much power as he needs to create either a miracle or a disaster!... His attitude toward Turkey will prove the extent of his statesmanship."

HURRIYET carries an article by Oktay Eksi entitled "May It Be Auspicious." Eksi says: "No matter from which angle you look at it, PASOK is more a collection of contrasts than a political party, with Andreas Papandreou symbolizing all these contrasts." Eksi continues that Papandreou is violently anti-American, but he did not hesitate to flee to the United States during World War II when Greece was practically devastated. Although he claims that his party is a socialist party, "this party bases its existence not on peace and friendship but on animosity, particularly on Turkish animosity, and on the concept of an aggressive nationalism. That is why the Turkish-Greek dialogue disturbed Papandreou more than anyone else and that is why whenever some measure of progress was made in the intercommunal talks in Cyprus, Papandreou raised hell. For, as far as he is concerned, the Cyprus issue is not the result of a legitimate intervention which was carried out on the strength of the treaty of guarantees signed in 1960, but of an act of Turkish invasion. What the Turkish Cypriots suffered before 1974 at the hands of the criminal Grivas and Sampson brigands is immaterial to him. He feels absolutely no remorse for the murdered Turkish Cypriots, but the intervention carried out to put a stop to those crimes is beyond his comprehension. Moreover, he believes that just because NATO failed to counter this intervention, it is no use to them." Referring further to Papandreou's negative attitude toward NATO, Eksi concludes: "To cut a long story short, Papandreou is a politician loaded with unjust and meaningless prejudices against Turkey, and the assumption of full power by such a man in Greece does not present quite a cheerful outlook as far as Turkish-Greek relations are concerned."

TERCUMAN carries a dispatch from Athens by Prof Fahir Armaoglu on PASOK's victory in the elections. Among other things, Armaoglu says: "During the PASOK celebrations on Sunday night, in the streets of Athens youths were seen carrying red flags as well as the PASOK emblem. More interesting than this, pro-Moscow communists, who managed to raise their votes from 9.3 percent in 1977 to 11 percent now, participated in the PASOK celebrations with their hammer and sickle signs.

Red flags with hammers and sickles were indicative of the future color of PASOK's administration." Armaoglu, in analyzing the results of the elections, says: "What are the causes which have pushed Greece so far to the left? It is impossible at this moment when the celebrations of the left are at their highest peak to make a cool-headed study and answer this question. We believe that when the excitement dies down and the truth begins to come to the surface, the Greek people will begin to seek ways and means of explaining this situation." Finally, Armaoglu points out that Papandreou's party mustered a very high percentage of votes in the southern constitutencies and Crete as well as in the Dodecanese. "It is impossible," he said, "not to link this victory with what Papandreou said during his election campaign about Turkey."

PROSECUTOR QUESTIONS FORMER PARTY LEADER ECEVIT

[Text] Ankara, 21 Oct (AFP) -- Former Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit was interrogated here today for about 90 minutes by the military prosecutor, an authoritative source said. Mr Ecevit, former head of the (social democratic) Republicn People's Party [RPP] was summoned to the prosecutor's office because of statements he made yesterday to foreign journalists in Ankara.

He showed reporters the text of a letter he had sent to Turkish Radio and Television demanding the right to reply to statements by Head of State General Kenan Evren during a televised speech last week. In his speech Gen Evren announced the abolition of all political parties in Turkey and, according to Mr Ecevit, made "unfounded" charges against the RPP and himself.

VOTCP on Ecevit Stand

TA220643 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkey to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Commenting on the junta administration's decision to dissolve the political parties in Turkey, former RPP leader Ecevit has said that this is not the way to establish a liberal democratic system. The junta banned Ecevit's statement on this subject. Criticizing the junta decision, Ecevit said the reasons put forward by General Evren for taking this measure were insufficient. Though the seven-page Ecevit statement was banned in Turkey, foreign news agencies published it. In his statement, Ecevit points to the fact that the RPP -- a political party founded by Ataturk himself -- was disbanded on his centenary, and adds: To abolish political parties based on personal whims and to limit the establishment of political parties and their programs is no way to achieve a liberal democratic system.

VOTCP ON GOVERNMENT REACTION TO GREEK ELECTION

TA221008 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Commentary]

[Excerpt] Dear listeners: Let us review the reaction of the junta and its government to the result of elections in Greece. Statements made by Foreign Ministry officials highlight two points.

The first point, after saying that Papandreou's programs will have to be observed, is that as a result of the latest elections in Greece, Turkey's importance in the area will grow. What is meant, of course, is Turkey's importance for the interests of NATO and imperialism. The conclusion is then reached that the NATOite countries will, therefore, increase their aid and support to Turkey. Our people are well aware what the increase of aid and support to Turkey means. It means new arms, new loans and new impositions that will trample our sovereignty and intensify Turkey's dependence on imperialism.

The second point is the concern over the possibility that relations between Turkey and Greece will suffer and that the existing tension will be intensified. To create such a climate even before the new government in Greece assumed power and began implementing its program is to destroy the necessary grounds for the solution of problems between the two countries.

Dear listeners: The reasons that led to such statements are quite clear. The goal is on the one hand, to try to weaken the effects of the progressive and constructive developments in Greece and, on the other, to alleviate the reaction of the West to the continuing pressures on the progressive, democratic and peace-loving forces in our country. However, objective and historic developments happen in accordance with their own rules and not in accordance with the wishes of certain circles. Time will soon prove that such goals will not be realized.

The junta and imperialist circles will never be able to obstruct the growth of anti-imperialist feelings instilled in the masses of the Turkish and Greek peoples, and disrupt the struggle of the progressive and peace-loving forces waged to develop brotherhood among the peoples and to solve urgent regional problems through peaceful means without imperialist interference. The Turkish Communist Party is waging a fight for the solution of all existing differences between the two countries based on this principle and is advising all the progressive and peace-loving forces of such efforts, appealing to them for the formation of an anti-imperialist unity of action.

No matter how the imperialist forces and the ruling circles react, the gains the leftwing parties and democratic forces in Greece achieved as a result of the elections will constructively affect the public in our country and will contribute to the efforts of the peace-loving forces.

EVREN RECEIVES PAKISTANI MILITARY OFFICIAL

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren received a Saudi military delegation at 0930 today. At 1100, General Evren received the Pakistani Ground Forces Deputy commander, Gen (Suad Khan), who is in Turkey as the official guest of Ground Forces Commander Nurettin Ersin.

In a speech at the meeting, General Evren expressed his happiness at seeing the visiting general in Turkey. He added: It is even more pleasing that this visit occurred a short while before my forthcoming visit to Pakistan. We are trying to raise to the highest possible level all our relations, including our military relations, with friendly Pakistan. That is why I hope that this visit will be beneficial both for the visiting general and for relations between our countries.

POLL SHOWS CHANGES IN PARTIES' POPULARITY

[Unattributed report: "PVDA Down, D'66 Up in Opinion Poll"]

[Text] The Hague, 15 October -- If elections had been held in September the Labor Party [PVDA] would have suffered greater losses than it did in the May elections. On the other hand Democrats '66 [D'66] have gained greater support among voters. These trends are apparent from an opinion poll carried out by the Langendijk bureau among 2,100 voters.

In the poll, carried out in the latter half of September, support for the PVDA fell from 28.3 percent in May to 26.2 percent. Support for D'66 grew from 11.1 percent to 16.7 percent. Like the PVDA, the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] also suffered a loss (from 30.8 to 29.2 percent) but remains the largest party. As an opposition party the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy [VVD] has made a slight recovery from 17.3 percent in May to 17.6 percent in September.

The cabinet comprising the CDA, PVDA and D'66 is assured of the support of the majority of those interviewed in the poll (57 percent). Nevertheless expectations of the results from the new government team are not good. Many people do not see problems such as unemployment, housing and government finances being resolved.

On average the poll indicates greater confidence in the ministers in the new cabinet than in their predecessors. Confidence is greatest in Van Agt, De Koning, Van der Louw, De Ruiter, Van der Stoel and Terlouw. However, there is "significant opposition" to Den Uyl and Van Mierlo.

BRIEFS

NEW ENVOY TO NATO -- The Hague, 14 Oct -- Mr J.G.N. de Hoop Scheffer has been appointed head of the Netherlands permanent mission to the North Atlantic Council in Brussels as of 1 November. The present ambassador, Dr C.D. Barkman (62), goes into early retirement on that date. De Hoop Scheffer (57), who is a civil servant in the Foreign Service, has been ambassador to Athens since 1979. Prior to this he headed the Foreign Ministry's European section and was also a roving ambassador with special responsiblity for Euro-Arab dialogue and the negotiations with West Germany on the Eems-Dollard region. POLICE KILL TWO SUSPECTED ETA LEADERS IN SHOOTOUT

NC212057 Paris AFP in English 2031 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] San Sebastian, northern Spain, 21 Oct (AFP) -- Jose Maria Izaguirre Gogorza, known as "Gogor", believed to be the leader of the military wing of the Basque separatist movement ETA, was killed in a shootout today with civil guards after attempting to force a road block, official sources said.

The victim's parents identified the body several hours after the shootout, and people spontaneously assembled in the streets of his native village of Amorebiet, Basque sources said.

According to a communique from the provincial governor's office, a second ETA suspect, Jose Jauregui Altube, was also killed in the shootout after a car which had been ordered to stop accelerated at a road block on a motorway outside the Basque town of Renteria, only a few kilometres (miles) from the French border. A third occupant of the car was arrested, and police reportedly seized two submachine guns, two revolvers, grenades, ETA leaflets and some money.

The road block was set up following a tip-off.

"Gogor", for whom a five-million peseta (about 55,000 dollars) reward had been offered, had been named as the head of an ETA commando operating in Madrid. For the past month, police had been on alert in the capital after the Basque militant was reportedly sighted there.

A state of alert was lifted today in Madrid after police announced yesterday that "Gogor" and his commando had left the capital.

On Sunday, police in Madrid arrested five people, including a woman, suspected of harbouring the ETA commando.

SCHMIDT PLEDGES CONTINUITY IN FOREIGN POLICY

DW221018 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 23 Oct 81 p 5

[Article by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, marking the 10th anniversary of the Nobel peace prize award to Willy Brandt]

[Text] Willy Brandt, the first chancellor of the social-liberal coalition, was awarded the Nobel peace prize 10 years ago. We are proud that this honor was bestowed on a German for his outstanding efforts for peace in Europe. This award was an event of historical rank not only for the Social-Democratic head of government but also for all of us and for our state. The award was not only bestowed on a statesman for the purpose of recognizing his great breakthrough on the course of reconciliation with the East, no matter how much Ostpolitik at the time commanded the foreground; it was also intended to recognize Willy Brandt's strengthening of West Europe's cooperation as an integrating part of a peace policy for all of Europe.

The morning in the West and the opening toward the East formed a leitmotiv for the social-liberal coalition from the very outset. These maxims of German peace policy include Willy Brandt's effort to acquire more weight of morale in German politics as a propelling force. Since then the peace policy of the Federal Republic of Germany has been enjoying worldwide credibility of its objectives which Konrad Adenauer had earlier succeeded in attaining only in the West and which Gustav Stressmann -- the German Nobel peace prize winner of 1926 -- succeeded in achieving only on a limited European scale and, unfortunately, just for a transitional period.

I am continuing this policy which Willy Brandt and the then federal foreign minister, Walter Scheel, had jointly and consistently pursued. Our people's need for continuity and stability as the guarantees of external peace continues to be strong without any changes. I consider it my duty and my mission to guarantee the highest priority to this peace policy in the future as well.

With regard to our share in the responsibility for peace I would like to emphasize five important constants of our policy.

First: The overwhelming majority of our citizens share the view of the Bundestag and the Federal Government that the only place for our state is within the community of the free nations of the West -- in the North Atlantic alliance and in the European Community. The alliance and close partnership with the United States is indispensable for our security.

Second: We see our economic, but increasingly also political, future in the European Community and its further development. Even before Willy Brandt as chancellor negotiated the first treaties with the East, he created with the French president in late 1969, at the European Community's summit meeting in The Hague, important bases for the internal improvement of the EC and the politically significant accession by Great Britain, Denmark and Ireland. Since then, we have further intensified cooperation in economic and currency policies, but above all political cooperation in foreign policy. The close and special relationship with our neighbor France has gained considerably in substance ever since -- beyond all changes in the political leaderships in Bonn and Paris. It is my profound desire, and at the same time a moral commandment emerging from historical experience, to continue working on it actively.

Third: The Federal Government seeks cooperation with the Soviet Union and its neighbors in East Europe. The policy of detente in harmony with our alliance partners has stabilized peace in Europe. In 1975 the treaties with the East made possible the signing of the Helsinki act on security and cooperation in Europe, and the basic treaty with the GDR ensured cooperation with the other German state and considerable alleviations in the people's life together. Berlin has ceased to be a hotbed of crisis flaring up time and again.

Fourth: Our peace policy is based on the principle of the balance of forces between East and West and on the receptiveness to dialogue aimed at limiting nuclear and conventional armaments and establishing the balance of military forces on as low a level as possible in the process. This is why we have always supported the strategic dialogue between the two world powers. It was the success of our constant efforts in Washington as well as in Moscow that the two world powers will open negotiations in late November on ways of limiting armaments, medium-range weapons, in Europe. What this includes as an objective is the mutual zero option which we have suggested. A contractual agreement emerging from these negotiations would make counterarming by the West superfluous. I discussed this problem with General Secretary Brezhnev several times during the past few years. It will also command the foreground of his Bonn visit in November.

Fifth: With the countries of the Third World we seek cooperation based on partnership. This, too, is an important aspect of our peace policy. The mitigation of the different development level between North and South is, to us, not just a commandment of world economic strategy such as will be debated this week at the Cancun summit conference. We also see an important German contribution toward international policies in the support of the course of independent states in the Third World which really wish to remain independent: by close political and economic cooperation. In doing so, we intend to contribute to the stabilization in the regions which still are convulsed by crises and conflicts.

What we need today for achieving stable peace is a comprehensive political security partnership. Security partnership must be devised on a worldwide scale. What this concept includes is:

1. Political, strategic and military balance;

2. A policy of detente, containing conflicts and harmonizing interests;

3. The predictability and calculability of political, military and economic deportment.

After many setbacks in detente policy, Europe today needs a greater measure of mutual trust. As far as the policy of the Federal Government is concerned this is imperative. The Federal Republic of Germany is a European medium power which cannot and will not pursue big power politics. Just the same, within the framework of our possibilities and the expectations imposed on us we must live up to the enhanced share in the responsibility for peace which has been shifted to us in the course of the past decade in all fields of politics, arms control and economic interdependence. Consequently we insist on a policy of credibility and a sense of proportion. We keep pursuing the continuity of our peace policy. The awarding of the Nobel peace prize to Willy Brandt 10 years ago was a token of appreciation of the new rumination in German security policy. Its bases have remained unchanged since then and they will remain unchanged.

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON DOMESTIC POLITICS, ARMS TALKS

[Editor Hans Ulrich Kempski report on interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn on 20 October]

[Excerpts] The chancellor certainly doesn't like the discussion about successors that has come up after his operation. He doesn't want to deal with this issue in detail. "I am a great antagonist of crown princes," he says, adding that a number of "really good politicians and personal friends" would be able to take over his office at some later date. "There are several eligible persons. One must not intentionally overrate the demands of the chancellor's office." He doesn't want to discuss his current favorite though. Schmidt dismisses the question with an almost final gesture as if the successor problem has been seen from a completely wrong perspective: "I consider the discussion about a successor very premature."

Asked whether the poor state of the coalition had something to do with Genscher, with the brittle coalition loyalty of the Free Democrats, the chancellor says that it would not be proper to comment on that. "But," he adds with secret triumph, "I would feel sorry today for the FDP if it said it wanted to cooperate with Kohl."

Such CDU/CSU politicians as Stoltenberg, Speath and Strauss seem more important to Schmidt than Kohl: "It is clear that they stand out. And it is clear that we must compromise with them. We almost need an all-party government for adopting the 1982 budget and other economic bills."

Making compromises without violating basic principles is for the chancellor a "main content" of policy and the art of statemanship: "Loyalty to principles alone does not suffice. We also need dialogue with other interests."

To safeguard peace, it does not suffice for the Germans and other Europeans "to just fully submit to American policy." The achievement of NATO's dual decision on counter-armament with missiles is considered by Schmidt as exemplary evidence in this connection: In January 1979, the United States no way wanted to have a dual decision -- just counter-armament. The combined pressure of the Governments of France, Britain and the Federal Republic made the Americans agree to take up negotiations with the Soviet Union on a bilateral zero option. A respective arms limitation agreement regarding medium-range missiles in Europe must be achieved in the next 24 months. "Otherwise, counterarmament will begin in late 1983."

Schmidt doesn't deny that he had difficulties in this respect with Carter and also at first with Reagan. In the meantime, however, "much work has been done to convince people" and "the most important difficulties are over." But Schmidt does not foster illusions: "New difficulties will come up later -- on both sides." And he admits to thinking back melancholically of when Kissinger was U.S. secretary of state: "Kissinger knew and understood what was going on here."

Schmidt tries to comment carefully on Brezhnev's Bonn visit slated for November. According to Schmidt's analysis, Brezhnev is aware that the Soviet Union must act to preserve peace in Europe because, otherwise, a possible honest accord with the United States would not work in all fields. "We both consider the Bonn meeting very important," says the chancellor. Although he has reason to view some actions of Soviet foreign and security policies "most critically," there is still some "basic agreement" between him and Brezhnev. The federal chancellor: "I know that this man must and wants to avoid war in Europe. And Brezhnev knows that I know this."

Schmidt says two sentences about staying in office: "I would rather say that 10-and-1/2 years of chancellorship is a very long time for the person involved as well as for the country. But aside from my own mood and wishes, it may be logical to do my duty again."

APEL: NATO 'MISUNDERSTANDINGS' ELIMINATED

DW221305 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Reporter Gustav Trame interview with Defense Minister Hans Apel in Gleneagles -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] The communique says that NATO's dual decision, the implementation of NATO's dual decision, must be strongly pursued. The Netherlanders did not say again whether they would really deploy the medium-range missiles they are supposed to deploy. Won't that upset the entire schedule of this part of the dual decision?

[Answer] I think we must understand that a government without a parliamentary basis at the moment makes careful formulations. As regards the schedule, it will not be upset because those countries that have agreed will stick with their agreement.

[Question] The Netherlanders assume that if missiles are deployed in their country at all, it will be as late as 1986. In our country it is supposed to take place in 1983-84. Does a gradual plan exist according to which the British will come first, then the Germans and then the Italians?

[Answer] There is a gradual plan according to which the first deployment in 1983 will involve the British, the Italians and the Federal Republic, while other countries will become involved at some later date. You have given the exact date for The Netherlands.

[Question] The British and the Italians have decided already where the missiles will be deployed. The Americans say that the missiles will be deployed in already existing positions in our country. Is that correct?

[Answer] That is correct.

[Question] Could you say where?

[Answer] We have a firm principle to which we will adhere: We do not announce positions of this kind for military and security policy reasons.

[Question] Whenever the Europeans speak of the so-called zero option, the Americans usually shake their heads in amazement. Could you convince the Americans that they should negotiate accordingly with the Soviets?

[Answer] I have discussed that problem most thoroughly with colleague Weinberger from Monday up to now. You will find the sentence in the communique now that a zero solution on a mutual basis would be an ideal option. In other words, we expect the Soviets now to say how they want to eliminate their lead in armaments, so that as few arms as possible will have to be deployed here in Europe.

[Question] Did President Reagan's remarks on the possibility of a limited nuclear war irritate you and your colleagues?

[Answer] We discussed it but the NATO communique is most definite in this respect. First, NATO strategy will not be changed. The communique says explicitly that there cannot be regional nuclear conflicts. It also points out that nuclear arms are -- as I say -- political arms and not war arms, arms to deter the adversary from even thinking of war. We say in short: The one who shoots first will be second to die. All that has been confirmed. The communique also confirms that the Americans do not at all strive for superiority but for a military balance on as low level as possible. The consequence is: All the misunderstandings that may have been created have been clearly eliminated by the communique issued here in Scotland.

GENSCHER HOLDS POLITICAL TALKS WITH FAHD

LD221802 Hamburg DPA in German 1713 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Cancun, 22 Oct (DPA) -- Crown Prince Fahd, the Saudi head of government, is to come to Bonn "in the very near future." This was announced in Cancun today by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker.

In the course of political talks held on the eve of the North-South summit conference in Mexico, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher handed Crown Prince Fahd a letter from Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, renewing this invitation.

In the course of the friendly talks which lasted over an hour, Fahd expressed regret over the general arms export restrictions which run counter to Saudi Arabia's wishes. For his part, Genscher outlined clearly Germany's considerations which in any case have not yet been made final. The foreign minister emphasized "the grave question" which the Federal Government would have to consider [words indistinct].

During an exchange of views regarding the Near East, both parties spoke highly of As-Sadat's successor Husni Mubarak and said they expected As-Sadat's political course to be continued.

JAMAICAN TRADE, INVESTMENT MISSION IN FRANKFURT

FL222103 Bridgetown CANA in English 2038 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Frankfurt, West Germany, 22 Oct (CANA) -- Jamaica's deputy prime minister, Hugh Shearer, said today West Germany and Jamaica were negotiating a bilateral agreement covering private investment in the Caribbean islands.

Mr Shearer, the first member of Prime Minister Edward Seaga's government to visit West Germany, is leading a Jamaican trade and investment mission here. Traveling with Mr Shearer, who is the foreign minister, are representatives of the Bank of Jamaica, the Jamaica National Export Corporation, the port authority and duty free zone, and the private sector.

In Stuttgart, Mr Shearer met with representatives of major corporations, including Mercedes-Benz, and in Frankfurt he is meeting with representatives of various banks. Mr Shearer will meet with the board of directors of the Frankfurt Chamber of Commerce and will attend a dinner hosted by the director of the K.F.W. Investment Bank tomorrow.

Mr Shearer's party will also travel to Cologne and Hamburg.

JUSTICE MINISTER CONDEMNS RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN IRAN

LD221908 Hamburg DPA in German 1908 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- Juergen Schmude, federal justice minister (SPD), sharply condemned the violation of human rights by the Khomeyni regime in Iran. At a reception for the members of the UN Human Rights Committee, Schmude said in Bonn today that the continuous chain of executions in Iran was depressing. The fact that parents are called upon to denounce their own children and that minors are being executed is "a terrible" violation of the letter and spirit of the human rights convention. Schmude welcomed the fact that the UN Human Rights Committee would be dealing with the question of Iran during its Bonn session.

FDP'S MISCHNICK SPEAKS WITH OUTGOING POLISH ENVOY

LD221236 Hamburg DPA in German 1206 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Oct (DPA) -- Chairman of the FDP Bundestag group Wolfgang Mischnick today received outgoing Polish Ambassador Jan Chylinski for an hour-long exchange of views. According to the FDP Bundestag group chairman, they discussed East-West relations and German-Polish relations. The ambassador informed Mischnick about the recent decisions of the Polish United Workers Party Central Committee.

MITTERRAND URGES SENDING FORCES TO CHAD

PA230053 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0020 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Text] Cancun, Mexico, 22 Oct (EFE) -- President Francois Mitterrand today ordered the urgent formation and sending of an inter-African force to the Republic of Chad. Mitterrand who is in Cancun (Mexico) attending the North-South summit, sent the proposal in a message addressed to President Daniel arap Moi, acting leader of the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

In his message, Mitterrand noted that such a force could count on French material, financial and logistical support, but excluded all military participation.

A spokesman for Mitterrand declared that this support is to be given so long as the inter-African force acts to support the integrity and independence of Chad.

MITTERRAND CALLS FOR 'GENERALIZED CODEVELOPMENT'

PM230901 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 Oct 81 p 3

[Jean-Marie Colobani dispatch: "The President of the Republic Has Launched the Idea of 'Generalized Codevelopment'"]

[Text] Mexico City -- Arriving in a country remarkable both for its political model and for its unequal level of development, Mr Mitterrand chose to stress the second problem, expanding it to include North-South relations.

In the toasts exchanged Monday evening during the dinner held by the Mexican president, Mr Mitterrand acknowledged "the lucidity and tenacity" of his host, who with Austrian Chancellor Kreisky initiated the Cancun summit. The preparation for this summit occupied the major part of the first meeting between the two men, which took place in private and lasted almost 75 minutes and was then extended to include the external relations, foreign trade and culture ministers Cheysson, Jobert and Lang and their Mexican counterparts Casteneda, De la Vega and Solana. At the end of this meeting, President Lopez Portillo stressed that the viewpoints expressed "made it possible to envisage a joint strategy" with respect to the Cancun summit. The two heads of state expressed the hope that the United States will promote a positive outcome to this summit.

In the speech he made in the evening, the president returned to this subject to stress that Mexico and France are among the small number of countries which understand "that the plans of the South and the North are inextricably linked." Mr Mitterrand added: "France intends to contribute to the development of the Third World. This development is not in our view a threat but an opportunity to be seized. This choice does not stem from a charitable intent but from a political will and from a long term view of our own interests. This is why we counter the fallacious and sterile opposition between developed and underdeveloped countries, which are all hit by crisis, with the idea of generalized codevelopment."

After asserting "that there can be no peace in a world where two-thirds of human beings do not have access to the vital minimum," the president said: "The Cancun conference offers an historic opportunity for peace in the world." Mr Mitterrand added that the summit will be "primarily an opportunity for an exchange of views." But he stressed also that France wants to see the global negotiations for a new world economic order, in the embryo stage in the United Nations for several years, "revived between now and the end of the year."

For his part, Elysee spokesman Vauzelle, explained that France and Mexico do not wish to "crystalize" their position in order to allow the participants to have the maximum range of possibilities.

"The Laboratory of History"

In fact it is known that Mr Mitterrand is concerned with achieving not only the promise to revive global negotiations but also results in the future in two spheres: energy supplies and stabilization of raw material prices. The president is even more keen to obtain this since he has a harsh view of the various centers in the North which decide the fate of the countries of the South by fixing the price of these raw materials themselves.

The second aspect of these first meetings between Mitterrand and Lopez Portillo concerns the situation in Central and Latin America. In this respect the two countries share an identical analysis. The two heads of state also welcomed the political cooperation which is taking shape between Mexico and France and which in their view must develop.

This cooperation was recently translated into a joint statement on El Salvador (LE MONDE 30-31 August). "I hope that this solemn joint appeal will allow the loss of many human lives to be avoided and political stability to be reestablished in and by social justice," Mr Mitterrand moreover declared, before asserting: "The weakest and poorest countries cannot remain the passive object of a conflict between the very big powers without danger for the world as a whole." The Mexican president also spoke in turn in the same vein. According to Mr Vauzelle, the two countries decided to pursue the path opened up by this joint statement.

At the end of the dinner, Portillo praised France "regarded as a laboratory of history." The Mexican president considered that the Socialist victory in France "is a new lesson in democracy and political maturity." After paying homage to the economic and social policy of the new French Government, the Mexican president said: "International economic relations must be governed by a fundamental principle: the shared responsibility of all countries for the fate of the weakest and most underpriveleged." He then spoke of the need to undertake structural reforms in the poor countries and challenged the scheme hypothesis whereby the political situation in those countries is explained in terms of simple confrontation between the great powers.

Addresses Cancum Summit

[Excerpt] At Cancun, in Mexico, President Mitterrand wants everything to be put on the table of the North-South dialogue. Right from the beginning, a few moments ago, the head of state took the role of arbitrator, ready to draw closer the positions of the richest countries and the less developed states. France, in fact, wants this conference to mark the beginning of a real dialogue. One of France Inter's correspondents, (Michel Lemerle) reports:

[Begin Recording] Francois Mitterrand was one of the last speakers before the first working session of this Cancun conference was adjourned. The president naturally elaborated on the well-known themes of French diplomacy, but he also laid much stress on questions of method -- the conditions necessary, in his opinion, for the effectiveness of dialogue.

This conference continues to hesitate between hope and uncertainty. Arriving with a certain relaxed manner, at least 15 minutes after the opening of the meeting, Ronald Reagan gave the impression this morning of not taking this conference very seriously. His speech, however, largely removed this impression. For the Americans the time has come rather for an opening, particularly on the famous global negotiations -- one of the stumbling blocks of this Cancun debate -- global negotiations which the Americans seem henceforth to accept on condition that they are well prepared. Things will probably become clearer after the afternoon speeches. The plenary session resumes here in 30 minutes. [end recording]

CHEYSSON CRITICIZES U.S. MIDDLE EAST POLICY

PM22:141 Paris LE MATIN in French 19 Oct 81 pp 12-13

[Jean-Louis Arnaud Interview with French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Claude Cheysson: Our relations with the Americans can give the impression of considerable inconsistency; perfect agreement on East-West relations and mutual irritation and misunderstandings in a whole series of areas and differences of opinion in the economic sphere which might lead to a serious crisis one day.

The most important matters in the Americans' view are the problems in the East-West sphere -- a sphere in which they regard us as particularly wonderful because our attitude is unexpected to them. We expressed our attachment to the values upheld by the Atlantic alliance all the more clearly because some people, far removed from Europe, may have thought that, being Socialists, we were not attached to these values, whereas our socialism is fundamentally humanist. We French are living in the era of Jaures, not Lenin. We acted on this very bluntly by refusing to keep silent about the rate at which armaments are increasing in East Europe, which is frightening. The USSR's defense budget has increased regularly by 7 percent over the past 10 years....

LE MATIN: Do you believe there is an imbalance of forces?

Claude Cheysson: Frankly, I accept all the evidence. Have we already or not yet passed the point of balance? Let's leave this discussion to the experts. What I know is that at the present rate at which armaments are increasing the balance will be broken soon even if it has not already been broken. Thus we have sided with those who say that this shift in balance, in its nature and its quantity, is very dangerous. It must be restored either by constructing a network of armaments (the medium-range missiles which would counter the Soviet SS-20 missiles) or by negotiation. And indeed we think it should be restored by the certainty that this network will be constructed if those negotiations do not take place, although they remain our objective. We had to say that, just as we had to say what we said about Afghanistan much more clearly than our predecessors did. These statements, our budgetary effort and a convinced public opinion all contribute to the Americans at present regarding us as their soundest allies because this is the subject to which they give priority. We complain about this when we see them dealing with the South's problems in conditions which strike us as shocking because they artifically introduce the subject which obsesses them: East-West relations.

LE MATIN: Is it in this sphere that the disagreements begin?

Claude Cheysson: We think that concerning the South, where conflicts between neighbors have absolutely nothing to do with alliance with Moscow or with Washington, classifying issues in this way means that the real problems are not tackled.

LE MATIN: Of which regions are you thinking?

Claude Cheysson: I am thinking of southern Africa, Central America and even the Near East. When I hear the Americans stating that the problem in the Near East is one of building a strategic consensus among all the countries opposed to the Soviets, I do not understand what is meant. You cannot build a monument on a breach. This breach is the opposition between Israel and the Arab countries, some of them at least -- the failure to settle the Palestinian problem. This leads us to positions which irritate the Americans, as in Central America. There is antagonism over Namibia, whose independence we think must be settled whether the South Africans like it or not. Nonetheless let's admit that, compared with our agreement on East-West relations, these disagreements are relatively limited and relatively narrow.

However, there is disagreement and a risk of conflict in the economic sphere. First because the Americans believe that the crisis will be overcome by the industrialized countries and in the industrialized countries. Reagan's speech last Thursday confirmed that, and we disagree. We cannot ignore the demands of the weakest and doom ourselves to political inconsistency.... Look, we were elected in France because we represented the underprivileged and so are we to ignore them in the rest of the world? That would be unacceptable.

Furthermore, we do not accept that the crisis should be overcome solely by market forces. We are scandalized by the fact that people calmly accept things in the world which they would never accept in their own country: The prices of essential products quadrupled in a year, market prices or incomes which fall by 50 percent in a few months? Never! The Americans would not accept that any more than other people! We think that there should be control of the markets at world level, as there is control of wages and essential products in our country. This is a subject on which we disagree greatly with the Americans.

LE MATIN: And yet you have hitherto scarcely mentioned it ....

Claude Cheysson: The president is starting to do so. I have just put this view forward in a very direct way and I know that the president will put it forward in Cancun, perhaps not with as much vehemence as I -- that's not his style -- but following the same line of thought.

LE MATIN: Do you think that it is no longer possible to keep silent about the differences of opinion?

Claude Cheysson: Absolutely.... Just suppose that we do not overcome the crisis soon, that interest rates are just as high in a year's time and that there is no recovery in the United States. Just suppose that all the charm of the great structural reforms has been exhausted in our country in a year's time. Just suppose that the number of unemployed in Britain has reached 3.5 million and that there have been 10 incidents like the ones in Liverpool: I do not say that our ideas will be followed but at least they will have been heard. Well, these may be a very serious political crisis at that stage: The U.S. economic approach may be challenged, since ultimately it cannot solve the crisis and merely consolidates the strongest at a time when everybody is suffering. In that case there is a possibility of a real conflict with the United States.

When President Mitterrand saw President Reagan for the first time in Ottawa, he told him: "Your policies worry us. They are not our policies but, since you have adopted them, please succeed quickly, very quickly. If you do not succeed in the coming year we do not see how we can overcome this situation or how we can avoid a real quarrel."

LE MATIN: But you did not undermine the Americans' beliefs in Ottawa.

Claude Cheysson: It gave Reagan considerable food for thought, coming from allies who are very dear and very necessary to him. On several occasions since then he has told us or had somebody tell us: "Please, hold out a little longer. We are on the point of success." Unfortunately there is no sign of success. Quite the reverse: After a slight improvement things seem to have deteriorated again. It is now up to the Americans to equip themselves with the means of succeeding. If this is the case then we are convinced that they will have to change what they call their fiscal policy. This is certainly the first time that a country has refrained from any intervention on the exchange market. If they were to persist in a policy which does not seem to be succeeding -- who knows whether at that stage interest rates would not go even higher? -- And if the Third World adopts the same type of argument as we are putting foward and as we will put forward publicly more and more, then there may be a real crisis of confidence.

LE MATIN: What are the prospects in the Near East following the Saudi settlement plan, As-Sadat's death and the latest American military initiatives?

Claude Cheysson: The most striking thing is that the four principles which we have posed (security for states, including the state which will be created when the peace settlement is reached; recognition of peoples' rights in all their forms; condemnation of any unilateral modification of decisions made at a recognized international level; negotiation among the countries concerned, in other words the Near Eastern countries -- including the Palestinian people who can at present only be represented by the PLO, their fighting force, countries outside the region merely having a backup and guaranteeing role) are accepted, in private conversations, by all the Arabs without exception, from the most extreme to the most moderate.

If it is to be possible to use these principles, we are convinced that the Arabs must speak with one voice. However, Egypt, the biggest and the only one which has so far made real progress toward peace by securing Israel's withdrawal from some territory, is still missing.

LE MATIN: Do you think that the Arabs can speak with one voice?

Claude Cheysson: It is essential that all Arabs should sit down at the same table for the peace settlement negotiations even if they do not all speak with one voice. They absolutely must come together to deal with the matters which were not raised at Camp David, Lebanon, for instance, or matters which cannot be dealt with by Camp David. And everybody now knows that the Palestinian people's problem, which involves the creation of a Palestinian state, cannot be tackled within the framework of Camp David as it stands. Nobody can doubt that.

Camp David was an element in a future peace. Objectively speaking, it represented the first withdrawal from the territories occupied by Israel. Moreover the withdrawal must be completed as quickly as possible.

LE MATIN: What attitude should be adopted toward Egypt?

Claude Cheysson: We must demonstrate our confidence in Egypt's future despite As-Sadat's death, which was a shattering event because that courageous man was a very extraordinary man. It must also be noted how essential it is for Camp David to be carried through. This will be the aim of a statement by the ten, which has not yet been drafted in full but which will be published in a few days.

LE MATIN: Did you start drafting it last week at the ministerial meeting in London?

Claude Cheysson: Yes, last Tuesday. It is still being discussed but the outline has been decided. We want Camp David to be carried through in full at a time when Prince Fahd's statement is giving, from the other Arabs, a basis for negotiation which is very intelligent because it poses all the problems even though it poses them in a way which we Europeans cannot fully accept. In any case, it is not for us to accept. But it strikes us as remarkably intelligent and remarkably sound.

So with this basis for negotiation which has a chance of being accepted by all the Arabs at the Fez summit in November, with the completion of the Camp David process and withdrawal from Sinai, and if contacts can be established with Egypt at the same time, we may have a bridge between Camp David and the Fahd statement. And we French regard this as the future for development in this region.

LE MATIN: How do you reconcile these prospects with the measures which the Americans have just taken and which are leading them to exercise a kind of military protectorate over Egypt and Sudan?

Claude Cheysson: In the present American approach you find elements in keeping with the analysis I have put forward. Immediately after As-Sadat's death the Americans recognized that there was a chance of a rapprochement between the Gulf countries and Egypt since they proposed joint military maneuvers in those countries. They expressed that idea of rapprochement in military terms. We French, or at least I, am not sure that this is the best language to use. It would surprise me if this rapprochement immediately took a military form. We do not think that sending AWACS is the best way of showing sympathy with Mubarak. What problems does the president face at present?

His problem is to be recognized by Egypt, not only legally -- this has been done and done well -- but in daily policy. His problem is how to dominate the fundamentalist movements which have proved daunting. What do the AWACS have to do with that, I wonder? Showing your sympathy with somebody who is trying to find a way or reorganizing his affairs by sending him an elephant or two elephants.... He can put them in the garden, but what can he do with them? And in the case of Sudan, which is in fact threatened from within by a fundamentalist danger (in that country it is the Mahdists to whom arms, machineguns and grenades are probably being supplied), what can the elephant do? It cannot respond to the incendiary bombs and the secret campaigns being carried on in the mosques while the muezzin is singing.

LE MATIN: Will you say that to the Americans?

Claude Cheysson: Of course we shall say it. But we also understand why President Reagan is anxious to persuade his Congress not to refuse Saudi Arabia the AWACS -- which the Saudis would regard as a betrayal: So, by sending the AWACS elsewhere you show that this elephant is indispensable everywhere.

LE MATIN: Do you think that the Americans could have a similar attitude to the Europeans toward the Fahd plan?

Claude Cheysson: There is an essential difference between them and us. They are real protagonists because the Arabs regard them as an element in the Israeli-Egyptian camp. We are merely commentators. If there is a start to a rapprochement between the Egyptians and the Arabs, they can stop sticking completely to one of the sides. But we are a long way from that.

LE MATIN: Did you regard 'Arafat's remarks in Tokyo as a signal?

Claude Cheysson: Since I incurred criticism for a premature statement [reference to recent statement that As-Sadat's death "removed an obstacle" to Arab-Egyptian reconciliation] there has been a growing number of signals. There was one from Arab League Secretary General Klibi, who noted the possibility of a rapprochement between Egypt and the Arabs. There was one from Islamic conference Secretary Chatti, who is very close to the Saudis. In 'Arafat's statement there is an explicit reference to Israel. It is still not recognition of Israel but recognition of coexistence with Israel. The direction has been laid down. There is no doubt that the anxiety caused by As-Sadat's death -- I repeat that he was a giant -- is making people try to find a way of moving and progressing.

CFDT NOT TO PARTICIPATE IN DEMONSTRATION

LD221918 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] The CFDT will not attend the demonstration at the Porte de Pantin on Sunday organized by the peace movement. Edmond Maire's trade union is of course glad to see a movement act to expose the danger of a nuclear war but, he says, it refuses to allow itself to be dragged into a protest aimed solely at the Americans, which would therefore in effect align itself with Soviet strategy.

IRAQ'S HAMMADI WARNS ITALY AGAINST SINAI ROLE

AU220820 Rome ANSA in English 0836 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Oct (ANSA) -- An eventual Italian participation in the multilateral peacekeeping forces due to enter the Sinai Peninsula after an Israeli withdrawal slated . r April of this year would signal Italy's support of the Camp David agreements and may carry the risk of reprisals from Iraq, according to Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi.

The Arab diplomatic chief, who arrived in Rome for a three day visit on Monday, also expressed his country's willingness to set up "special" petroleum relations with Italy during a press conference held here late Wednesday at the conclusion of two long meetings with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

In a warning to the Rome government against its participation in the Sinai forces, a request made recently to Italy by Egyptian Minister of State Butrus Ghali, Hammadi declared that "incomprehension" still exists on the Iraqi side regarding Italy's position on the Palestinian problem. He added that "Italy remains fixed in the position taken by the Venice declaration (released after the European Economic Community conference in Venice in June 1980 and affirming Palestinian right to self-determination -- ed,) and the Camp David agreements."

"I made it clear during our meetings," he continued, "that an eventual (Italian) military presence in the Sinai would not be understood (by Iraq).

"That kind of participation in fact would signal the support of the Camp David line, which we have condemned."

Regarding possible Iraqi reprisals, Hammadi replied that "the Arab nations do not accept the Camp David negotiations. I would prefer to comment on the matter of eventual repercussions after an eventual decision is made. But I would not exclude the possibility of the problem's being discussed during the coming Arab summit in Morocco this November."

The Baghdad official also mentioned that he had asked Colombo for clarifications about rumors circulating recently involving Italian arms sales to Iran and added that Iraq wants a "durable and stable" peace with that country based on the restitution of the zone occupied by Iran.

"In the Gulf area," he added, "free shipping movement must be guaranteed to all; this area must remain outside the conflict between the super powers."

On the matter of bilateral relations, Hammadi stated that "the Italian and Iraqi positions are very close and contain no significant obstacle."

Referring to the "special" petroleum relations between the two countries, the Iraqi minister explained that they would guarantee petroleum supplies to Italy even in the case of another energy crisis.

"Iraq is ready to set up special long-term relations with Italy, based on our reciprocal interests and an improvement of the political understanding between the two countries."

Iraq "is ready to increase its petroleum production for exports to Italy, both in normal and crisis situations, within the framework of economic and trade cooperation."

Iraq currently supplies Italy with 160 thousand barrels of oil a day, 8 percent of Italy's oil imports. The Baghdad government is also favorable to increasing the presence of Italian business and industry in Iraq.

Hammadi, who was also received at presidential headquarters here by Italian head of state Sandro Pertini, has extended an invitation to Minister Colombo to visit his country.

UNIONS TO CALL 4-HOUR STRIKE ON 23 OCTOBER

AU221600 Rome ANSA in English 1539 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Oct (ANSA) -- Up and down the peninsula around 10 million workers will take part in a four-hour strike tomorrow to protest a breakdown in contract renewal negotiations with management. Originally the strike was to involve only the industrial sector but it has spread to agriculture, commerce, public services and the civil service.

The action has been called by the CGIL CISL UIL Trade Union Federation. Top union leaders will address rallies in Rome, Milan and Naples.

PERTINI, COLOMBO TO VISIT PORTUGAL 23 OCTOBER

AU211919 Rome ANSA in English 1913 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Oct (ANSA) -- Italy's head of state Sandro Pertini and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo leave here Friday for an official three-day visit to Lisbon. Pertini will be repaying the Rome visit made last May by his Portuguese counterpart Ramalho Eanes.

One of the high points of Pertini's sojourn will be when he addresses the Portuguese parliament, a fairly rare privilege for a foreign visitor.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER HAS TALKS AT SOVIET FAIR

AU222022 Rome ANSA in English 1852 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Moscow, 22 Oct (ANSA) -- The opportunity of enlarging cooperation between Italy and the Soviet Union in the agro-industrial sector was emphasized by Italian Agriculture and Forestry Minister Giuseppe Bartolomei to Soviet Union officials during three days of talks here on the occasion of the "Agritalia 81" exposition. The trade fair was organized in order to intensify trade exchanges between the socialist republic and the Italian peninsula.

Bartolomei, who leaves here this afternoon, underlined in his talks that it was necessary to rebalance the interchange between the two countries, which shows a net advantage for the Soviet side at the present time. The Italian minister also illustrated the avant garde capabilities of Italy in many sectors, mentioning, for example, milk production and conservation, lyophilic treatment for products, and wine production.

After visiting the exposition, attended by over 240 Italian companies, Bartolomei met with the Soviet first deputy minister in the Agricultural Ministry, and then attended a working lunch with Soviet Food Industry Minister Voldemar Lein. Bartolomei also met for a hour and a half with the Soviet Union foreign trade minister, Nikolay Patolichev.

PCI-PCC JOINT STATEMENT ON BERLINGUER VISIT

PM221537 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 16 Oct 81 p 15

[Text] On Comrade Enrico Berlinguer's departure from Havana, the following PCC-PCI joint statement was released:

At the invitation of PCC Central Committee First Secretary Comrade Fidel Castro Ruiz, PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer paid an official friendly visit to Cuba. The talks took place in the climate of friendship and respect that characterize PCI-PCC relations.

Those taking part on the Cuban side, with Fidel Castro, were Carlos Rafael Rodriguez and Armando Hart Davalos, Politburo members; Jesus Montane Oropesa, Politburo candidate member and Secretariat member; Jorge Enrique Mendoza, Central Committee member and editor of the daily GRANMA; and Javier Ardizones and Dennys Guzman, section chief and Central Committee aide, respectively.

On the Italian side, the talks were attended by Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and foreign section chief; Renato Sandri, foreign section member; and Giorgio Oldrini, L'UNITA correspondent in Cuba.

Comrade Fidel Castro provided a briefing on Cuba's domestic situation, with special reference to the realization of the objectives set by the Second PCC Congress, the results of which, already apparent in the country's life, are imparting a new thrust to the socialist building process underway in Cuba.

Comrade Enrico Berlinguer expressed heartfelt gratitude for the invitation extended to him to visit Cuba and reasserted the Italian Communists' esteem for the gains achieved by the Cuban people along the path mapped out by the revolution toward the building of a socialist society, amid conditions rendered difficult by U.S. imperialism's hostility and threats. He called for an end to the unjust blockade imposed on Cuba and for a restoration of sovereignty over the territory illegally occupied by the U.S. base in Guantanamo.

The PCI secretary general explained the Italian situation and the policy that the party is pursuing to combat and to begin to resolve the crisis afflicting Italy, through the establishment of a democratic alternative in the country's leadership. Comrade Berlinguer also explained the PCI's analyses and initiative for creating in Italy prospects for a socialist society based on respect for and the development of democratic gains, and the efforts that it is making to promote understanding and cooperation among workers and peoples forces of various leanings active in West Europe.

In their meetings, Fidel Castro and Enrico Berlinguer centered their attention on two crucial issues for mankind's future: peace and development.

Both leaders, though expressing partly differing assessments on some international issues and on the causes of the exacerbation of the world situation, expressed their concern at the escalation of tensions and conflicts threatening and disrupting international relations, as reflected in the interruption of the detente process, the growth of the arms race, and the rapid deterioration of the world economic situation and its tragic repercussions on Third World countries.

The growth in the arms race will in coming years involve astronomic figures running into billions of dollars in military expenditures, which will considerably exacerbate the present world economic crisis, the consequences of which will sharply diminish the people's already difficult living conditions.

In view of the real prospects of a nuclear conflict, both parties believe that the masses' active mobilization is decisive in order to prevent any action that threatens peace and to advance along the path of dialogue and negotiation. They regard the imminent resumption of negotiations between the USSR and the United States to limit nuclear weapons as positive and consider it necessary to begin a general controlled and balanced disarmament process within mutual security. To guarantee world peace and justice, a real start must be made in the battle against the profound inequality that characterizes relations between the industrialized countries and the countries which were condemned to underdevelopment by imperialism and colonialism and which still suffer as a result of their dependence and neocolonial penetration.

Some 25 percent of the world population concentrated in the industrialized countries enjoys 80 percent of the world's income, whereas for hundreds of millions of men, women and children, life is no more than famine, illiteracy and subhuman poverty. This tragic disparity already profoundly splits, threatens and tortures mankind.

Comrade Fidel Castro invoked the issues that he raised in the United Nations in October 1979 and at the Inter-Parliamentary Union conference last September, indicating the proposals and commitments that the "Group of 77" and the Nonaligned Movement have put forward for North-South negotiations for the creation of a new world economic order.

Both leaders stressed the imperative need to start as quickly as possible a real development aid program for the countries of the underdeveloped world that will include financial and technological resources needed to achieve this end.

Comrade Enrico Berlinguer said that the PCI regards the entry onto the world scene of peoples that are liberating themselves from imperialist domination as one of the phenomena of greatest historical significance of the present era. He stressed the role that capitalist countries' working class and democratic forces are called on to play in the realization, proceeding from West Europe, of a radical transformation of production structures, trade and consumption that will match the most profound interests of the peoples masses and that necessary for establishing Italy's cooperation with the developing countries in the ascent toward shared objectivity of justice and civilization. [sentence as published]

Fidel Castro and Enrico Berlinguer confirmed their shared conviction that the Nonaligned Movement can, as an independent political force, play an important role in the struggle to realize the principles that inspire it and that were fully confirmed by its fifth summit conference in Havana and in the quest for world peace and peaceful coexistence among the states to achieve the restructuring of international economic relations on just and equitable bases.

Fidel Castro and Enrico Berlinguer examined the present situation in Latin America and the Caribbean, where many countries are still enduring dictatorships, oligarchical regimes and imperialist domination. Both leaders stressed Cuban and Italian communists' solidarity with the Latin American and Caribbean peoples' struggle for liberation and independence, economic development and freedom.

They expressed their full solidarity with the Nicaraguan and Grenadan revolutions. Both sides condemned the brutal repression now being exercised over the Salvadoran and Guatemalan peoples and expressed support for the proposals of the FDR-FMLN [Revolutionary Democratic Front-Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front] aimed at seeking a worthy and just political solution to the Salvadoran crisis. They also asserted that the French-Mexican statement on the Salvadoran situation constitutes an important contribution to progress along this path.

Both leaders stressed the need for cooperation to develop among the peoples and nations on new and just bases of equal benefit to all.

On this basis, both parties are convinced of the need to work toward the extension and consolidation of relations of cooperation and political, economic, cultural and techno-scientific relations between Cuba and Italy.

The top PCC and PCI leaders stressed the importance of and need for these frank and fruitful meetings and noted the broad opportunities that they provide for a further development of relations of friendship and cooperation between the parties.

SOVIET SUPPLY SHIP, DESTROYER SIGHTED IN BALTIC

PM211421 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 18 Oct 81 p 2

["Auni" report: "Soviet Union's Largest Supply Ship in Danish Waters"]

[Text] The Soviet fleet's largest supply ship, the approximately 40,000-ton, 240-meter long and 30-meter broad Berezina appeared in Danish waters for the first time. The ship has been lying at anchor in Albaek Bugt for the last few days outside Danish territorial waters.

At the same time, the Soviet Union has shown off a completely new type of missile destroyer in Danish waters. It is the approximately 9,000-ton Udaloy which sailed out into the North Sea after passing through the great belt.

The Udaloy -- which means daring -- is the first of a new type of ship which the Soviet Union is building for antisubmarine warfare on the world's oceans. The Udaloy was launched from the Zhdanov shipyard in Leningrad last year and since then has been undergoing trials in the eastern Baltic. The new missile destroyer has a displacement similar to that of the Soviet Kara and Kresta II class cruisers. It is thought to be the first ship in a new generation of Russian antisubmarine cruisers.

The Berezina is the Soviet Union's only supply ship of its size. Its size and massive displacement correspond to those of Western supply ships for groups of aircraft carriers. The massive displacement indicates that the ship will operate outside the range of land-based Soviet air coverage, NATO circles say.

KEKKONEN'S CONDITION DETERIORATES 'SLIGHTLY'

LD221412 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] President Urho Kekkonen's general condition has further deteriorated slightly, according to a bulletin issued today by the president's office. The inflammation of the respiratory tract, from which the president has been suffering, has not yet completely disappeared. The president is tired and mostly has remained in bed the past few days, the bulletin says. The next bulletin will be issued on Monday.

President Kekkonen's sick leave, which began in early September, was extended this month until 10 November.

NEWSPAPER COMMENTS ON KOIVISTO 'POPULARITY'

[Henrik von Bonsdorff editorial: "Opinion Poll Figures and Election Tactics"]

[Text] According to the presidential opinion poll published by HELSINGIN SANOMAT on the weekend, [Prime Minister] Mauno Koivisto has an overwhelming lead over his -- as yet fictitious -- opponents in the electoral stakes. Sixty percent of those interviewed said that they would like to see him as the next head of state and 70 percent said that they thought that he would win the election. In comparison with these figures, those for Ahti Karjalainen, Johannes Virolainen and Harri Holkeri, for example -- who all notched up 3 percent -- are modest, to put it mildly.

Of course, Koivisto's popularity is no longer a surprise. The trend has pointed steadily upward in recent years. But it has never reached quite such heights as now and this is perhaps because President Kekkonen presently is having no more than a peripheral influence on the race. It is also striking that Koivisto enjoys compact support from his own party rank and file -- 86 percent. The Social Democratic Party obviously now sees a unique chance of winning victory in a presidential election with him at their head and is willing to support him, without sidelong glances at other "hopefuls" who until recently were still in the running as presidential candidates.

Thus if the next president were to be elected in an opinion poll vote, we might just as well send "the gold medal" directly to Mauno Koivisto. The only thing that the opinion poll tells us in general terms is the feelings at grassroots level with regard to the identity of the future president at the end of September and beginning of October. And we ought to consider the fact that Koivisto is so far the only certain -- although as yet not officially nominated -- candidate on offer. He has also played a role in the foreground as prime minister for the last 2-and-1/2 years, a role which -- contrary to the possible expectations of some enemies -- has not made him less popular. While at the same time, several of his potential opponents have been kept in the background somewhat -- in the vaults of the Central Bank and elsewhere.

It is quite clear that the situation will be very different if and when the real struggle for the seats in the electoral college starts -- at present the group of "don't knows" comprises 20 percent. The most recent opinion poll to test party support showed that the majority of the Finnish people is still clearly nonsocialist in its sympathies. And even though movement across party boundaries is more common when the electoral college is elected than in parliamentary elections, it is still difficult to imagine that traditional patterns would be so thoroughly disturbed that the Social Democratic Party, for example, would be able on its own to win a majority for its candidate.

But at the present time, there is great confusion in the nonsocialist camp and there Sunday's opinion poll figures should be taken as an alarm signal. They show Koivisto support varying between 65 and 48 percent in all groups -- apart from the Liberal People's Party where ironically support stays at 39 percent, despite the fact that it is said that the party's leadership is considering nominating Koivisto as their man in the election. At the same time, the leading candidates from the two largest nonsocialist parties notch up 14 and 10 percent respectively -- and this is from their own members.

Swedish People's Party Chairman Par Stenback is undoubtedly right when he points out that there have been inadequate tactics, strategy and coordination in the nonsocialist camp. It is now high time, therefore, that those responsible there "put their own house in order before it is too late and the views of the voters become irrevocably fixed." Stenback does not address this call to anyone in particular. But in our opinion, it can probably be directed in particular at the Center Party which is in the middle of a "period of great confusion." The party boss has every reason for self-examination of a completely different type from that which preceded the pirouettes in connection with the most recent government row, if he wants to succeed in piloting his currently storm-tossed boat between Scylla and Charybdis into calmer waters.

Nor is it enough merely to reassess the situation from a narrow party political viewpoint. Sights must be fixed on a point beyond the elections for the electoral college, on a name which would unite the whole of the nonsocialist front when the decisive duel begins in the electoral college.

PAPANDREOU ASSUMES CHARGE OF DEFENSE POLICY

NC221932 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Prime Minister Papandreou has assumed the responsibility of the country's defense policy in all sectors. He will be kept informed of defense issues through regular contacts with the supreme command of the armed forces and members of the general staff. These arrangements were the subject of a broad conference held at the Pentagon today under the chairmanship of Mr Papandreou and with the participation of National Defense Deputy Ministers Dhrosoyiannis and Petsos, and the supreme military leaders. It was decided at the conference that in addition to defense policy, the prime minister, in his capacity as national defense minister, will also have responsibility in the sector of operational planning of the armed forces services, as well as in all other matters connected with national security.

By the decision of Mr Papandreou, Mr Dhrosoyiannis will have jurisdiction in the organizing of military personnel, conscription and training, as well as in serving war disabled and victims. Mr Petsos will be in charge of the financial matters of the armed forces, civilian personnel and corporate bodies, as well as of the U.S. base personnel in Greece.

KHARALAMBOPOULOS TAKES OVER FOREIGN MINISTRY

NC220810 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 22 Oct 81 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] PASOK will follow a radically different foreign policy on certain issues from the corresponding policy of the previous government. This statement was made by the new foreign minister, Mr Kharalambopoulos, in an address he made to his ministry's staff after assuming his duties. Mr Kharalambopoulos did not specify on which foreign policy issues the government will chart a different line. It is known, however, that as far as PASOK is concerned, NATO, the EEC and the U.S. bases are primary and vital issues.

When turning the Foreign Ministry over to Mr Kharalambopoulos, Mr Mitsotakis said that the new government has emerged from the democratic verdict of the people. He said that his successor to the Foreign Ministry comes from the armed forces, but that he is an old politician who has struggled a long time for the nation and democracy.

Mr Mitsotakis added that in the past 17 months, the New Democracy government was confronted with many important foreign policy issues, such as the country adjustment to the conditions of integration into the EEC, which has taken place without any deviation and the results of which are positive.

Furthermore, he said that during New Democracy's rule, Greece returned to NATO, improved its relations with the United States and within this framework negotiated the new base agreement. The agreement has not been concluded due to the lack of time, but significant progress was made without the previous government undertaking any commitments. At the same time, Mr Mitsotakis went on, we pursued the improvement of Greek-Turkish relations through dialogue.

Primarily -- Mitsotakis stressed -- the New Democracy government aimed at promoting the Cyprus issue, which it placed among the top national priorities. The Cyprus issue is now at a critical phase because hope for its advancement and possible solution is discerned. At the same time, the previous government developed excellent relations with its Balkan neighbors as well as with the Arab countries, and established very good relations with the Soviet Union and the East European countries. Generally, Mr Mitsotakis concluded, the country's international position today is safe in all directions.

Of course, he said, the new government will decide its own options and make its own decisions. He wished the new government success in its task.

After Mr Mitsotakis' withdrawal, new Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos addressed a gathering of the ministry staff. He said that PASOK is deeply moved by its assuming power thanks to its positions and consistency. The victory of the change, he said, charts a new course, and all Greeks will have the possibility to feel that they live in a nationally proud and socially just Greece.

At this point, he noted that Prime Minister Papandreou has declared that the PASOK government will be a government of all Greeks. Moreover, he pointed to the smooth succession of power which, he said, has vindicated the democratic institutions but, of course, PASOK is inheriting certain unsettled issues.

In any event, Mr Kharalambopoulos went on, our policy will be radically different from the policy of the previous government.

He further called on the Foreign Ministry staff to devote themselves to their task and added that this ministry and the Ministry of National Defense are the bases of our national independence, integrity and pride. He also urged the Foreign Ministry employees to work with dedication. In conclusion, Mr Kharalambopoulos said that the criteria will be meritocratic, and that the government will be severe with those who attempt to undermine its policy.

PAPANDREOU TO RECOGNIZE 'NATIONAL RESISTANCE'

NC222114 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] On the question of recognizing the national resistance movement [communist], Prime Minister Papandreou tonight made the following statement:

We have repeatedly told the Greek people that the PASOK government will proceed with legislative measures for the recognition of the national resistance [movement]. The PASOK government is already preparing the necessary draft for implementation of our policy statement. I would like to underline that our decision is to prevent exploitation of the issue by any party. The national resistance does not belong to parties. It belongs to the entire Greek people.

KIPRIANOU ARRIVES IN ATHENS FOR 6-DAY VISIT

Arrival Statements

NC222102 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 22 Oct 81

[From the "Chronicles of the Day" program: report by Aris Xipolitidhis]

[Text] The Cypriot people are fully confident that in the person of new Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou and his government they will have the support necessary for these difficult times. This was stated by Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou upon his arrival in Athens for a 6-day official visit during which he will have talks with Prime Minister Papandreou and Greek Government officials. Mr Kiprianou arrived at Ellinikon Airport shortly before 1500 today accompanied by Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis. He was welcomed by Foreign Minister Ioannis Kharalambopoulos, Greek Ambassador in Nicosia Zakharakis, Cypriot Ambassador in Athens Khatzimiltis and other officials. Immediately after his arrival, Mr Kiprianou told journalists:

[Begin recording] I am particularly pleased that I am visiting the Greek capital today for talks on the Cyprus issue with the new Greek Government under Mr Andreas Papandreou.

During my stay here and during the conferences that will be held, as is natural, a very broad review of the Cypriot problem will be made. I will also have the opportunity to give a briefing on latest developments, and we will exchange views on the further handling of the issue. It is needless to stress once again that, in their struggle for freedom and justice, the Cypriot people have Greece, its government and political circles, the Greek people and Hellenism throughout the world as their mainstay.

I am confident that the talks we will hold in Athens will be fruitful in every respect and I believe that the talks will be significant concerning the further development of the national issue. The Cypriot problem is passing through a very delicate phase in which, as is natural, it needs essential and appropriate handling. We will exchange views on the various ways of handling the issue, as well as on a more general plan, or a more general program if you like, in promoting the just Cypriot cause.

I look forward to my cooperation with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and his associates with particular interest and in the confidence that there will always be mutual understanding and that the struggling Cypriot people will be given the necessary support to bring to an end the difficult struggle we are waging. I absolutely have no doubt that the Athens talks, which are aimed at covering all aspects of the Cypriot problem, will greatly contribute to laying down the further course concerning the handling of the issue, and at the same time, will also contribute to establishing very close cooperation between the Cypriot leadership and the new Greek Government for the struggle Cyprus is waging.

The Cypriot people are absolutely confident that in the person of the prime minister and his government they will have the support, and the support in general, which is necessary in these difficult times. Once again, I would like to express my pleasure at being in Athens today and, of course, we may be able to make further statements after the conclusion of our talks. [end recording]

Welcoming the Cypriot president, Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos said:

[Begin recording] Mr President, on behalf of the Greek Government, and particularly on behalf of Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, we welcome you today with particular emotion and love. It is an honor for us that after these elections you chose Greece as your first place to visit. [sentence as heard] Mr President, as you have already said, the Greek Government's support -- even when it was a small opposition party and even when it was the official opposition party -- embodied clear positions and really supported the struggle being waged by the Cypriot people. Particularly today when, with the Greek people's will, PASOK has become the government of this country, I would like to assure you, Mr President, that you will enjoy all the support you should receive. Furthermore, on the occasion of your visit today, you will have the opportunity to confer with the prime minister, Andreas Papandreou, and his associates on all the problems concerning the big Cyprus issue.

I would like to assure you that in addition to the personal emotions that one may have -- including myself because before you became president we struggled together 6 years ago at the United Nations for the big Cyprus problem -- you will also have the government's support; and I am sure that you will also have the support of the entire Greek people. This is so because our prime minister, Andreas Papandreou, has stated and declared that when the election battle ended and the people, with their free will, gave a comfortable majority to PASOK to rule the country and open the avenue of change, you could rest assured that this government will support you with all possible means at its disposal. This support will be aimed at helping you fulfill the Cypriot people's aspirations, the Cypriot Republic's aspirations and the decisions which, as you know, have been repeatedly adopted both by the UN General Assembly and the Security Council.

For us, your presence here is a presence that honors us, moves us and is one which, as you have already said, will give the opportunity for an exchange of views toward finding the best way to confront the big Cyprus problems. So we welcome you, Mr President. PASOK Chairman and Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou was to be here to welcome you but, as you realize, it has been 2 days since we started our hard work and he is very sorry that he is not here to welcome you. But, rest assured you will have the opportunity to exchange views on all questions concerning the big, vital, critical Cypriot problem. Welcome, Mr President. [end recording]

Answering Greek journalists' question on whether it would be possible to achieve a Cyprus solution without the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Cyprus, Mr Kiprianou said:

[Begin recording] Most certainly not. And so that we may be clear, there can be no solution to the Cyprus problem which in any way would mean acceptance of the faits accomplis. There can be no Cyprus solution that directly or indirectly would mean the partition of Cyprus. There cannot be a Cyprus solution that would mean the selling out of the Cypriot people's rights. There cannot be a solution of the Cypriot problem without the withdrawal of the occupation troops. Of course, there are also other basic prerequisites, but this is not the time to analyze them. Our aim is an honest solution of the Cyprus problem that is based on the UN resolutions, I would say, based on the implementation of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. [We aim at a solution] which will be a true federation and will have no partitionist character of any form whatsoever. [end recording]

In conclusion, Mr Kiprianou, answering another question, confirmed the report that today he received in writing the ideas of the UN secretary general on the Cyprus issue. He stated that the Cypriot Government will study them and reply in the earliest possible time.

Waldheim Ideas Discussed

NC222126 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] President Kiprianou has stated in Athens that the document on the evaluation of the intercommunal talks will be the subject of consultations both at the Council of Ministers and the National Council, as well as during his talks with the Greek Government. Following the consultations, the Cypriot Government will outline its views to Mr Waldheim. President Kiprianou said it would be wise from every respect for the Cypriot Government to submit its own views on the UN secretary general's ideas at the earliest possible time. The president clarified that the text contains a final evaluation on the course of the intercommunal talks thus far, and that it is not a matter of proposals.

INDUSTRY SEEKS CLARIFICATION ON NATIONALIZATION

NC211822 Athens NEWS in English 21 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] "The government must clarify its position on nationalization, state intervention and the framework of the private business sector," the Greek Industrialists Association announced in a statement made on Monday. Specifically, industrialists are asking for:

--Immediate and clear definition of the extent of state intervention, so that a climate of certainty and tranquility can be achieved.
--The private business sector has to know where it stands, so the creative and renovative urges are not unnecessarily curbed.
--Fanaticism and dogmatism from any source must give way to a realistic, continuous and systematic dialogue.

The industrialists stressed that their interests should not be separated from those of society as a whole, and requested that measures be taken immediately to help solve their problems, such as high interest rates and low capital yield.

LATE REPORT: KIPRIANOU, PAPANDREOU HOLD MEETING

[Text] The current phase of the Cyprus issue and its developments are being examined today by Cyprus President Kiprianou and Prime Minister Papandreou, who met at 1100 at the political office. Kiprianou and Papandreou first had a private meeting which lasted for about 1 hour.

A broad meeting then followed, attended by the foreign ministers of the two countries, Kharalambopoulos and Rolandhis, Greek Deputy Foreign Ministers Papoulias and Fotilas, Greek Ambassador to Nicosia Zakharakis and Cyprus Ambassador to Athens Khatzimiltis, and the representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks, Ioannidhis. Prior to the start of the meeting, Papandreou and Kiprianou made statements.

Papandreou expressed his happiness over having the opportunity to welcome Kiprianou with whom, as he stated, he is connected by many developments and old ties. However, he added, this is the first time that I welcome Kiprianou as prime minister.

Continuing, the prime minister said that, as he has always declared, the Greek Government and the Greek people would support the struggle of the Cypriot people until a just solution has been found which would strengthen the unity, independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus without the presence of foreign troops. The current phase of the Cyprus issue, Papandreou stated, is difficult and has many aspects. We will brief each other. Concluding, the prime minister reiterated assurances of support which the government and the people of Greece will give to the struggle of the Cypriots.

Kiprianou also expressed his happiness at meeting Papandreou and said that he would brief him fully on all aspects and developments of the Cyprus issue. Kiprianou said that his acquaintance with Papandreou is of long standing under difficult and harsh conditions, and that they had been in close touch at all times.

Kiprianou also said he has no doubt that his cooperation with Papandreou would be very smooth because, as he had repeatedly declared, Greece is the main support of the Cypriot people. Kiprianou added that the aim of the Cypriot people's struggle is to create an absolutely independent Cyprus in the form of a federation without the presence of foreign troops and to the benefit of its entire population.

At 1400, Papandreou will give an official working luncheon at the Foreign Ministry in honor of Kiprianou. Other officials from both sides, who are attending the meeting, will also attend the luncheon.

According to agency reports, Prime Minister Papandreou and President Kiprianou will have another meeting. Tomorrow at 1030 Kiprianou will visit President of the Republic Karamanlis.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU CONGRATULATES PAPANDREOU

TA221514 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] Ankara, 22 Oct (AA) -- Prime Minister Ulusu sent Andreas Papandreou, the newly-elected Greek prime minister, a message which said: "On your assumption of the duties of prime minister, I would like to convey to Your Excellency my congratulations and best wishes." Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen sent a similar message to his Greek counterpart.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON GREEK NATO WITHDRAWAL THREAT

[Turkish Radio Television correspondent in London Ovul Tezisler report on a news conference held in London by National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken -- recorded]

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken, who said that Greece's withdrawal from NATO will affect Turkey, has also stated that Turkey has no concessions to make to Greece. Bayulken, who held a news conference at the Turkish Embassy in London after attending the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meetings, gave the following reply to a question on Greece's withdrawal from NATO and on whether Greece might ask for certain concessions from Turkey in order not to withdraw from NATO. Greece's withdrawal from NATO also affects Turkey because of Greece's geographical position. However, naturally, a state has the sovereign right to withdraw from any establishment. The consequences will be assessed by the alliance. Turkey has no concessions to make to Greece. Our allies are aware that Greece might resort to other methods for withdrawing from NATO. Turkey has extended every possible aid for Greece's return to NATO's military wing. We have done everything in our power with good will. However, if Greece wishes to withdraw again, it concerns Greece. Greece has to suffer the consequences.

In reply to a journalist who recalled that in his election speeches PASOK leader and Greek Prime Minister Papandreou had spoken against Turkey and had stated that Greece's policy toward Turkey would be changed, Bayulken said: Statements made during election campaigns always change when it comes to executing them. When it comes to execution, views are readjusted in accordance with greater interests. We, knowing this fact, will follow the developments in Greece with a cool head. Furthermore, in a statement made in Izmir on such a meaningful day as 9 September, General Evren clearly stated Ataturk's policy regarding Greece and pointed out where the real interests of the two nations lie. We will be observing the assessment of the Greek Government.

GEN KENAN EVREN INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN ISSUES

PM221101 Paris LE FIGARO MAGAZINE in French 17-23 Oct 81 pp 114-119

[Robert Lacontre interview with Turkish Head of State Kenan Evren in Ankara: "It is Moscow Which Is Stirring Up Islam"; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Following President as-Sadat's assassination, do you fear any upsurge of Muslim fundamentalism?

[Answer] Not in the least. If we had fears, we would not have decided to introduce courses in religion in our secular schools. But it is obvious that the awakening of Muslim fundamentalism benefits Moscow.

[Question] What about the Kurds?

[Answer] There are provocations, of course. We are having to take account of a separatist movement which is using Marxist methods and international terrorism to try to divide our country. But the mass of the population is not following it. Many Western countries have to face this kind of problem created by differences of color, race, sect and religion.

[Question] At the international level, do you think that President Reagan is now interested in Turkey?

[Answer] The unfortunate days of Carter's embargo are over. Our administration is now encountering the broadest understanding from the Americans. Today there is a powerful base in Turkey which is used jointly with the United States, and this is the Incirlik base -- an operations and air logistics base. In addition, there are seven telecommunications installations, three listening stations and one marine traffic station. Our country devotes 23 percent of its annual budget to defense. This is a very high percentage among the Atlantic alliance countries. But we receive military aid from our allies, primarily the United States and the FRG. Under the terms of the NATO agreement of 12 December 1979, there are no plans to deploy Pershing II or cruise missiles.

[Question] How do you view future relations with France, which has just elected a Socialist president?

[Answer] Relations between countries are relations which are established and developed on a state-to-state basis. Changes of government or power should not affect those relations. We have deep traditional relations with France. De Gaulle was given a triumphal reception in Turkey in 1968. We hope that our bilateral relations will continue to be developed. I was pleased to note that President Mitterrand has stressed several times that France will honor all its commitments. Moreover, I certainly intend to extend our political and economic relations with all the European countries. That is why we are preparing to join the EEC. We have explained a hundred times our intention and our efforts to restore democratic system to ensure that rights and freedoms can no longer be violated in our country. Because of our attachment to the pluralist parliamentary system, we are anxious to pursue our cooperation with the West's parliamentary institutions. That is why the support, understanding and confidence shown by our friends and allies, who are aware of the real situation in Turkey before 12 September 1980, are particularly important to us.

[Question] So, now that you have regained control of the situation, are you going to hand power back to civilians?

[Answer] Do you doubt it? The Turkish Armed Forces took power on the basis of the constitution. The same happens in your country when the homeland is in danger. Our operation was carried out with the aim of protecting the republic, which was threatened with destruction and disintegration. Today terror and anarchy have ended. The vast majority of the illegal organizations which were provoking them have been eliminated. Economic stabilization has started. I would like to add that, throughout its history, the Turkish Army has always been anxious to keep out of politics. It has never acted out of ambition or thirst for power. As in the past, our main objective was to safeguard democracy and restore as quickly a possible a real, sound parliamentary regime and institutions which function in complete security.

TERCUMAN HITS HERNU REMARKS ON ARMENIANS

NC230729 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 19 Oct 81 p 4

["The World Today" column by Zafer Atay: "France, Seriousness and the Armenians"]

[Excerpts] Charles Hernu is the defense minister of France. He is a hardcore socialist. He has become a toy in the hands of the Armenians in his counstituency. He attended a ceremony held the other day at Villeubarbanne where an Armenian "cultural house" was inaugurated. Addressing the ceremony, Hernu is reported to have said: "Turkey's NATO membership is something to be deplored... The Turks slaughtered over 2 million Armenians in 1915... Years after Hitler's massacre of the Jews, German Chancellor Brandt went down on his knees and apoligized. The Turks haven't done this... France will protect the rights of the Armenians...."

Hernu is a politician who lacks seriousness, because he had the audacity to talk of Turkey, which has been defending the southeast wing of NATO, as "unfortunately it is in the alliance." Hernu lacks seriousness, because he had the audacity to assert that the number of Armenians killed in 1915 was 2 million, although French sources have established that 1.5 million were killed. Hernu completely lacks seriousness, because upon representations from Turkey, he unashamedly said: "I made this speech not as a defense minister but as mayor of Villeubarbanne." Even LE MATIN and LE MONDE, which are known as leftist papers, made fun of this statement by saying "ministers should at least announce beforehand when they are going to talk as ministers and when they are going to talks as mayors."

We wish to stress one particular point here: If there is a country whose "NATO membership is to be deplored," that country is France. France has for years been unashamedly enjoying the security which the other members provide without making the slightest contribution to the military wing of the alliance. We do not believe that French Premier Mauroy as well is aware of all the responsibilities of the position he is commanding. In a conversation he had with Adnan Bulak, our ambassador to France, Mauroy uttered words that are not compatible with diplomatic rules of etiquette. The French premier said that France did not share Turkey's views on the Armenian issue and that he believed that Turkey massacred 2 million Armenians.

In reality, through such words as "human rights... history, culture, research and massacre" the French are making frantic efforts to cover up their own sins. Only 25 years ago, the French colonial army massacred 1 million patriotic women and children in Algeria. The seasoned politicians in Paris had discovered a subterfuge by alleging that "Algeria is our overseas province. People living there are Arabic-speaking Frenchmen." Such generals as Massu and Salan, as well as their murderous henchmen, still go about in the Paris squares during festivals with their chests full of medals. France is the first country which should go down on its knees and apologize for the crimes it has committed...

EVREN SPEECH TO CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY OPENING

[Head of State Gen Kenan Evren's opening speech to the first session of the Turkish Consultative Assembly -- live]

[Text] Honorable members of the consultative assembly, I greet you all and sincerely congratulate you for the loyalty to your country and the enthusiasm to serve our noble nation that you have displayed by voluntarily applying for a national duty that entails reestablishing a democratic and secular legal state to ensure the existence and independence of the Turkish republican state, the integrity and indivisibility of the country and the nation and the nation's peace, welfare and security.

As you know, before 12 September 1980, the Turkish Grand National Assembly which Ataturk used to call "my greatest work," had become paralyzed. The Turkish republican state, which was Ataturk's greatest gift to the lofty Turkish nation, was shaken by the provocations of its internal and external enemies and by the physical and moral attacks aimed against its political system, its existence and independence. The state and its main organs were rendered unworkable. Destructive and divisive centers carried out their activities with no restraint; Ataturk and his principles were being forgotten and even rejected by certain circles. The entire state mechanism -- mainly the educational institutions, the administrative mechanism, the judicial organs and the security forces -- were being divided and damaged by means of planned reactionary and other perverted ideologies. The country was brought to the brink of a civil war.

Unfortunately, the leaders of the major political organizations which play a role in the fate of the nation in a multiparty political system were not able, due to their sterile conflicts and intransigent attitudes, to see the fact that the state was beginning to sink more with every passing day. They were like indifferent spectators in this situation.

Under these conditions, the Turkish security forces carried out the 12 September operation with the determination to protect the integrity of the country, ensure national unity and solidarity, prevent a probable civil war and fraternal strife, reestablish the country's authority and presence, and eliminate all the obstacles that prevented the real parliamentarian democracy from functioning properly, in such a way that they would not be able to cause ever again a similar situation in the country.

During the past year, very important and successful results have been achieved regarding the basic goals of the operation; namely in protecting the national unity and solidarity, establishing state authority, preventing anarchy and terrorism, ensuring the security of life and property, establishing social peace, social justice and economic stability, and in reingraining Ataturk's principles and reforms in our hearts. Real peace and tranquility were restored in our country in accordance with Ataturk's motto "peace at home," and our citizens were able to feel the pride of being Turks. [applause]

Now, in line with the promise we made to our nation on 12 September 1980, it is time to draw up a constitution, a law on parties, and an election law befitting the Turkish nation, and following parallel readjustments, to establish a stable state structure which respects human rights and freedoms, will ensure social justice with national solidarity, gives top priority to the individual's and the community's peace, security and welfare, and which is based on democratic secular and social legal principles.

As members of the Consultative Assembly, which is part of the constituent assembly which will be established to carry out the basic goal I mentioned above, you have assumed the responsibility of extremely important and honorable duties for the Turkish nation before history and the world. My wishes for your success for this very exceptional and lofty duty will always be with you.

A total of 11,640 persons applied to the provinces and directly to the National Security Council Secretariat during the time given to register for being members of the Consultative Assembly. It is greatly admirable, valuable and significant that all these virtuous, cultured and honorable candidates of various professions applied to assume this duty with enthusiasm and of their own free will.

We are grateful for this noble attitude. The fact that the Consultative Assembly is composed of 160 members has not permitted the participation of many valuable persons in this assembly. However, I would especially point out that the activities aimed at forming the state structure which I have explained will not be limited only to the Consultative Assembly members. Persons from whose knowledge and expertise we can benefit might be invited to participate in the activities of the Consultative Assembly committees and of the pertinent establishments.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that an extensive contact with the public will be conducted during the Consultative Assembly general council discussions, which will be (?held openly), especially concerning basic laws.

Dear members of the Consultative Assembly, in accordance with Law No 2485 on the Constituent Assembly, we can summarize step by step as follows the legislative responsibility -- directed toward the future -- of the Constituent Assembly which is composed of the National Security Council and the Consultative Assembly:

The first issue is the preparation of the constitution. The constitution will be drawn up by 15 members of the Consultative Assembly to be elected, at the latest, 1 month from today. This constitutional committee will write the constitution through work to be carried out, in full independence and in the light of national needs and realities. You have observed and personally experienced the difficulties which had their source in the constitution. Those who previously prepared this constitution and who have an interest in preserving it might still defend it. However, there is an undeniable reality -- the situation in Turkey prior to 12 September. While citizens' rights and freedoms are extended and secured to unlimited dimensions, I would like to stress that certain points should be kept in mind, namely, that the state also has some rights and responsibilities for its existence, that we have no right to render impotent the state in the name of personal freedoms, that the state cannot be transformed into a helpless institution governed by associations, that the office of the head of state cannot be left with the image of a mere protocol position, that it cannot be a position that signs directives, that the state cannot be left without a president for a period of 6 months, that the parliament cannot be put into a state where it cannot exercise its legislative and supervsisory duties for months on end, that the judiciary cannot obstruct the administration and vice versa, that citizens cannot be kept away from their duties and work through daily rallies and demonstrations in the streets, that certain days and holidays cannot be exploited with the aim of holding rallies and demonstrations, as parties based on communism and religious principles cannot be established in our country and that, in short, individual rights and freedoms cannot be unlimited.

Now I would like to read you an excerpt from the statement made by the lofty Ataturk at the Adana Turkish hearth on 17 February 1931. This is what he said: "Citizens should know that there exists a freedom of ideas and conscience. However, these are not unlimited. Besides individual freedom, there is also the state which is composed of and established by all these individuals. This state also has a will and a sovereignty. Persons who are charged with protecting the freedom of individuals should, on the other hand, also take great care not to cripple the will and sovereignty of the state. Individual freedom is dependent on the protection of the will and sovereignty of the state. If the state will is crippled, then there remains no power or tool to secure individual freedom. Therefore, freedom should not be viewed from a single side but rather from both sides. Citizens have transferred a part of their freedom to the state. They have done this willingly and have deemed it necessary. The state, through its will, incorporates part of individual freedoms with the aim of securing those same freedoms. The state should be devoted to the happiness and comfort of the nation and to securing the freedom of citizens. Just as this trust exists in the citizens, there are responsibilities befalling these citizens to protect the state and the authority that they have established. The responsibilities that befall civil servants and judges are expecially great. While judges are concerned with preserving the freedom of individuals, they should take care and respect the state authority. Otherwise, they will have failed in executing the great responsibility entrusted them."

Now, dear members, there is not a previously prepared bill on the new constitution. Therefore, it is out of the question for any individual or institution to pressure or to try to persuade the Consultative Assembly on the issue. One of the reasons for disbanding the political parties which existed prior to 12 September and which were banned from any political activity was to ensure that the work of the assembly would be conducted free from any kind of pressure.

It was determined from the very first day that the parties had attempted to use within this assembly framework the same maneuvers they used to influence the workers at government offices. I believe and trust that you will preapre a constitution without copying the constitutions of other countries but by benefiting from them and from the the bitter experiences we have endured. I believe that you will thus prepare a constitution which will be most suitable to the Turkish nation.

The second step is the referendum to be held in connection with the constitution. The text of the constitution to be prepared by the constitutional committee and to be adopted by the Consultative Assembly general council will take its final shape at the National Security Council and will then be submitted to a referendum in accordance with the law of referendum. Thus, the constitution to be accepted by the nation will be finalized and will be effective according to law.

The third step is the preparation of the political parties law in accordance with the principles of the new constitution. We have observed that our political parties law has opened the way to the dictatatorship of party leaders, that it is almost impossible to remove a party leader once he has become leader, that, as part of a vicious circle, the party leader has great influence in the election of provincial organizations, and that in turn the provincial representatives vote for the leader that has elected them. I am convinced that -- benefitting from your past experiences -- you will close such loopholes in the best possible manner.

The fourth step is to prepare a new election law by keeping in mind the principles of the new constitution and of the political parties law. The election law will be a law as important as the constitution. Together, we saw how the many small parties created difficulties during the coalition periods and what concessions were made to these small parties by the large parties in order to remain in power. You are also aware of the pre-election scandals. We still remember the acts of the persons who were bought with money during the pre-election period. The entire nation is expecting you to prepare an election system, with the awareness that the citizens are not robots, an election system that will prevent such shortcomings as well as an inflation in the number of parties.

The fifth step is the carrying out of the normal legislative activities. Apart from its activities on the main issues, the Consultative Assembly will carry out general legislative duties of passing, amending and annuling laws until the Turkish Grand National Assembly to be elected in general elections actually begins to function.

Meanwhile, in accordance with law No 2324 on the constitutional regulations, the National Security Council will continue to carry out the duties of the Turkish Grand National Assembly and of the republican Senate in connection with issues that remain outside the constitutent assembly law rulings.

Honorable members of the Consultative Assembly, the 12 September operation was not aimed at deviating or moving away from democracy, as certain persons and circles inside and outside the country are trying to portray it. On the contrary, it was the beginning of a movement to reestablish a stable democratic system with its necessary institutions -- a system yearned for by the Turkish nation who really deserves it. [applause]

Loyalty to democracy, to the principles of a state of law, is one of the basic factors that guide the internal administration of the country as well as Turkish foreign policy. We always tried to carry out our relations with establishments such as the Council of Europe, the EEC and the European Parliament with this approach. We hope that the efforts we made to protect and maintain Turkey's relations with these establishments will be assessed by the friendly countries as a sign of our sincere determination to return to democracy. I would like to say clearly that Turkey wants to maintain and strengthen its existing relations with the European establishments unless it is faced with pressure, unjustified accusations and activities that have the character of an interference in its domestic affairs. [applause]

I would like to draw the attention of our Western friends and Western establishments once again to the deliberate propaganda being conducted against Turkey, organized by ideologically obsessed circles which want to pry Turkey away from the West. I believe if our friends look into their conscience, they will find the right answer to the question of who would benefit from Turkey's breaking away from the West.

As I have tried to point out on every possible occasion, our armed forces have a structure and tradition different from the armed forces of many countries. Our armed forces have always acted in accordance with the wishes and interests of the Turkish nation. After the establishment of the republic, it has become the supporter and protector of the reforms and principles of Ataturk. [applause] Well aware of this fact, Ataturk, through law, has entrusted the armed forces with the preservation of the republic. This was what the armed forces did on 12 September, 1980.

We have taken another important step toward the democratic system by today, the day the Consultative Assembly opens, beginning to share the execution of the legislative activities -- which were executed by the National Security Council since 12 September 1980 -- with your honorable assembly.

It is possible that we shall be the target for the attacks of certain circles with ulterior motives, who are unaware of the realities in Turkey, despite the fact that we have been advancing -- without deviation or hesitation toward the goal -- on the road which we have promised our great nation on behalf of the armed forces on 12 September 1980. However, such criticisms do not concern us. Only the guarantee of the bright future of the great Turkish nation concerns us. [applause]

Efforts exerted by the nation to render a democratic effectiveness to our state in line with the principles of Ataturk have brought us to this happy day. As of today, the activities to be carried out by the National Security Council and the consultative assembly -- within the framework of the constitutent assembly -- with cooperation, loyalty and complete harmony, will ensure that we definitely achieve our national goals. With this belief, I wish you all success and extend my love and respect. [applause]

PERMANENT UN REPRESENTATIVE ON TERRORIST ATTACKS

TA222040 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] The Turkish permanent representative at the United Nations, Ambassador Coskun Kirca, has said that attacks directed against Turkish diplomats and representations abroad are part of a plan aimed at creating instability in Turkey.

Speaking at the United Nations, Kirca said that international terrorism cannot be prevented and that Turkey is greatly concerned about it. Recalling that the UN General Assembly adopted a comprehensive resolution on the protection of diplomats, Kirca added that, despite this resolution, murderous attacks have been launched against Turkish diplomats and representations, especially in France. Kirca noted that France should not support views which spring from the intentional distortion of historical facts and bloody attacks planned in line with these views. According to information given by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, Ambassador Kirca denounced as irresponsible statements made on the issue by French radio and television and by various French ministers.

Sepaking after Kirca, French representative Ambassador Jacques Leprette said that his country definitely did not approve of the attacks directed against Turkish diplomats and that the necessary security measures have been taken. He added that they will not allow the recurrence of such bloody attacks.

OLIVEIRA DIAS ELECTED SPEAKER OF ASSEMBLY

LD222100 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Following a decision made at the latest meeting of parliamentary leaders, a second ballot was held this afternoon to elect the assembly speaker, the number two position in the state hierarchy, ranking immediately below the president. Contesting the post were Oliveira Dias of the Social Democratic Center Party -- the candidate backed by the present parliamentary majority -- and Teofilo Carvalho dos Santos of the Socialist Party -- backed by the opposition -- including the communists. Carvalho dos Santos was at one time speaker of parliament.

Emidio Rangel reports from parliament: Leonardo Ribeiro de Almeida just delivered his farewell speech as speaker of the assembly, which means that a new speaker has been elected.

This was Leonardo Ribeiro de Almeida's statement proclaiming Oliveira Dias speaker of the assembly:

[Begin recording] Honorable members: The outcome of the ballot for the election of the new speaker of the assembly was as follows. Candidate Francisco Manuel de Oliveira Dias: votes in favor -- 128, against -- 108. Candidate Teofilo Carvalho dos Santos: votes in favor -- 108; against -- 128. There were two voided ballots, two abstentions and no blank votes. In light of this vote, I proclaim MP for the Social Democratic Center Party Francisco Oliveira Dias as speaker of the assembly. [end recording]

SPD OFFICIAL URGES 'FULL SAY' IN ARMS DEPLOYMENT

[Excerpt] SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski has stressed that the German side must have a full say in the deployment of American weapons in the FRG. Admittedly the United States could alone decide how to equip its troops, but what happens on German soil can only take place with the full agreement of the FRG, Wischnewski said at a peace forum of the North Hesse SPD in Kassel.

In the opinion of federal party manager Peter Glotz, President Reagan's remarks, which have been interpreted by some as meaning the American restriction of war to Europe, have caused millions of people to think again and about certain images of war. This is a positive thing, Glotz said in an interview on Suedwestfunk Radio. Federal Education Minister Bjoern Engholm (SPD) defended the peace movement at a party meeting in Kiel and accused the CDU of having a "profoundly illiberal" attitude.

PRESS COMMENTS ON REAGAN NUCLEAR WAR STATEMENT

DW211207 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 21 Oct 81

[Press Review]

[Excerpts] The central theme in today's newspapers is the statement by U.S. President Reagan regarding the possibility of a limited nuclear war.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes: If we understand Reagan correctly the military-strategic sacrifice of pawns has become feasible: As long as the United States is not directly in jeopardy, the general defense plan must not necessarily be proclaimed. To go by Reagan's argument the United States still can come to terms with the adversary even after nuclear battles. In Europe there would not be anybody left to come to terms with anyone else. This is why Europe's only chance for the future is to safeguard peace. Only faith healers of nuclear strategy might believe that the more nuclear weapons we have, the safer peace will be. What this adds up to is a challenge to disarmament policies and to preventing this continent from being forcibly dragged into conflicts of the superpowers.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG says: At the moment Washington is in a situation bordering on absurdity: More and more frequently the United States is forced to defend security policy measures to the Western allies. Moreover, the cases are increasing in which one must defend oneself against misinterpretations in one's own camp. Nota Bene: It is appropriate and necessary to state that the leading role of the United States does not require unconditional obedience and that a lively discussion within the defense community is needed. However, if the impression of irreparable dissension is aroused in public, and if doubts are even voiced about Washington's adherence to the NATO principles, then all this tends to dangerously reduce the credibility of the Western alliance before the East.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER states: The repeated protest that there is no attempt to localize war dangers to Europe proves above everything else the extent to which distrust has crept into NATO. The slogan remains deterrence on all levels. Tranquilizers are being directly administered across the Atlantic in large doses. What people in Washington are holding ready in the face of the most recent misunderstanding about Reagan's remarks is the explanation that Communist troublemakers had their fingers in the pie. This is not far-fetched, though the Americans ought to realize that they themselves have contributed decisively to Atlantic irritations and uncertainties by their vascillations and ambiguous analyses of the world situation.

The LEUTKIRCH SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG stresses the following point: There is cause for critical pondering, especially since the option of localizing a nuclear conflict far away from the United States has been under discussion in America all along. Yet, a knowledge of Reagan's oft-expounded policy and of the official comment on his most recent remarks creates the impression that the man in the White House is not seeking a backdoor out of NATO solidarity but that he just expressed himself in a confusingly misleading way. All the same, anybody believing that doubts about Washington's loyalty to the alliance are unjustified cannot be mollified. In any event, Reagan's inability to give a convincing off-the-cuff description of his security policy -- a policy which might decide the destiny of the world -- gives food for thought.

SOCIALIST CONGRESS BOOS PONOMAREV, USSR GROUP

[Text] Valence, southeast France, 24 Oct (AFP) -- French Socialists meeting here today applauded a representative from the "Afghan resistance" but booed all the Eastern bloc delegations, except Yugoslavia, saving their loudest hoots for the Soviet group. The Soviet delegation, led by Central Committee Secretary, Boris Ponomarev, was booed as several hundred foreign delegations attending the congress were introduced to the French Socialists during the morning session today.

Meanwhile, President Francois Mitterrand pledged in a message to [words indistinct] congress today to "remain one of you," despite being out "of party politics as "president of all the French." In a message from Cancun, Mexico, where he attended this week's North-South summit, President Mitterrand asked: "How could I avoid emotion at missing a Socialist congress for the first time since the party's rebirth in 1971?" Mr Mitterrand told the delegates he remained "a socialist as president." "I am with you, with our ideas and hopes," he said, adding that he understood some Socialists' impatience at a "certain slowness" in putting through changes, but reminding them that the government wanted to make sure all its moves were clearly understood so that each step forward is solidly placed.

Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy echoed these words, telling Socialist comrades not to forget the party's "tranquil strength," Mr Mitterrand's slogan in the May presidential elections. Mr Mauroy told the congress that "France will only meet its [words indistinct] make no gesture, take no initiative that could jeopardize our national unity."

The prime minister launched an angry tirade against speculators moving their capital abroad, saying that "those who feel France is unworthy of their money are unworthy of France." He was careful to distinguish, however, between "foreign investment" and "flight of capital." Referring to heated debate in parliament this month over the government's nationalization of several major French industrial groups and banks, Mr Mauroy said that "what is going on in the National Assembly shows the value of nationalizations," adding, "The opposition is reacting because we have touched its supreme value: money."

Other foreign delegations presented today were from China and the new ruling Panhellenic Socialist Movement in Greece. Latin American delegations received warm applause, particularly the national revolutionary movement from El Salvador and the national Sandinista revolution front. Members of the Palestine Liberation Organization also won an enthusiastic reception, along with representatives of the [words indistinct] the Polisario front and others.

Denounces Unilateral Disarmament

NC251730 Paris AFP in English 1658 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] Valence, southeast France, 25 Oct (AFP) -- The French Socialist Party ended its three-day congress here today with a strong denunciation of unilateral disarmament. But in his closing speech, the party's secretary general Lionel Jospin, called on the Socialists to launch a national petition for peace and disarmament based on principles "recognised and applied by both sides." With an eye on the huge peace rallies in Europe this weekend, and with a Soviet delegation in the hall listening to his speech, Mr Jospin said ringingly: "No to unilateral pacifist sentiments."

Congress delegates stressed that their major task was the fight against unemployment, and to ensure that "those who made the change (to left-wing government) possible should be the main beneficiaries." But the Socialists appeared, in general, uneasy in their new role as the ruling party, and accused the government of not changing things fast enough. Earlier, some of the more revolutionary delegates called for the heads of those business leaders and cabinet ministers who were "sabotaging" the government's economic efforts.

But Mr Jospin urged delegates not to be too hasty, stressing that the government could not do everything at once and that the party had time on its side to prepare for even bigger victories in future elections. He said the congress had given the government "a big warning and a formidable shove," but upbraided delegates for their bad manners in booing Eastern bloc visitors, particularly the Soviet delegation, on Friday. He said the Socialists had two big tasks -- to overtake communist domination in the country's factories and launch a campaign explaining the government's policies.

Mr Jospin took issue with Research Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement, who had called on Socialist delegates to become more militant. Taking a milder line, he said they should aim at being the "guardians of the Socialist programme, to fight for the party and become a force in French society." Mr Jospin, a close political ally of President Francois Mitterrand, denounced Planning Minister Michel Rocard for accusing him in the press of wanting to lead a "putsch" against the Rocard current in the party. Earlier, Mr Rocard, whose star many observers considered to be on the wane, made stronger speech underlining his leadership qualities.

Several ministers, particularly Premier Pierre Mauroy, called on the delegates to show realism and not to endanger the entire body politic with their impatience. Mr Mitterrand underlined the cautious note with a message saying: "Not everything can be done in a few weeks or a few months. Since we have the endurance, we must know how to govern."

Jospin Speech

[Summary] "The Socialist congress is closing in Valence. Lionel Jospin has made the closing speech. Following yesterday's thunderbolts, there was a little smoke today: A minor incident was caused by a group of draft dodgers who threw a small smoke bomb into the hall at the feet of the foreign delegations." However, everything soon returned to normal. The political event was an agreement reached last night on the participation of Michel Rocard's group in the party's management.

First Secretary Lionel Jospin made the closing speech today. "Before celebrating the party's new unity, Jospin wanted to speak frankly to Rocard, whom he criticized for certain bitter statements. Today Jospin hopes that the political agreement that has been reached is not artificial. In fact, he warned Rocard's followers, who will participate in the party's management, that they will have to observe all of the rules: [Begin Jospin recording] Now, as we are united, have these trends vanished? No, of course not. But it is true -- and this alone is extremely important for the party -- that they have chosen to come together at this congress, to build unity, and not to express themselves politically any more. Was this done because we agree? To a great extent, yes. Were there some hidden tactical intentions? This is possible, and I accomodate myself to this.

"However, this immediately poses the question: If we are in agreement on political orientation, do we agree to apply it together in the party's management? My dear comrades, if we agree together as far as the Socialist Party is concerned -- the government is not my business -- we are the prisoners, figuratively speaking, of solidarity until the next congress in 2 years, and we willingly submit ourselves to this. [end recording]

"As far as Jospin is concerned, matters are clear. Henceforth nobody will be able to play a double game within the Socialist Party. Jospin also said this party will indeed be governed. Thus, Francois Mitterrand's successor places himself as the boss of the party who will be able to hold matters in hand. He will also have a decided attitude toward the government, because he thinks that the congress' main conclusion has been a warning and a formidable pressure for the Mauroy government."

MITTERRAND CALLS FOR OAU FORCE FOR CHAD

AB241304 Paris AFP in French 0811 GMT 24 Oct 81

[Text] Cancun (Mexico), 23 Oct (AFP) -- France favors the sending of an OAU inter-African force to Chad in the shortest time possible in order to prevent any untimely Libyan activities in that country, authoritative French sources indicated in Cancun on Friday.

The same sources add that President Francois Mitterrand's message to President Arap Moi, current chairman of the OAU, asking for the intervention of an inter-African contingent in Chad, is aimed at preventing Libya from playing the fool. The source did not, however, specify the nature of the activities France is afraid Libya might undertake in Chad.

According to that source, the real needs of this force in equipment and material will not be known as long as the size of the inter-African contingent is not known.

It is believed that the quantity and nature of materials as well as the amount of money to be disbursed and placed at the disposal of the OAU have not yet been decided. France, for its part, is ready to give training facilities as well as logistic support and finance to that force.

Claude Cheysson, French minister of external relations, indicated on Thursday night that it would be desirable for this force to be sent by the beginning of November.

MITTERRAND: 'SOME REAL PROGRESS' AT CANCUN

NC251558 Paris AFP in English 1520 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Oct (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand today said the first North-South summit in Mexico last week "did not go far enough" in pursuing the dialogue between industrial and developing nations. Mr Mitterrand, who returned to Paris today, told reporters that the 22 leaders of rich and poor nations had made some "real progress" at the meeting in Cancun, particularly on global negotiations, energy issues, the development of world food reserves and a policy of agricultural production in poor nations.

But he said: "I think that we did not go far enough and even that we did not advance much on the guarantee of raw material markets that would be, in our opinion, the best way to approach this type of problem." The president was speaking after his arrival at the airport here with Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert, who also attended the summit. They were met by Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy.

Mr Mitterrand's policies on narrowing the economic gap between industrial and developing nations are in direct contrast to those of the administration of U.S. President Ronald Reagan. The French president has been pushing for large-scale aid to poor nations, while Mr Reagan has been wary of global negotiations or any new international structures.

TWO BOMB EXPLOSIONS ROCK DOWNTOWN PARIS

NC260024 Paris AFP in English 0010 GMT 26 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Oct (AFP) -- A bomb exploded at the fashionable Fouquet's restaurant on the Champs Elysees shortly after midnight today, slightly injuring two employees.

Almost simultaneously, a booby-trapped car exploded in a Champs Elysees side street in front of an entrance to Le Drugstore, an "in" snacking-and-shopping establishment near the Arch of Triumph.

The Fouquet's bomb had been left in a restaurant bathroom. There were no casualties from the car explosion, according to first reports. Responsibility for the explosions was not immediately claimed.

LE MONDE BACKS REAGAN REMARKS ON LIMITED WAR

PM221515 Paris LE MONDE in French 21 Oct 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Washington and 'Limited War'"]

[Text] Is Reagan in favor of a "limited nuclear war" in Europe or not? The remarks made last Friday by the American President to press spokesmen and made public Monday, and especially the polemic which followed, primarily in the FRG, may have implied this.

In fact, this polemic was unleashed not so much by the actual content of Regan's statements as by the emphasis given them by an agency dispatch and the interpretation which seemed to follow from this. In fact the White House chief has put in a nutshell a truth which no specialist can dispute — that is, that a limited nuclear war, in Europe or elsewhere, will not necessarily entail either of the two superpowers resorting to their central strategic arsenal. But to proceed from this to thinking that Washington officially regards such a conflict as an acceptable option is to bridge a gap without justification.

On the contrary, the American President at once reasserts -- as far as the United States is concerned — the thesis of deterrent by means of the threat of a higher level of counterstrike. The only conceivable proposition in order not just to limit but to prevent such a conflict in Europe. For Reagan it is the Soviets and not the United States who believe that a nuclear war "is possible and that it can be won."

In passing, the American President declares himself in favor of beginning "more realistic" negotiations with Moscow. Despite this reserve, this remark should reassure those who are concerned at seeing Washington dragging its feet over the negotiation of Eurostrategic armaments which is due to begin in Geneva at the end of November.

The incident nevertheless recalls to mind the extremely "sensitive" nature of the debate on the NATO decision to install 572 Euromissiles in West Europe from 1983 and the need Washington ought to feel to be very prudent in taking stances. In the FRG primarily the nationalist component of the antimissile movement seems to have gained the upper hand, in political circles at least, over the pacifist and religious current. It is because they are afraid to see the United States install these missiles, of which it will be a sole charge, in the service of its global strategy and without taking much account of specifically European interests, that many West Germans have joined the ranks of protest.

Moreover Reagan's last statement provoked a Mr Horn, a spokesman of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, to recall that "Europe must not be the tactical outpost of the superpowers." Even if, in fact, deterrence is reinforced by the stationing of the new American theater arms, this worry must not be underestimated.

Mitterrand realized this when recalling in a recent statement to Time the "almost intolerable contradiction" which the status of being "encumbered by nuclear weapons beyond its control" created for West Germany. For the French President the only solution is to urge the Americans to negotiate with Moscow.

SPADOLINI ON NUCLEAR WAR, EUROPEAN DEFENSES

AU241405 Rome ANSA in English 0813 GMT 24 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Oct (ANSA) -- The idea of a nuclear war limited to Europe alone can be ruled out provided Europe's defenses are strong enough to form a "credible deterrent to any attack from the East", according to Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini. Interviewed for the latest edition of the Italian weekly, PANORAMA, Spadolini also warned that "objectively speaking", peace is now "farther off."

On the eve of today's massive march for peace and against nuclear weapons in Rome, Spadolini also argued that the "desire for peace is one thing, neutralism something completely different."

In other points, Spadolini said it was no coincidence that the "awareness of a more defined European identity not always coinciding with American interests" in leaders like Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and Francois Mitterrand of France should be accompanied by the conviction that "Europe cannot renounce its own defense."

Rome AntiNuclear March

AU242003 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 24 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Oct (ANSA) -- An orderly crowd estimated by the organizers at 300,000 marched through downtown Rome this afternoon with stops at both the United States and the Soviet embassies to protest against the installation of new nuclear-tipped missiles in Europe and to urge the powers to find agreement on effective moves towards disarmament.

Massive papier-mache missiles were accompanied by the Slogan, "Neither USA nor USSR" while the people of Comiso in Sicily, where Italy's share of the U.S. nuclear-tipped cruise missiles should be located, had a flyer warning, "Comiso does not want to become tomorrow's Hiroshima."

Mixed with delegations from the Italian political parties were a delegation from the Palestine Liberation Organization condemning the Camp David Agreement, representatives from the Jewish community in Italy, and members of Italy's Evangelical churches.

Recalling a recent bill in Italy bringing in voluntary military service for women, a group of women from Bologna carried the slogan, "Always exploited, now as [words indistinct], let's arm ourselves with courage [words indistinct] joined in the march with military styles, but a wedding veil, and placards urging, "We're gay, we're happy, we're against arms."

At the Soviet Embassy, a delegation from the organizing committee met with the Soviet consul, who repeated Leonid Brezhnev's recent pledges designed to prevent the threat of a nuclear war.

FOREIGN MINISTRY COMMENT ON AL-QADHDHAFI REMARKS

AU232000 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 23 Oct (ANSA) -- The Italian Foreign Ministry today lamented the fact that certain remarks expressed in an interview Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi granted to the RAI state television network did not help to strengthen the spirit of mutual understanding desired by Italy.

The judgments expressed by Al-Qadhdhafi with regard to Italy's democratic system and its government parties showed total lack of knowledge of the history of the Italian Republic founded on the values of the resistance and of anti-fascism, the ministry said. In the interview, Al-Qadhdhafi spoke of certain rightwing forces in power in Italy which had held on to a fascist and anti-Semitic mentality.

TURKISH DIPLOMAT WOUNDED IN ROME ATTACK

TA251911 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] The second secretary at the Turkish Embassy in Rome, Gokberk Ergenekon, was attacked this evening in Rome. He was wounded and taken to a hospital. According to information received by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent from embassy officials in Rome, three shots were fired at Ergenekon while he was riding in his car about 1830 Turkish time on (Dei Normani) Street in Rome.

Ergenekon, who is reported to have received two wounds in his right shoulder and one in his left hand, was taken to hospital immediately after the incident. His condition is reported to be satisfactory. No organization has so far claimed responsibility for the incident.

Armenian Group Responsible

NC252016 Paris AFP in English 2010 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Oct (AFP) -- The secret Armenian Army for the Liberation of Armenia claimed responsibility for today's shooting of a Turkish diplomat in Rome in a telephone message to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE. In the Rome incident, Turkish Embassy official Gokberk Ergenekon, 28, was shot and wounded in both arms while walking near the coliseum. The Armenian organisation, which also claimed responsibility for the occupation of the Turkish cultural centre here on September 24 in which one person was killed and five wounded, said today: "We are hunting down fascist Turkish diplomats around the world. Victory is ours."

NEW GROUP CLAIMS BOMBINGS IN ROME 24 OCT

NC241836 Paris AFP in English 1829 GMT 24 Oct 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Oct (AFP) -- The Chilean Embassy, an Argentian trade office attached to that country's embassy and the Guatemalan Embassy were damaged in successive bomb attacks here over the past 24 hours, police reported late today. No injuries were reported in the attacks, but the bombs damaged all three missions, police said.

The hitherto-unknown "Communist Group of Proletarian Internationalism" said in a telephone call to the newspaper IL MESSAGGERO that it was responsible for the first two attacks. The third, against the Guatemalan Embassy this afternoon, was not immediately claimed. The group also claimed bomb blasts on Thursday against a bank branch and the offices of the U.S. publication READER'S DIGEST. Neither attack caused any injuries.

DPRK EXPRESSES INTEREST IN EXPANDING TRADE

[Text] Rome, 23 Oct (ANSA) -- North Korea would like to broaden economic and commercial relations with Italy in the framework of its fifth five-year plan, the new North Korean ambassador to Rome, Kwang Ho-ahn, disclosed Thursday in a meeting with State Industries Minister Gianni De Michelis. The North Korean diplomat pointed out that trade between his nation and Italy is relatively well balanced but that the value of this trade remains low, in the area of 400 billion lire annually, about 3.8 million dollars.

The Italian minister, a communique released in the evening reported, said that the nation's state-owned and state controlled industries are keenly interested in prospects for expansion. He indicated the fields of energy, urban and railway public transport, and industrial plant construction as those in which Italy's state industries are in positions of technical leadership.

MATERIAL ON VISIT BY ITALIAN PRESIDENT PERTINI

Arrival 23 Oct

LD231310 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Excerpt] Italian President Alessandro Pertini arrived in Lisbon this morning for a 3-day official visit to Portugal, returning the visit paid to Italy last year by Gen Ramalho Eanes. [Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese at 1100 GMT on 23 October also reports Pertini's arrival, adding that he was accompanied by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.]

Subjects of Talks

AU231528 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 23 Oct 81

[excerpts] Lisbon, 23 Oct (ANSA) -- The principle themes chosen to be examined during the meetings between Pertini and Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes and the Lisbon government Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao are: bilateral relations, enlarging the European Economic Community (EEC), and the international situation with particular emphasis on the Mediterranian and southern Africa.

Remarks to Parliament

LD240926 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Excerpts] President Pertini of Italy is in Lisbon. The Italian president's speech in the Portuguese parliament this afternoon was a lesson of freedom and hope. If I, a socialist, were offered the most radical of social reforms at the expense of freedom, I would refuse it because freeom should not be traded, he said. That is why President Pertini said he prefers the most imperfect democracy to the most perfect dictatorship.

Before his speech in parliament this afternoon, the Italian president was received in Belem Palace by Gen Ramalho Eanes. The two presidents discussed Portugal's accession to the EEC, East-West relations, disarmament issues, the North-South dialogue and the present situation in southern Africa. Italy has privileged relations with the former Portuguese colonies and, according to Presidential Spokesman Joaquim Letria, General Eanes wanted to learn from President Pertini the degree and state of these relations.

At Ajuda Palace this evening Pertini was the guest of honor at a banquet hosted by Eanes. The speeches that each delivered stressed the significance of building a strong and cohesive Europe open to all nations under the sign of peace.

Pertini-Eanes Talks 24 Oct

AU241358 Rome ANSA in English 0801 GMT 24 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Lisbon, 24 Oct (ANSA) -- Italian head-of-state Pertini continues his consultations with Portuguese leaders here today after a lengthy round of talks with President Antonio Ramalho Eanes yesterday in which both statesmen underscored the importance of Europe's role in the defense of peace.

"Europe must not become a battle-field again," Pertini told Eanes a few hours after he flew in here for a three-day visit, a stance echoed by the Portuguese president when he said that Europe must not be a "theater for interests far from, and extraneous to, the will of the European peoples."

In this context, Pertini confirmed that it is a constant of Italian policy to see Portugal and Spain as becoming "part of a more prosperous and happy Europe" within the frontiers of the European Economic Community.

In his talk with Eanes and an interview with a Lisbon daily, the Italian statesman also stressed the need for close cooperation among the European countries to ensure, "without exclusions or discriminations," that this continent can impose its role as a "conciliator between the two great powers."

On other zones of the international scene, Pertini described the slaying of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as threats to a peace which is "increasingly fragile."

In reply, Eanes voiced Portuguese recognition for the support which Italy has given to Lisbon's request to joint the EEC under conditions and according to a time-table that are still being negotiated.

Addressing a special session of the Portuguese parliament, Pertini said that the basis for all political and economic alliances has full respect for the sovereignty of each ally.

In other points, he called on young Portuguese to look to the revolution which ended fascism in the Iberian state for stimuli towards building a "just and humane" society in defense of the young republic's liberty.

Talks With Balsemao

[Text] President Alessandro Pertini of Italy, who arrived in Lisbon yesterday for a 3-day official visit to our country, this morning received Portuguese Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao in Queluz Palace, the Italian president's official residence during his stay in Portugal. Several aspects of the present international situation as well as Portugal's accession to the EEC were discussed during the meeting. Earlier President Pertini had visited the Lisbon city hall.

Ends Visit 25 Oct

LD252236 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Excerpts] President Pertini of Italy left for home this afternoon after a 3-day visit to Portugal. The visit was deemed by all the figures -- from the most varied quarters -- who met the Italian head of state, as being of great interest.

This morning Pertini received Socialist Party Secretary General Mario Soares at Queluz Palace. Afterwards, Soares described his meeting, which lasted nearly 30 minutes, as very gratifying. The Socialist leader singled out for praise Pertini's statements in favor of parliamentary democracy, tolerance and human harmony, and the European option represented by Italy's support for Portugal's bid for EEC membership.

EDUCATION MINISTER CRESPO SUBMITS RESIGNATION

LD251346 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] It was reported late this morning that Vitor Crespo, minister of education and universities, has submitted his resignation. The reasons for his resignation are not yet known; neither is it known whether Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao has accepted it.

NATO POLL: MAJORITY WANT NATIONAL REFERENDUM

PM260855 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 20 Oct 81 p 13

[Unattributed report: "In Principle, 52 Percent of Spanish People Are Opposed to Entry Into NATO and 18 Percent Are in Favor"]

[Excerpt] The great majority of the Spanish people -- 69 percent -- deems a referendum to be necessary to decide on Spain's entry or nonentry into NATO, according to the results of an opinion poll conducted by the daily newspaper EL PAIS. The same opinion poll shows that 73.4 percent of the Spanish people would take part in the national referendum and that 44 percent of voters would vote against entry into NATO. On the other hand, only 9.9 percent of those polled believe that it is for the government to decide on the Atlantic option. The opinion poll also shows that the percentage of voters in favor of NATO in a referendum would be 13.9 percent.

Only 3 percent of the Spanish people regard the issue of entry or nonentry into NATO as a priority issue of Spanish politics, according to the opinion poll, which shows that in principle 52 percent of citizens are opposed to entry into the Atlantic alliance and 18.1 percent are in favor of possible entry. Also in broad outline the opinion poll shows that 45.2 percent of those polled believe that membership in the Atlantic alliance will have adverse effects for Spain, while 14.8 percent believe that membership will be positive.

Other conclusions of the opinion poll reveal that 67.7 percent of the Spanish people believe they know what NATO is and that 26.4 percent do not know that organization's scope and significance. The poll also indicates that 83.8 percent know that Spain does not belong to NATO at present, while 1.2 percent believe that Spain already belongs to the Atlantic alliance.

The opinion poll also shows that 29 percent of those who voted for the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] in 1979 are opposed to Spain's entry into NATO. It also shows that 52.8 percent of these centrist voters want a referendum, in which a total of 71.8 percent of the UCD's electorate declare themselves prepared to take part. In the referendum, 27.1 percent of those who supported the centrist lists of candidates in the 1979 elections would vote against NATO.

On the other hand, the Spanish Socialist Workers Party voters in 1979 follow their party's guidelines. Some 74 percent declare themselves opposed to entry into NATO, 82.2 percent demand a referendum, 84.1 percent declare themselves in favor of taking part in the voting in the referendum and 71.7 percent would vote against NATO in it; 7.4 percent would vote in favor.

Six Key Questions

The opinion poll on NATO is based on a total of 3,009 interviews, representative of the Spanish population. Six key questions were asked in the following order, as follows: Do you know what NATO is? Does Spain belong to NATO at present? Do you believe that Spain should enter NATO? How do you believe entry into NATO should be decided? Do you believe that entry into NATO will be positive or negative? How would you vote in a referendum on NATO?

All these primary questions are supported by others clarifying the previous questions concerning the reasons for the various choices. Thus the supplementary questions concern, for instance, why should or should not Spain enter NATO? Or on what does entry into the Atlantic alliance depend? Or, last, what aspects of possible entry into NATO do you regard as positive or negative?

The opinion poll's results reveal clearly that 69 percent of the Spanish people want a referendum on Spain's entry or nonentry into NATO, as against 9.9 percent who believe that this is a prerogative of the government or 6.2 percent who believe that the decision on this issue rests exclusively with parliament. Other, much lower, percentages, show that 1.6 percent believe that the king should decide this issue and 0.8 percent believe that the army could take responsibility for the decision.

The average in favor of a referendum (69 percent) is repeated evenly throughout the country, except for the Canary Islands, where only 50 percent demand a referendum. The archipelago is one of the areas most in favor of the government's viewpoints, although again these are very much in a minority. Men are more in favor of a referendum (73 percent) than women (64.8 percent).

In terms of age groups, the youngest people are most in favor of a referendum.

Some 58.9 percent of the interviewees with elementary education are in favor of a referendum, while over 74 percent of people with primary education, a high-school diploma and secondary or higher education are in favor of a referendum. In terms of ideological stance, the opinion poll indicates that 85.5 percent of leftwing interviewees want a referendum, as do 53.5 percent of centrists and 42.2 percent of those to the right of the political spectrum.

Voting Intentions in Referendum

The second most important fact which emerges from the opinion poll, in view of the large majority in favor of a referendum, is overall voting intentions in a possible national referendum. The opinion poll shows that 73.4 percent of the Spanish people are prepared to take part in a national referendum on NATO, which constitutes a high percentage in comparison with other referendums already held in Spain since the introduction of democracy. Definite abstentions in this referendum total 8.7 percent, while 12.2 percent have not decided at present about their possible participation. Only 1.8 percent declined to state what they will do in the event of a referendum.

In connection with voting intentions it must be pointed out that 44 percent of voters would vote against entry into NATO, which would represent, once abstentions have been eliminated, the actual figure of 48.3 percent of votes against accession to the North Atlantic treaty. On the other hand, the number of voters in favor of NATO totals 13.9 percent, which represents, once abstentions have likewise been eliminated, 15.3 percent of actual votes. The percentage of those who are undecided in this poll would be 25.9 percent (28.4 percent without abstentions). Some 5.1 percent do not reply, preferring to withhold their opinions.

CABINET ACCEPTS RESIGNATION OF RADIO-TV HEAD

LD240902 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Text] The entire cabinet met this evening, chaired by Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo. The cabinet decided to accept Fernando Castedo's resignation as director general of the Directorate General of Radio Broadcasting and Television of Spain and to appoint Carlos Robles Piquer as his replacement, in conformity with the radio and television statute.

The cabinet also heard a report on the motion approved at the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE] congress on Mr Castedo's resignation. The government totally rejects the clumsy imputations made in the motion and regrets the crude and undemocratic language it uses. The cabinet stated its conviction that it has acted with the maximum respect both for the law and for the Spanish people. For its part, the PSOE has announced that it has lodged a criminal charge against Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo for his alleged falsification of a public document.

BEEF EXPORTS TO USSR — Three Finnish companies in the meat industry have reached agreements for exports of 3 million kg of beef to the Soviet Union. The contracts will be signed on Friday [23 October]. Under earlier contracts 11 million kg of beef is being delivered to the Soviet Union. This means that the total quantity will now rise to 14 million kg. The contracts cover the supply of 2 million kg of frozen meat and 1 million kg of fresh meat. The exports will begin in November. These extra exports are expected to ease the situation in the meat market. There has been an excess of beef in particular on offer. [Text] [Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 22 Oct 81 p 12 PM]

POLITICIANS SPLIT ON REACTION TO REAGAN REMARK

PM261043 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 22 Oct 81 p 8

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Divided Norwegian Views"]

[Excerpt] On Wednesday [21 October] Foreign Minister Svenn Stray told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA that in his opinion President Reagan's remarks on limited nuclear war in Europe had been given an exaggerated amount of attention. "Reagan has stressed clearly that for NATO the main function of nuclear arms is to deter and prevent war," Stray said.

"There is also good reason to note Defense Secretary Weinberger's remarks at the NATO defense ministers' meeting in Scotland, to the effect that the goal of the negotiations soon to be started on continental nuclear arms is to reduce the number of weapons and to create balance at the lowest possible level. This is an objective which Norway also fully supports," Foreign Minister Stray said.

Guttorm Hansen, deputy chairman of the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee and Labor Party foreign affairs spokesman, said in a commentary that there is growing skepticism in West Europe about the Reagan administration's policies, and that the U.S. Government should seek a better understanding of West European views. Reagan should have consulted West Europe before making statements like the ones he made. He said that there would now be an impact on NATO cohesion. He had noted Defense Secretary Weinberger's statement that Reagan had made a spontaneous remark to the press.

"It is hardly reassuring that the President of NATO's most powerful member nation makes spontaneous remarks on such serious issues. I take a very serious view of what has happened."

PAPER: REAGAN COMMENT UNDIPLOMATIC, BUT REALISTIC

PM260911 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 21 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Mountains Out of Molehills"]

[Excerpts] Now President Reagan has electrified the West German defense debate by saying that he could imagine "cases where tactical nuclear weapons would be used by both sides against troops in the field without this bringing either one of the major powers to pushing the button."

But unfortunately what Reagan said is something that speaks for itself. The world's major armies are equipped with tactical nuclear arms which can be used in limited military operations. Believing that these weapons will never be used is as effective a defense as when the ostrich sticks its head in the sand in order not to have to look at what it does not want to see.

It is no secret that in the maneuvers held on both sides of the Iron Curtain the soldiers have been trained to defend themselves against attacks by tactical nuclear weapons. In Sweden too one of the assumptions on which military maneuvers are based is that limited nuclear warfare cannot be ruled out.

Reagan's remark is least of all characterized by its diplomatic caution. But the fact that it has stirred up such a violent storm shows more than anything else what a serious crisis the NATO alliance finds itself in today.

The protests against replacing old-fashioned nuclear weapons with more modern ones to balance the rapid Soviet nuclear buildup are growing ever stronger in West Germany, where the new missiles will be stationed. Later this year in The Netherlands the government could say "no" to the stationing there of new nuclear-armed weapons. At present it is really only in Italy that there is no widespread protest movement.

The situation is especially sensitive in West Germany after Washington announced at a psychologically unsuitable moment that it was going to develop a new neutron weapon. The assurances that these weapons will be stockpiled in the United States is of little importance, since we are here dealing with weapons which are expressly intended for use against a superior Soviet tank force on a European battlefield.

Nuclear arms have long been on West German territory ready for action. But it is only now, once a decision for modernization has been made, that people have conjured up the frightening vision of Europe as the stage of a nuclear war while the superpowers spare each other retaliation with strategic weapons. This is hardly a strategy which is considered feasible among U.S. politicians and military men.

Given the neutralist feelings prevalent in various places in Europe, every careless statement on defense policy is dangerous for the strained alliance. But the circles opposed to an effective West European defense understand well how these are to be exploited. This has been demonstrated most recently by the storm surrounding Reagan.

MODERATE PARTY CHAIRMAN -- Sweden's biggest nonsocialist party, the Moderate Coalition Party, today elected a new chairman. The party congress, now assembled in Falun, elected Ulf Adelsohn, known for his work in municipal politics, as the new party chairman. The 70 year-old Goesta Bohman, who led the party for 11 years, resigned from his post due to his advanced age. Chairman Adelsohn promised to try to renew the government cooperation of nonsocialist parties which came to an end last spring, if the nonsocialist parties gain a victory in the parliamentary elections of September next year. The Moderate Coalition Party left the government in the spring. The opinion polls, however, forecast a clear victory in next Autumn's elections for the Social Democratic Party which is now in opposition. THATCHER: CANCUN SUMMIT PROMOTES 'UNDERSTANDING'

[By Steve Levinson, PA economics correspondent, in Cancun, Mexico]

[Text] Prime Minister Mrs Margaret Thatcher said today that "a tremendous degree of understanding" between the rich and poor nations had emerged during the two-day Mexico summit which ended in Cancun late last night. The meeting had been marked by "a great desire to understand each other's viewpoint." The poor nations understood the problems of inflation and unemployment which were hitting the industrial world, while the rich nations understood problems like food shortages which afflicted the Third World. Talking to a selected group of British journalists after the summit, Mrs Thatcher also pointed out the contrast between the attitude of the USA and the Soviet bloc in the field of aid for developing nations.

"The U.S. record is quite outstanding," she said. President Reagan had made up his mind to come to the summit and he had been "positive and practical."

"And he pointed out in a wonderful opening speech how much the U.S. had done. The U.S. aid programme is fantastic. But it does not get enough credit for it. It is most unjust that the U.S. attracts the criticism it does."

Asked whether the Soviet bloc would be likely to take part in future moves to help the developing nations, Mrs Thatcher said the Soviet attitude was "not positive."

"In 1979 the help provided by Britain alone was as great as that of the whole Soviet bloc put together," she said. Questioned about the Croydon by-election result, Mrs Thatcher said she was "very disappointed" but "not depressed in any way." The Conservative vote had not collapsed, but had shown well. The government was going through a "temporary problem" but "before the next election the success of our policies will be demonstrated." She added: "I would not go through this very difficult period for me, for my party, for my government if I did not honestly and earnestly believe it is the right way to go to get more jobs, more prospects for the future.

"Yes, it is rough, but you often have to go through difficulties to do the right thing in the long run."

FOOT CRITICIZES REAGAN AT ANTINUCLEAR RALLY

LD241902 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1745 GMT 24 Oct 81

[By Chris Moncrieff, PA Chief Political Correspondent]

[Excerpt] Labour Leader Michael Foot told today's massive anti-nuclear rally in London that advice from Western leaders that safety lay only in piling still higher existing piles of nuclear weapons was "the worst kind of madness ever preached to the people of the world. We are determined to ensure that by practical action we put an end to it," he told thousands of people gathered in Hyde Park.

"When we get a new Labour government, as we will, we will translate this message of nuclear disarmament into practical action because it is only by disarmament that we can properly protect our people." Mr Foot, who faced barracking from anarchists close to the platform, said President Reagan had recently talked in terms of a limited nuclear war in Europe. "Since then they have tried to pretend he did not say anything of the kind. But we say that any idea of so-called limited nuclear war in Europe is an insanity and an outrage." And he stressed: "We will take this message from one end of the country to the other, from one end of Europe to the other, and from one end of the world to the other, to rid the world of nuclear weapons and return to peace and sanity."

NORTH DISCUSSES INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS POSTPONEMENT

[Text] A United Nations statement in Nicosia says that the session of the intercommunal talks scheduled for Tuesday has been postponed. It also says that consultations are now underway for a rescheduling of the session and that a date will be announced as soon as agreed. The decision to postpone the scheduled meeting was taken at the request of the Greek Cypriot side. A Greek Cypriot spokesman claimed yesterday that President Denktas' statement to the effect that the views presented to both sides by the UN Special Representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, would be tabled at the scheduled meeting was contrary to the understanding reached between Mr Gobbi and Mr Kiprianou.

(?It is) believed that the postponement has created a confused situation and that it is contrary to the promise given to the Turkish Cypriot side by Mr Gobbi. It is also believed that Mr Gobbi's latest initiatives are not (?moves) to get the intercommunal talks going. It is understood that the reason for the undermining of these initiatives by the Greek Cypriot side is that they do not approve them because the initiatives affirmed the partnership and equality of the Turkish Cypriots who would be responsible for their own security in their own area. A Turkish Cypriot official said that there was no need for the Turkish Cypriot side to make a detailed statement on the matter.

KIPRIANOU INVITES PAPANDREOU FOR VISIT

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou had talks in Athens with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and discussed Cyprus developments. The leaders had a private meeting at Mr Papandreou's political office. This meeting lasted about 1 hour. A broader meeting followed. According to a communique released later, there was an exchange of views on the various aspects and on the latest Cyprus developments.

President Kiprianou announced that he invited Prime Minister Papandreou to visit Cyprus. Mr Papandreou stated that he has already accepted the invitation with great pleasure. Answering a pertinent question, the Greek prime minister expressed the hope that his visit would take place during the current year.

In his address, President Kiprianou expressed thanks for the cordial welcome accorded to him and absolute satisfaction with the atmosphere in which the talks were held.

O KIRIKAS CRITICIZES KIPRIANOU'S ATHENS VISIT

NC231015 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 23 Oct 81 p 1

[Editorial: "A Peculiar Visit"]

[Text] President of the Republic Kiprianou, accompanied by his usual entourage, has been in Athens since yesterday. He also carries in his pocket the written and specific "Waldheim new ideas."

We have been told that this visit is very important. On his departure for Athens the president stated that he attributed "special significance" to it because during this visit he would brief the new prime minister of Greece, Papandreou, on the "latest Cyprus developments." It is certain the "new ideas" will be discussed in their final and concrete form. The future handling of the issue will also be discussed and the new line and course will be laid down. This is the first official meeting between our leadership and the new Greek Government.

From every point of view, therefore, the visit ought to be considered very important. Rather, it could become very important -- perhaps the most important and decisive of all the visits which will follow during the terms of office of Kiprianou as president of the republic of Cyprus and Papandreou as prime minister of Greece.

The reason for this is that, on the one hand, we have the developing initiative of UN Secretary General Waldheim on the Cyprus issue and the expected answer of the Greek Cypriot side to the "new ideas". Some people even hastened to state that this is "the most delicate and critical phase of the Cyprus issue." Others have even told us that we are on the threshold of "the last opportunity" for a solution to the Cyprus issue. Others warned us that we are on the eve of a strong domestic interparty conflict over the "new ideas."

On the other hand, during this first meeting between the president of the republic and the new Greek prime minister there will, of necessity, be a discussion of the philosophy and the process which will govern future relations between the governments of Cyprus and Greece. It is at long last time to discuss and solve the issue once and for all -- if the much vaunted dogma "Cyprus decides and Greece supports," still applies or can apply.

At a time when on the Cypriot political firmament all these serious matters remain suspended like the sword of Damocles, and when these basic questions demand decisive and clear answers, and at a time when answers to these questions will define our future course, this visit should have been prepared with the necessary seriousness and attention. The necessary preparation should have been made if this visit was to be truly very important and definitive as the first visit and the first discussion between Kiprianou and Papandreou in the latter's capacity as the new all-powerful prime minister of Greece.

None of this was done. The people neither saw nor heard of any preparation. On the contrary, what the people saw and heard and the statements issued made them realize that there was no preparation, as there should have been. On the contrary, the people see and note peculiar things happening during a peculiar visit.

As his first guest -- "in order to be briefed on the Cyprus issue" -- Papandreou invites not the president of the republic but EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis. As if this were not peculiar enough, he also considers it expedient to state publicly and officially that "Lissardhis' views on the Cyprus issue were always important and always on the proper course." It is, however, known that Lissaridhis' views do not coincide with those of President Kiprianou and that the course laid down by EDEK for the Cyprus issue rarely varies and only by coincidence parallels that of Kiprianou. And yet, after the meeting of Kiprianou and Papandreou we will once again hear all the trite remarks about "full identity of views and absolute agreement of views, evaluations and future handling."

Another peculiar thing is the uncertainly about the "new ideas." The president assured us that he will not be bound and will take no decisions before these "new ideas" are discussed with the political parties and before the National Council adopts decisions. Only yesterday, the government spokesman told us "the new ideas are still under discussion."

What views, therefore will Kiprianou express to Papandreou on these "new ideas?" Will these be his personal views or the views of the parties which have not yet taken any position?

What handling will he discuss? Will it be the handling recommended by Greece or the handling on which Cyprus...has not yet decided? In what direction will Kiprianou attempt to push Papandreou? Will it be toward acceptance or rejection of the "new ideas?" What will happen if the National Council in the end adopts a decision contrary to what will have been agreed upon in Athens?

The visit to Athens should have been undertaken. It should have been very important. In order for the visit to be so, Kiprianou should have gone to Athens bearing the decision, or at least the views, of the political parties on the "new ideas." A meeting and a decision of the National Council should have preceded it. Now the visit can neither be very important nor definitive. It is a peculiar social visit, the result of a peculiar mentality and a peculiar way of exercising authority.

I SIMERINI CRITICIZES PAPANDREOU'S CYPRUS POLICY

NC231002 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 22 Oct 81 p 3

[From the "Free" column: "The Papandreou Statement -- The 'Ideas' and the National Council -- PASOK and EDEK"]

[Text] In his first statement on the Cyprus issue as the prime minister of Greece, Andreas Papandreou stated, "I do not favor a solution to the Cyprus issue which is enforced by the United States via Waldheim and which will mean joint [Greek and Turkish] sovereignty in Cyprus." We consider this statement as unfortunate, pointless and as causing concern. Papandreou invited President Kiprianou to Athens for a briefing and an exchange of views, primarily on the Waldheim ideas. Consequently, he ought to have avoided any statement on the issue before seeing the president and talking to him. The rejection of the "ideas" by Papandreou -- labeling these as U.S. ideas -- before the context of these ideas becomes officially known, only creates doubt about the seriousness with which the new Greek leadership intends to approach the great national question of Cyprus.

The concern caused by this Papandreou statement is increased by two other facts: The visit to Athens by President Kiprianou, who did not have the collective decision of the National Council with him, and Papandreou's invitation to Lissaridhis to meet him before he had time to see President Kiprianou. In respect to the first fact, President Kiprianou had emphatically stated that final decisions on the "Waldheim ideas" would be taken upon his return to Cyprus from New York and after he convened the National Council. Ten days have elapsed since his return but Kiprianou did not convene the National Council. He will do so, he stated, after his talks with Papandreou in Athens. As stated by the new [Greek] prime minister, however, decisions will be taken during his talks with the Cypriot president on the establishment of a new strategy on the Cyprus issue. It is, therefore, confirmed once more that the National Council is used only to confirm -- after the fact -- unilateral decisions and actions by the president, and not as a body for collective responsibility for the promotion of our national cause.

In respect to Papandreou's invitation to Lissaridhis, this is a hasty and ill-considered action, for numerous reasons. Most important, purely formal reasons dictated a Papandreou meeting with the president of Cyprus first, and later meeting with any other Cypriot. In addition, there are also reasons of essence why this should have been so. The chairman of Edek has declared his emphatic opposition to the "Waldheim ideas." It is these ideas which will be the center of discussion in the Papandreou-Kiprianou talks. By seeing Lissaridhis first, therefore, Papandreou gives the impression that he considers the positions and views of Lissaridhis as of primary importance and perhaps definitive on his subsequent meeting with Kiprianou. It is not only formality and the essence of the matter which are ignored by Papandreou's invitation to Lissaridhis. He also ignores the will of the Cypriot people as it was expressed in the 24 May election.

Lissaridhis represents a party backed by barely eight percent of the electorate. One could expect a little more respect toward the principle of popular representation from the leader of a party which managed to get elected to authority with the backing of 48 percent of the votes. However, although the leadership of PASOK has every right to be proud of its achievement, the leadership of EDEK ought to be ashamed in an inverse proportion. In record time and under very adverse conditions, PASOK managed to convince the majority of the Greek people about the change it promised and won the peoples confidence. By contrast, EDEK dismally failed to do the same thing in Cyprus for the past 12 years. It never managed to convince Cypriot Hellenism about its own change and never managed to win its confidence. It is for this reason that it has always remained a Lilliputian party. It is for this reason that we believe that identifying PASOK with EDEK is one more erroneous step by the new political leadership in Greece in approaching the Cyprus issue and that it should not be continued.

Criticism by AKEL

[Editorial: "Misfiring Actions"]

[Text] In our newspaper's editorial last Wednesday we wrote: "The people of Cyprus appreciate the fact that the new prime minister of Greece, Andreas Papandreou, gave the Cypriot issue top priority among all his other urgent duties and requested a meeting with President Kiprianou as soon as possible." We then concluded: "The people of Cyprus expect the Papandreou-Kiprianou meetings next Friday will help the two governments to deal with the current critical situation of the Cypriot issue with responsibility, wisdom and determination and that they will cooperate closely so that the Cypriot issue is led out of stagnation and toward an auspicious solution." We believe that what we wrote expressed the thoughts, hopes and desires of the broadest patriotic sections of the Cypriot people.

On the very same day, however, there was an announcement of Papandreou's invitation to the chairman of EDEK, Lissaridhis, for a meeting -- 2 days before his meeting with the president of the Republic of Cyprus. The meeting of the Greek prime minister with Lissaridhis was advertised in Athens and in Cyprus as "particularly important" since it was, at the same time, the first official meeting Papandreou was having after the swearing in of the new Greek Government. Statements to the press followed in which Papandreou reportedly stated that Lissaridhis' views, in his own opinion, "always were on the proper course."

We believe that the hasty meeting of the new Greek prime minister with the chairman of EDEK on the eve of the official meeting with President Kiprianou was off mark and incorrect. Even more off mark during the critical phase of the Cypriot issue was the statement attributed to Papandreou on the always "proper course" which Lissaridhis maintains. This could lead to the interpretation that the chairman of EDEK was on the proper course when he disagreed with the line laid down by the cabinet and the National Council and when he opposed the Makarios-Denktas agreement and the four guiding principles of this agreement for the solution of the Cypriot issue. Also well known is EDEK's negative position toward the process of the talks which are provided for under the UN resolutions and are conducted under UN auspices. Consequently, at a critical phase of the Cypriot issue and on the eve of talks with the president of Cyprus, the prime minister of Greece is not permitted to make statements which could be interpreted as approval of EDEK's "course" on the Cypriot issue and, as a sequel, as opposition to the Makarios-National Council line, which is approved and followed by the greatest majority of the people and the political world of Cyprus. It is also well known that EDEK received only eight percent of the vote in the last election and that it is the smallest party in the House of Representatives. For every Cypriot and mainland Greek observer it is evident that the Papandreou statement in support of the Lissaridhis line is an impermissible provocation aimed at the Government of Cyprus, the National Council, and the greatest majority of the Cypriot people.

We hope there will be an explanation and a correction of the statement, as it was published, because the damage it can cause at such critical moments is very great. We continue to believe that after the official Athens meeting, the government and the prime minister of Greece will handle the Cypriot issue in this critical phase with the requisite responsibility, wisdom and determination, and that here will be another period of sincere and creative cooperation between Cyprus and Greece for the termination of the Cypriot tragedy.

TA NEA ATTACKS CRITICS OF SOCIALISM, PASOK

NC250920 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 25 Oct 81 p 1

[From the "Positions" column: "The Sycophants Rave"]

[Excerpts] An historic change has been brought about in Greece: The forces of PASOK, the force of change and of socialism, took over authority. At the same time, the Greek socialist party and the Cypriot socialist party are related by close ties of comradeship since their establishment; and the chairmen of PASOK and EDEK are related by close friendship and a joint history of common struggles.

PASOK did not lay down its Cyprus policy when it took over authority. PASOK has a clear and specific position which it declared publicly. PASOK is now in authority and it is a party of principles and dedication and, on the day after victory, Papandreou immediately declared with a full sense of responsibility that its covenant with the people will be honored.

At the same time, some [people] over here started their sycophantic campaign against PASOK, whispering that PASOK will change its policy on the Cypriot issue. This is what they whispered because it served their purpose. Then came Papandreou's statements after his meeting with Lissaridhis reaffirming PASOK's determination to follow its declared policy. It is then that the sycophants started to rave. Their fears, however, lie elsewhere. They now fear that official Greece will not now bow to pressure to give into unacceptable compromises, so much favored by these protesters, that it will now become the main supporter of our peoples struggle. They now fear that the climate of defeatism, which they have cultivated, will be dispersed by PASOK's sun and that our people will now see that there are realistic limits for struggle toward justification. And they resort to the lamentable argument of percentages.

The protesters fear suprise, they fear the turn of the people toward socialism and national dignity. It is said that KHARAVYI has followed in the footsteps of I SIMERINI and the extreme rightwing press of Greece. KHARAVYI is attempting to dictate the policy of the Greek Government. Over there, however, it is the Greece of PASOK and such dictates are dealt with -- with contempt.

LISSARIDHIS SUPPORTS PASOK ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC251216 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] Chairman of the socialist party EDEK Lissaridhis, speaking at a district gathering in Larnaca, emphasized, among other things that the victory of the socialist forces in Greece has brought about a basic qualitative change in regional and European developments, specifically concerning the factors which affect the Cypriot problem. The PASOK government, Lissaridhis added, has a clear position on the Cypriot issue. PASOK considers it a question of invasion and violation of human rights and a basic national issue. It insists on its solution of the basis of UN resolutions.

Referring to the question of Waldheim's ideas, Lissaridhis said these ideas are unacceptable. They are, he added, outside the spirit of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. We must, he continued, demand conformity to the terms of reference -- the UN resolutions -- and the immediate withdrawal of Waldheim's ideas. We must appeal to the UN now.

GREECE TO RECOGNIZE PLO THIS YEAR, HOST 'ARAFAT

NC231400 Paris in English 1352 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Text] Athens, 23 Oct (AFP) -- Greece will recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization formally at the end of the year and invite PLO chief Yasir 'Arafat for an official visit, officials here said today.

The move would make Greece the first member of the European Community and North Atlantic Treaty Organization to recognize the PLO. The announcement comes three days after the Soviet Union announced it would accord the PLO diplomatic status.

Greece's new socialist prime minister, Andreas Papandreou, sworn in Tuesday, personally confirmed rumors circulating here last night that Athens would recognize the PLO before the end of the year. Asked about the reports, Mr Papandreou told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE today, "Yes that is correct" but added, "I cannot get into details for the moment."

The prime minister, who made his comments on emerging from a long meeting with Cyprus President Sprios Kiprianou, did say, however, that the visit by Mr 'Arafat would take place this year. Todays's announcement comes just under a year after the PLO was allowed to open an office in Athens.

Two other countries in Western Europe have accorded diplomatic recognition to the Palestinian group, Austria and Spain, although Madrid granted the PLO only qualified diplomatic status.

The Soviet Union was the only one of the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council -- including China, France, the United States and Britain -- to accord diplomatic status to the PLO. Other countries that made the move are: Romania, East Germany, Bulgaria, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, India, Iran, Kenya, Malaysia, Pakistan, Senegal, Sir Lanka, Tanzania as well as all the Arab states.

The PLO's representative in Greece, Shawqi Armali, hailed the move [words indistict] "an example of courage" and a "stunning victory for the Palestinian people and their legitimate representative, the PLO."

"The taking of this position will surely help consolidate the political and economic ties between Greece and the Arab nation," Mr Armali said.

He said the decision "showed to those who have a tendency to ignore it that the conditions sine qua non for a just and durable peace in the Middle East can only come through the Palestinian people and their legitimate representative, the PLO."

Diplomatic sources in Athens said that Mr Papandreou might possibly make a formal declaration on the recognition of the PLO following a cabinet meeting scheduled for today.

Papandreou Invites 'Arafat

NC232308 Paris AFP in English 2243 GMT 23 Oct 81

[Excerpts] Athens, 23 Oct (AFP) -- Greece practically recognized the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in a letter to its chief, Yasir 'Arafat, today from Premier Andreas Papandreou.

The newly elected socialist premier invited Mr 'Arafat "to pay an official visit to Athens at your ealiest convenience so that we may have a fruitful and personal exchange of views on matters of mutual interest, including the upgrading of your (liaison and information) office here."

A reliable source said that Mr 'Arafat would have preferred obtaining official recognition of the PLO before coming here. But authoritative Greek sources explained that Mr Papandreou could not take that step before his foreign policy receives a green light from Parliament in a vote of confidence scheduled for November 17.

The stage was set for Mr Papandreou's swift invitation by a letter from Mr 'Arafat congratulating him on the socialist victory in the general election on October 18. The Information Ministry promptly made public Mr 'Arafat's letter, a move that looked to observers like part of a scenario to make Greece the first member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and of the Euromart to recognize the PLO.

Officials said formal recognition is likely by the end of the year. Throughout Mr Papandreou's victorious election campaign he stressed he wanted good relations with the Arab world as well as with Mediterranean countries, West Germany and France.

Greece has trade and financial relations with Arab countries that will be consolidated by the decision to recognize the PLO, commented the head of its office here this afternoon, Shawki Armali.

Some diplomatic observers believed that Mr Papandreou will make similar gestures of friendship to other liberation movements. The Greek socialist party has close relations with several of them, including the Polisario Front seeking independence of the Western Sahara from Moroccan.

Mr Papandreou's letter said: "I should like to assure you of our solidarity with the... Palestinian people, of which the PLO is the sole representative. The Greek people, with their long experience of struggles for independence, have followed with deepest appreciation the consistent support granted by the PLO to the people of Cyprus. We believe that the closet co-operation should be maintained among the democratic and progressive forces of our region. It is in this spirit that I am inviting you..."

The new Greek Government has no intention of granting full legal recognition to Israel, officials said tonight. The previous government only recognized Israel "de facto" to avoid jeopardizing relations with the Arabs. Israel has diplomatic representatives here but not a full-fledged embassy. A spokesman of the Israeli diplomatic office commented on the invitation to Mr 'Arafat: "The PLO is a terrorist organization whose avowed aim is the destruction of Israel, an aim which we are confident is not shared by the Greek Government and people."

PAPANDREOU DISCUSSES NATO, TURKEY, U.S. BASES

NC252124 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 25 Oct 81

[Text] In an interview with the U.S. television network ABC, Prime Minister Papandreou has referred to the government's foreign policy issues. The interview was carried by ABC tonight on the program "Issues and Answers."

Answering a question on Greece's position toward NATO and the U.S. bases in our country, Mr Papandreou said, among other things: We do not intend to act unilaterally. This means that we shall begin talks on both the question of our participation in the military wing of the Altantic alliance and on the question of the U.S. bases. In the case of the military alliance, the prime minister added, we are facing in Greece a unique problem that no other European member of the alliance is facing. We feel a threat from an ally to our east, Turkey. One of the biggest problems of Greek defense in the past 7 years has been preparing our defense in case Turkey, beyond words, decides to enforce its demands.

Turkey claims half the Aegan — in the air, the sea and the continental shelf. This, of course, is contrary to all international treaties that define with great accuracy our borders with Turkey.

This problem has compelled Greek Governments so far, including mine, to maintain a high level of military readiness at the expense of programs for education, health and social measures which are necessary to assist the classes with the lowest income. It is surprising, strange and unique that the Atlantic alliance refuses to guarantee our eastern borders. It protects them only in the north. But there is no visible threat from the north, while in the last 7 years the Turks have violated our territorial airspace, they have violated our continental shelf and they are putting forward claims on our sovereign national territory. By belonging to NATO's military wing, we are obliged, of course, to look northward, to face the threat from the Warsaw Pact.

In reply to a question on how Greece's position vis a vis Turkey would be strengthened by withdrawing from NATO, Papandreou said: All the Greek people prefer a guanrantee of our eastern borders. Strangely, the Atlantic alliance is not ready to do this. The question truly is what kind of an alliance is this and what Greek interests are served by participating in it? This is the question that should be clearly asked of the Atlantic alliance. We plan to ask it in the near future. Soon I believe, Papandreou said, we shall have a meeting of NATO members, most probably in Brussels, where this issue should be discussed.

In reply to a question as to what form this guarantee should take and what the U.S. Government could do, the prime minister said: it is very simple. The U.S. Government is the key factor in the Atlantic alliance. A simple statement by the U.S. Government is needed to the effect that Greece's borders are guaranteed against any threat from any direction. In the past, the United States issued a statement in which it expressed its opposition to any armed conflict in the area. This is Kissinger's letter to our foreign minister in 1976. However, in the recent discussions between McCloskey of the U.S. Embassy and the previous Greek Government there was a refusal even to make a reference to the Kissinger letter. This represents the complete reluctance of the United States and the Atlantic alliance to recognize the fact that there is a critical, difficult and dangerous problem confronting Greece in the East.

At this point, the U.S. journalist asked the Prime Minister whether he thinks the issue could be settled if President Reagan told the Turks to stay away and that a hostile action would not be tolerated. Papandreou replied: It is not necessary for him to say stay away. It is enough to say that in no case will the Altantic alliance recognize, tolerate of accept an attack against Greece from any direction.

We have had a bitter experience. In 1974, Turkey, through Attila, invaded Cyprus using NATO arms -- arms it received from the United States in violation even of congressional resolutions -- and NATO stood by. Despite the fact that Greece and Britain are guarantor powers, both belonging to the Atlantic alliance, NATO did nothing to intervene and allowed an alliance member to occupy territory of a nonaligned state, a member of the United Nations.

In reply to another question, Papandreou said: Our party and myself would like to see a Europe that is not divided into East and West. We would like to have a Europe in which neither the Warsaw Pact nor NATO divide it into two military alliances confronting one another. We believe in a Europe and a Mediterranean that are free of nuclear arms. We believe that Yalta and Potsdam are obsolete to determine the status of European countries. This is the vision.

Papandreou then said that a problem exists concerning military aid from the United States and NATO to Greece and Turkey. It is the custom, he added, to give 10 to Turkey and 7 to Greece. At this point, this custom has been abandoned. It has been announced to the Greek Government that because of congress' independence, it is impossible to give a guarantee on this point. However, it is clear that the allies are building a terrible military machine in Turkey, which has an army of 120,000 men called the Aegean Army which does not face northward at the Soviet Union. It faces westward toward the Aegean. It has 150 landing craft. Will they wage a war in the Black Sea? These are questions that must be [word indistinct].

In reply to a question on whether he expects war with Turkey, Papandreou said: I would like to say no. The fact that a threat exists does not mean that a war will be fought. In my last statement during the election campaign I offered an olive branch to Turkey. I declared that the two peoples, the two neighboring countries, should cooperate like good neighbors, something that would strengthen our independence and raise the rate of our economic development. I confirmed that we do not seek anything from Turkey, but I made it clear that in no case are we prepared to give one inch of our airspace, sea and land. I have the feeling that this clear statement will contribute to peace, will improve understanding, will offer more to peace than petty concessions, which in fact could encourage Turkey to ask for more.

Answering a question on the U.S. bases in Greece, Mr Papandreou recalled that his positions against the bases and nuclear arms are well known. He added: We admit that the United States is a superpower with its own strategic interests in the region and that it would be silly of us to proceed with a showdown with the United States. Thus, he added, the first thing we must make clear is that we do not intend to act unilaterally. There must be a schedule, because almost all the agreements on military bases have a fixed period of time.

Mr Papandreou then said that it is of great importance for Greece to have the right of an annual reexamination of the question of the bases because it is possible that there would be questions very sensitive to Greece's national security with regard to the bases. He stressed: We would like to have full information and control so that we may be able to forestall the commencement of a military operation from Greek territory against a third country with which we have good relations. He added: We also want to be certain that the information collected at the U.S. baees is not conveyed to our ally Turkey, because such a thing would weaken our defense capability.

The U.S. journalists then asked the prime minister whether his intention is for Greece to feel that it has the United States in its hands because of the great importance of the bases. Mr Papandreou replied in the negative and stressed that on the contrary -- at least thus far -- it is the United States which has Greece in its hands, a thing that is proved by the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, by an ally who is being armed to the teeth and who is making claims on the Greek national territory without being prevented by NATO. The prime minister stressed: The United States must recognize that there is a Greek Government whose primary duty is to serve above all the Greek people's interests.

Answering other questions, Mr Papandreou stressed the following: He took over the Defense Ministry not because he is afraid of but because he wanted to honor the Greek officers. The PASOK government recognized the PLO by promoting its office in Athens to a diplomatic mission because it considers this organization representative of the Palestinian people. He stressed: Something similar must be done soon in the United States. There is no case for Greece to abandon a bloc and to join another. What we believe in and we are struggling for, he stressed, is the Greek people's right to define their course.

Answering the last question put to him, Mr Papandreou said that all the aforesaid questions must be discussed -- and this is possible -- around a table.

PAPANDREOU INVITED FOR ROMANIA, ALGERIA VISITS

NC222110 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 22 Oct 81

[Text] At 1830 today, Prime Minister Papandreou received the dean of the diplomatic corps, Romanian Ambassador Ion Brad, who congratulated the prime minister on his election victory and then read a warm congratulatory message from Romanian President Ceausescu. The Romanian ambassador also extended an invitation from President Ceausescu to Papandreou to visit Romania officially. Immediately afterward, the prime minister received the Algerian Ambassador, who expressed the verbal congratulations of Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid as well as his invitation to Papandreou to make an official visit to Algeria. Present at both meetings was Mr Alevras, who will be chairman of the new Chamber of Deputies.

CEMENT, STEEL INDUSTRIES TO BE NATIONALIZED

[Text] Volos -- The big industrial cement and steel units, which include in Magnisia Nome the cement firm Aget and two steel firms, are among those that will be nationalized. This was announced yesterday by Deputy Industry Minister I. Pitsioris who visited Volos and chaired a meeting at the nomarch's office. Afterward, the deputy industry minister announced measures for the protection of the environment. Mr Pitsioris said that no further extension will be given to the cement industry for the installation of filters to prevent air pollution. He further said that the steel industries at Velestinon and Almiron will be compelled to install filters to prevent pollution of the atmosphere.

The alcohol industry, he said, will be compelled to install equipment for the biological cleaning of its waste matter in order to prevent pollution of the sea. He also said that the municipalities will participate in the control on such installations in order to avoid pollution of the environment. The chairman of the labor center at Volos, Mr N. Lappas, was not invited to the meeting because, as Mr Pitsioris said, "he does not represent the Volos working class."

GOVERNMENT TO PUBLISH PARTY STATEMENTS

[Text] In implementation of Prime Minister Papandreou's declaration on the democratization of the state's information media for the citizens and the free movement of ideas and within the framework of equal treatment for all parties in the new parliament, it has been decided the General Secretariat of the Press and Information Office will publish and distribute the statements of all parliamentary parties.

Specifically, by order of Deputy Minister to the Prime Minister's Office Maroudhas, the General Secretariat will publish and distribute the statements of party leaders in the new parliament. The same order stipulates that parliamentary parties may issue and distribute through the responsible press and information service statements by their leaders. During this procedure, representatives of the parties in the new parliament will be present at the service resonsible for publication and distribution. Deputy Minister Maroudhas will communicate tomorrow with the parliamentary opposition parties about implementation of the decision.

CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY BEGINS DELIBERATIONS

[Excerpt] After General Evren's speech opening the Consultative Assembly, the members came to the rostrum in alphabetical order and took their oath. Meanwhile, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu sent a congratulatory message to the temporary president of the assembly, Said Irmak, on the occasion of the first session of the Consultative Assembly.

The activities of the assembly will be conducted within the framework of the relevant National Security Council decision which goes into effect today, until the assembly's internal statute is prepared. Under the National Security Council decision, the oldest member of the assembly is the president of the assembly while the two youngest members are the secretaries. The agenda of the assembly is drawn up by the president. During the second session of the assembly, which is to be held on 27 October, a nine-man chairmanship council will be elected. These will be the president of the assembly, two deputy presidents, four secretaries and two administrative members. The election will be in the form of secret balloting. The chairmanship council members will be elected for 1 year.

A simple majority of the Consultative Assembly members will be enough to elect the president. If no results are obtained in the first round of voting, there will be a second round and this time it will be enough to receive most of the votes in order to be elected president. The first part of the session will be adjourned after a president is elected. The second part of the session will be opened under the chairmanship of the Consultative Assembly president. The other members of the chairmanship council will be elected during this meeting. The Consultative Assembly president will represent the Consultative Assembly and will chair the general meetings. Checking the minutes, the execution of the chairmanship council decisions and the execution of the Consultative Assembly's police work [as heard] are among the duties of the president.

During the third session, the Consultative Assembly will elect the 13-member internal statute temporary committee. The committee will hold its first meeting the following day and will submit an internal statute report to the Consultative Assembly within 15 days. The Consultative Assembly will conclude its debates on this report within 5 days. The report will receive its final form in the Consultative Assembly and it will be published in the Official Gazette. After the internal statute goes into effect, the National Security Council decision which temporarily regulates the activities of the Consultative Assembly will no longer be in force.

GENERAL EVREN STATEMENT ON OCCASION OF UN DAY

[Text] The UN day is being celebrated. Head of State Kenan Evren has issued a statement on the occasion saying that Turkey expects the United Nations to take effective measures against international terrorism which has assumed a character threatening relations among states. General Evren expressed the belief that it is necessary for all countries making up the international society to act with the understanding that they can not remain at a distance from the threats directed by international terrorism to states individually and to relations among states. and to solve the problem through cooperation.

Expressing sincere congratulations on the 36th anniversary of the United Nations' commencement of its historic duty, General Evren recalled that the United Nations was established by 51 states, among them Turkey, with the aim of avoiding the recurrance of the disasters brought about by the World War II and of creating a happier, more just and peaceful world.

Noting that the United Nations -- which currently has 156 members -- has achieved the internationalism necessary for achieving its goals, General Evren said: These 156 countries which have united within the framework of the United Nations have agreed to insure international peace and security, to preserve friendly relations based upon the principle of respect on the right of states to determine their future and of the equality of their rights, to secure and develop human rights and fundamental freedoms, to put an end to racism and colonialism, to realize a balanced disarmament and to create better living conditions for humanity through economic and social development. The United Nations has carried out important work in the last 36 years with the aim of realizing these principles which cover a large field. All member countries should exert sincere efforts through mutual cooperation and harmony in line with the organization's goals if these activities are to achieve a complete success.

Evren noted that the primary goal of the United Nations is no doubt, to ensure international peace and security. Pointing out that the United Nations is playing an effective role in reducing clashes and tensions that threaten world peace, solving disputes through peaceful means and securing the domination of detente in international relations, General Evren added: We appreciate the intense efforts exerted by the organization for the solution of disputes in the various parts of the world through peaceful means. UN activities directed toward the independence of colonies and the membership as sovereign states of over 70 countries which have gained their independence have been received with appreciation in the world. These activities are an indication of the organization's effectiveness. The United Nations, which is aware that the reality concerning the poverty of 2/3 of the world and the deep economic differences between developed and developing countries are factors sincerely threatening international peace, security and stability, is continuing its efforts to establish a more just international economic system. We are hopeful that these efforts will lead to concrete results.

In the last part of his statement, General Evren said: Turkey, which has based its policy on greater leader Ataturk's principle of "peace at home, peace in the world" and which has always carefully implemented this principle, will continue its constructive and effective contributions to the organization's activities being aware of the duties and responsibilities that befall UN member countries in accordance with its charter. Furthermore, we are once again proud of the fact that we have chosen Ataturk's international peace call as a guide to our foreign policy at a time when the centenary of the great Ataturk is being celebrated. I congratulate the United Nations on the 36th anniversary of its founding and wish the strengthening of the organization for a peaceful world and the continuation of its successes.

CUMHURIYET INTERVIEWS TURKMEN ON GREEK ELECTION

NC260858 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 22 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Interview granted by Turkish Foreign MInister Ilter Turkmen to CUMHURIYET correspondent Sedat Ergin in Ankara; -- date not given]

[Text] Question: How does Turkey view the victory of the socialist PASOK party in the Greek elections? How will Papandreou's assumption to power reflect on Turkish-Greek relations?

Answer: It must be stressed above all that the Greek elections are quite naturally an internal affair of Greece. Moreover, we do not particularly favor one party over another. What concerns us are the different attitudes which this change of power may entail in Greece's general foreign policy and in the relations between Turkey and Greece. You know that there are serious speculations throughout the world in this respect.

PASOK Leader Papandreou made several speeches during this election campaign, stressing that he would pursue certain policies different from those of the previous government. Meanwhile, he also commented on Turkish-Greek relations. We took meticulous care to avoid answering these comments.

We had stressed that we would refrain from evaluating the speeches made by the new Greek Government in the course of the election campaign, that we would wait for the new government to come to power, to announce its program and to implement it before we express our views. There is no change in our attitude. Most probably, now that honorable Papandreou has formed his government, he will, under changing conditions, filter his words before he utters them.

Question: What factors will affect Turkish-Greek relations when Papandreou's policy toward the West is taken into account, and particularly in the event that he comes to some compromise understanding with the West?

Answer: We do not know how far Papandreou will go in implementing what he has preached during his campaign. Nor do we know how he will behave toward the EEC. We do not exactly know what his attitude will be toward Turkish-Greek relations. Therefore, the best thing to do is to wait. I believe that, generally speaking, NATO and the EEC have adopted a similar attitude. We should not rush into an evaluation.

Question: Comments made by Turkish public opinion draw attention to these points: First, that Papandreou will seek, from his angle, to exploit the presence of a military administration in Turkey; Second, that sooner or later, the West and, particularly, Europe will come to terms with Papandreou, in which case Turkish-Greek relations are bound to be affected at Turkey's expense. What are your views on such comments?

Answer: This question assumes that the West generally attaches more importance to Greece than to Turkey. It is rather difficult to accept this. It is obvious that in the light of recent developments, Turkey's importance for the West has increased. I, therefore, do not doubt in the least that the West's policy toward Turkey will be a balanced one. The Greek Government may naturally endeavor to secure certain tactical advantages in the European parliamentary institutions. So much so that it may even obtain some results, but we should not expect this to reflect on the fundamental attitude of the West toward Turkey.

Question: Soon after the elections, Papandreou made a statement in which he referred to the Cyprus issue and stressed that his administration would not bow to any faits accomplis that UN Secretary General Waldheim's solution proposals may contain. Papandreou also demanded the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus and argued that the intercommunal talks were, in fact, being carried out not between the representatives of both communities, but between the Greek Cypriot administration and Ankara, an argument which excludes the TFSC. How did you receive this statement by Papandreou?

Answer: I think this is what he said during his election campaign. We intend to wait until the concepts of the Greek Government on various international issues mature. In the meantime, they will find time to examine the dossiers more carefully. The UN Security Council has a resolution on the Cyprus issue. Intercommunal talks are being conducted on the island under the surveillance of the UN secretary general within the framework of this resolution. It is not in the power of the Greek Government to change this procedure. As I have said before, the Cyprus issue is not a matter between Turkey and Greece. It is not a dispute that is being debated between Turkey and Greece. Negotiations are being carried out between the two communities on the island.

COLUMNIST SUGGESTS PASOK RULE BETTER THAN RALLIS

NC260835 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 21 Oct 81 pp 2, 11

["Viewpoint" column by Professor Mumtaz Soysal: "A Socialist Neighbor"]

[Text] A socialist neighbor is better than a capitalist one. Instead of pondering deeply during these days when Rallis has gone and Papandreou has come in Greece, the wisest policy for Turkey would be to get used to the idea that it is not at all difficult to coexist with a socialist neighbor and to be prepared to act according to such conditions. What was Rallis doing? What he was doing was not different from what all the Greek politicians have been doing since the beginning of the 19th century; to maintain good relations with the West, to give the impression with a contemporary air that it is "one of them," and to mobilize all the outdated means and worn-out concepts inspired by the mentality of the crusades and the egoism of the Europeans against the Turks, who "are not one of them." Even its participation in the EEC was inspired by such a mentality.

What else was Rallis doing? He was trying to pose as more anticommunist and pro-NATO than anyone else and to secure as many arms from the United States as he could by advocating the indispensability of Greece for the defense of the free world. In doing this, his intention was to establish an obvious military supremacy in the Aegean by saying "you are giving the Turks 10, you must unavoidably give me 7," regardless of the fact that Greece's population is only one fifth and its area only one sixth compared with that of Turkey.

Even if the socialist government in our neighborhood does not change both these attitudes fundamentally, it will try to base them on new realities. The decision to join the EEC will cease to be a hasty choice taken for political reasons and it will be wisely debated again in the light of the true interests of the people. This attitude has a great deal to teach Turkey, which has forgotten that this is a matter involving the nation's interests, and hastily took "a resolute decision to join it."

Second, instead of trying to hide the Aegean dispute under the pretence of NATOism, a more frank and open attitude based on the strategy of "protecting national rights" will prevail in Greece. Turkey, which appears to have abandoned its interesting efforts to develop "a new national defense concept" can benefit from such a frank policy and clarify its own defense strategy by realizing which of its interests are truly threatened and where.

Coexistence with a socialist neighbor should at least teach us to forbear certain concepts courageously and to appear honorably before the world without being crushed under their weight. The socialist government in our neighborhood will talk more frequently of the "rights" of its own people, of "justice" in the Aegean, that is a righteous regime, and of "human rights" in Cyprus. This is what socialism will demand.

Then, without deviating from the issues we must meet the challenge with the same concepts of humanism and love of peace, by posing some questions before the eyes of the world more openly and more loudly; if the rights of the people are brought up, are the rights of the people in the Greek mainland and on the Aegean islands any more important and valid than those of the Turkish people living on the coasts of the Aegean and the Mediterranean? Is extending the territorial waters to 12 miles and forcing an entire people to live a shut-up inland life compatible with any form of justice? Can't a just order in the Aegean be an order which makes it possible for all the wealth in the Aegean to be exploited jointly in the interests of both peoples? If the Greek Cypriot people have rights in Cyprus, why should not the Turkish Cypriots enjoy the same rights? Does not equality of rights in Cyprus demand that regardless of numerical position, the communities should be treated according to the principles of equity, allowing them to possess some piece of land on which they can live a decent life?

Coexistence with a socialist neighbor will help us to exercise our mental faculties healthily and courageously on the concepts which it will advance in the light of socialist principles. It will thus be easier to cope with such situations rather than coping with the dark intrigues of a capitalist government in Athens in the backstages of a capitalist world.

FOREIGN MINISTRY 'CIRCLES' QUOTED ON PASOK WIN

NC260839 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 21 Oct 81 pp 1, 13

[Text] Ankara (HURRIYET) -- The Foreign Ministry continued yesterday to refrain from commenting on the victory of socialist PASOK party in the Greek elections. Foreign Ministry circles say that they will wait for the Papandreou government's program and indication of the way it is going to be implemented before any comment is made. In the meantime, they added that they would pursue the same policy which aims at the settlement of the disputes existing between Turkey and Greece. Circles close to the government have stated that there are, in fact, serious issues between Turkey and Greece, that Turkey would insist on the formulas it has put on the negotiating table, that it would never accept the view that the islands in the Aegean Sea constitute a continental shelf and that it would also continue to insist on the demilitarization of the Aegean islands.

The same circles have stressed that the victory of a leftist party in Greece was an internal issue for Greece and added: "Turkey will never accept the militarization of the islands contrary to the treaties and it will not consider Greece's behavior as friendly until these islands are demilitarized. Turkey will not accept the view that islands situated between countries whose coasts face each other can have continental shelves, even though no decision has yet been taken at the International Law of the Sea Conference. Greece will be asked to withdraw the claim that these islands possess continental shelves. The Anatolian peninsula is deemed to constitute an extension in the Aegean sea until it reaches up to 40 miles from Greece. So, the right to exploit the subterranean resources in the Aegean sea belongs to Turkey. We have earlier suggested that we are prepared to share this right with Greece. But the Greeks argued that we have no such right. We, however, insist on our view. As Greece is not an archipelago, it will never be able to extend its territorial waters to 12 miles. We have informed the former Greek Governments of our opposition to this. If necessary, our opposition will be communicated to the Papandreou administration as well.

"With the exception of the skies over the Aegean islands, Turkey also has the right to control the Aegean airspace. We shall insist on the views we have set out before on the subject of the FIR [Flight Information Region] line.

"Turkey will continue to respect the 6-mile territorial waters of the Aegean islands. But as before, it will not accept the argument that the airspace of these islands is 10 miles.

"As before, Turkey will continue to oppose the oppressive measures inflicted on the Western Thrace Turks.

"Turkey will not abandon the view that the Cyprus issue can be resolved through intercommunal negotiations, nor will it abandon its view that a geographically regional, bicommunal, federal state should be set up in Cyprus.

"Turkey will continue to favor a policy which envisages the solution of the issues between Turkey and Greece through peaceful methods."

PARTIES REACT POSITIVELY TO NATO COMMUNIQUE

PM261359 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 22 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] The Hague -- "The Labor Party [PVDA] parliamentary group values the attempts by The Netherlands defense minister [Van Mierlo] to foster understanding among our allies of the current feelings in The Netherlands on the necessity of achieving an actual reduction in nuclear arms." This is the beginning of the PVDA parliamentary group's reaction to the outcome of the NATO defense ministers' meeting in the framework of the nuclear planning group, which took place in Scotland this week.

The PVDA reaction to the NPG communique, like that of the Democrats '66 [D'66], was postive. Both parties point out that a passage reaffirming the December 1979 dual decision (nuclear arms modernization and negotiations with the Warsaw Pact) does not form part of the communique. Both the PVDA and D'66 further attach great importance to the fact that for the first time in a communique from this NATO group the so-called zero option (no new medium-range weapon systems in either bloc) has been mentioned. "An important breakthrough," according to the PVDA. "Noted with satisfaction," according to D'66.

The PVDA parliamentary group further values the fact that the NATO nations' defense ministers this week emphatically rejected efforts to achieve strategic superiority on the part of NATO. The party also said that it was "striking" that the final communique made no mention of agreement with U.S. President Reagan's decision to expand the strategic nuclear arms arsenal. D'66 welcomed the fact that in Scotland Defense Minister Van Mierlo emphasized "the often justified anxieties and worries current within various Netherlander political parties and the peace movement," the party said. "This means that a start has been made on bridging the gap that has arisen between the peace movement on the one side and those who, on the basis of their political mandate, work toward the limitation and reduction of nuclear armaments on the other."

The People's Party for Freedom and Democracy "wants clarity as soon as possible" about Van Mierlo's explanation of the final communique, and states that it is different from the interpretation made by NATO Secretary General Luns. The People's Party for Freedom and Democracy wants the matter to be discussed this month.

REPORT ON ECONOMIC PROBLEMS NEARLY COMPLETE

PM261543 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 23 Oct 81 p 6

[Excerpt] The Hague -- Informateurs De Galan and Halberstadt have practically finished their investigation of the financial problems over which the Van Agt, Den Uyl cabinet stumbled last week. The two professors are at present working on a draft proposal to solve the problems in consultations with the parliamentary group leaders of the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA], the Labor Party [PVDA] and the Democrats '66 [D'66]. The informateurs have begun to look at what further treatment should be given to their repair plan. De Galan and Halberstadt will continue their talks today with Netherlands Bank President Zijlstra, Social Economic Council Chairman De Pous and Central Planning Bureau Director Van der Beld. But the informateurs are in fact knowledgeable with the actual situation in the social-economic field, because they are still in contact with top officials of the ministries of finance, social affairs and economic affairs. On the basis of documents habded over by these ministries De Galan and Halberstadt held detailed talks on Thursday [22 October] with minister Van der Stee (finance) and Den Uyl (social affairs and employment). On the basis of the information they have gained from all these sources the informateurs will draw up their repair plan. PVDA and CDA spokesmen denied that an interim draft of this plan had already been discussed on Thursday evening in the talks with Lubbers, Meijer and Brinkhorst [CDA, PVDA and D'66 parliamentary group leaders]

APEL TO CRITICS: REPUBLIC 'CANNOT AFFORD' PACIFISM

[Text] Ingolstadt, 27 Oct (DPA) — According to Defense Minister Hans Apel, the German armed forces are "magnificently equipped and well-trained." Speaking to 375 generals and admirals at the 25th Bundeswehr commanding officers' meeting in Ingolstadt, Apel objected today to the "predominantly adverse headline" used in public arguments about the Bundeswehr. He called on Moscow to halt its arms drive.

Apel maintained that the Bundeswehr is fulfilling its defense tasks in an "exemplary" manner. The number of soldiers has been increased and the armed forces have been "greatly modernized." Fuel supplies have been secured and no problems are to be expected in training and exercise while the funds for procuring equipment are adequate. The funds earmarked in the 1982 budget will allow the armed forces to fulfill their task "even though there will always be financial hitches." Apel emphatically rejected the argument of those who see in the Bundeswehr a cause of tension and threat of war.

Apel said that it is unjustified and irresponsible to claim that "nothing now works" in defense policy. The Bundeswehr is the only institution in the FRG which is being allocated some 500 new places in order to implement army structure No 4. This will partially alleviate the backlog in employing [verwendungsstau] officers. In the defense budget there are over proportional rises wherever this is particularly "relevant for combat."

Meeting the need for manpower in view of the lower number of available draftees is the problem facing the armed forces in the mid-eighties. But the increase in arms expenditure also dictates the search for solutions which are still within purchasing power.

Apel called on the commanders to use every opportunity to discuss basic problems of the security policy in public and to offer information on this subject. Its real and most important objective is the soldiers' contribution to secure peace. But this task is only credible if the armed forces possess a strike force. Apel pointed out to the critics of a deterrent force that it is necessary to know how to fight so as not to have to fight. The longing and will for peace alone are not enough for a credible security policy. "Individually ethical pacifism, which is highly praiseworthy, or neutralism is not a security policy which the Federal Republic can afford."

In Apel's view, Western unilateral disarmament measures only increase the danger of conflicts of war. Some anti-American voices in the Federal Republic are not representative of the views of the German population, today 56 percent are in favor of closer cooperation with the United States. It is equally certain that the majority of the German public supports the NATO dual decision. The public, which has become more critical on security matters, must be told, and it must be explained that unilateral arms limitation and arms control are not to be had.

Apel stressed that today we have to live with the requirement of our security depending on nuclear weapons. This peace preserving function of nuclear weapons is being denied by the critics of our security policy because it is misunderstood. A major problem is that the role of nuclear weapons as political weapons is only too often not made sufficiently clear to the public. Apel said he hopes that greater confidence among soldiers will result in a greater commitment of the force and thus to better performance in everyday service. There is still room for improving the service atmosphere and comradeship in some places in the Bundeswehr.

GENSCHER ON CANCUN SUMMIT: 'SOME PROGRESS'

DW261333 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0605 GMT 24 Oct 81

["Excerpts" from reporter Wolfgang Hauptmann interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Cancun; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Genscher] We rightly ran the risk and took a chance on the Cancun conference. The fact alone that state and government chiefs from 22 countries assembled here to discuss the significance of the North-South problem is an indication of some progress. [sentence indistinct]

[Question] The Federal Government has played a mediating role, obviously not only with regard to formulations but also to the issues discussed.

[Answer] We wanted to concentrate attention on overcoming food problems with the goal of putting developing countries in position to create their own food production on the basis of their own market; we wanted to point out (?energy problems) and achieve the green light for a global dialogue. [word indistinct]

[Question] Can the developing countries be content with the very complicated compromise formula?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] expressed that they are very content with it. Naturally everybody enters a conference with ideal aims, but also with the knowledge that agreement can only be reached through individual compromises.

[Question] The Americans wanted to stay away. They did not do this and moved toward the formula you suggested. But can't the Americans jump ship later on?

[Answer] I consider it to be absolutely impossible that the Americans intend doing this. You must realize that the new U.S. administration has developed its position over the past months. This is a positive development clearly indicating that the United States -- like other states — will cooperate constructively.

[Question] When can the public expect (?this decision) to be implemented?

[Answer] [words indistinct] there are projects which can be implemented more quickly if we act together. Others will need more time. I did not have the impression that anyone wants to introduce delaying tactics here.

[Question] President Reagan, his secretary of state and his secretary of the treasury were very skeptical about this conference. Do you have the feeling that these politicians were convinced during this conference of the seriousness of he problem?

[Answer] I believe that the significance and [words indistinct] the seriousness of the problem has been fully realized by the U.S. Government. The U.S. President indicated this rather clearly in his opening speech. The new administration probably realized in cooperation with representatives of developing countries that they do not want to pursue an all or nothing policy, but that [words indistinct] industrial countries and developing countries depend on each other while having their own interests.
